On page 5, beginning with line 13, strike out all of section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "To carry out the provisions of this title the Farm Credit Administration through the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation is authorized to issue bonds under the rules and regulations as now prescribed in the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act of January 31, 1934, as amended, not to exceed $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and not to exceed $100,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1939, and June 30, 1940."

AMENDMENT NO. 4

In section 42, page 13, line 42, strike out all of paragraph (a) and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The directors and the secretary-treasurer of the National Farm Loan Association (who are hereinafter called the committee) in each county in which activities are carried on under title 1 shall act in the several counties as the representative of the Farm Credit Administration in making loans under title 1."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE].

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear so much fuss about nothing. If ever a mountain labored and produced a mouse, this bill is it. We have heard a lot of lip service that we are going to make farm tenants farm owners. In the light of that lip service, this bill is a joke and a camouflage.

According to the statements of the gentlemen who preceded me and according to statistics, there are some 16,000,000 people who live on farms as farm tenants, counting members of their families. The total amount that will be appropriated under this bill for 3 years is $85,000,000, or just $5.31 for each of the 16,000,000 persons who live on farms as tenants.

There seems to be some difference as to whether the Department of Agriculture or the Farm Credit Administration should administer this law. I do not think it makes much difference to the tenants which Department administers it. There is this advantage in the Farm Credit Administration. The Farm Credit Administration, unless it changes its present course, would make about 20 tenants by mortgage foreclosures for every tenant that it would turn into a farm owner.

If we are sincere, and if this Congress is not to be accused of insincerity, why do we not go up to the Speaker's desk and sign petition no. 3 to bring up the Frazier-Lemke refinance bill? This bill will take care of any tenant who has operated a farm for 2 years by making him a loan up to $10,000, and, in addition, it will take care of the farmers who still own their farms, all at 1½ percent interest and 1½ percent principal on the amortization plan. It will take care of the farmers and the tenants of this Nation, not by issuing more tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds but by issuing a little more currency, which we ought to do in place of going further into the red.

Now, let us see the necessity of protecting the farmers who still own their farms as well as making tenants farm owners. In the first place, I am going to vote for this bill, because it is a toehold, in spite of the fact that it is camouflage and make-believe legislation. It will at least put the farm tenant in a position where he can ask for more help and keep on reminding this Administration, "You promised to make me a home owner, but you have not yet done so. Please do so now." I am sure future Congresses will have sufficient intelligence and will know enough to realize that the home is the foundation of this Nation and that they will ultimately pass intelligent legislation to save these homes.

Under this bill you have this situation. The Farm Credit Administration has taken 30,000 homes away from the farmers in a little more than 2 years by foreclosures. It has made 30,000 tenants, and under the provisions of this bill you cannot again make farm owners out of more than 8,000 in 3 years of these 30,000. Remember that the Farm Credit Administration is just one of the agencies which has made tenants. Hundreds and thousands of tenants are made each year by others foreclosing mortgages.

Again, the Farm Credit Administration, prior to the time that we guaranteed the interest on the $2,000,000,000 bonds with which it bailed out insurance companies and other mortgagees, handled about 11 percent of the farm mortgages. When we gave them that $2,000,000,000 with which to bail out the insurance companies, it did such a good job saving the insurance companies that now the Farm Credit Administration has 26.4 percent of the farm mortgages of this Nation.

Now that the insurance companies have been taken care of, the Federal land banks refuse to make loans to any farmer who really needs help. The only farmer who can get a loan through the Farm Credit Administration is the farmer who does not need it to save his farm, who can get it elsewhere. It is true, if he can get it from the Farm Credit Administration, he will get it for less interest. In my own State the Farm Credit Administration has withdrawn, and I believe they have withdrawn from other States. In place of eulogizing the Farm Credit Administration, let us get the facts straight. We should know the truth, even though the truth is not just what some would like to have.

Now, let us take a look at the home owners in the cities and towns. Nobody has talked about them. Again, petition no. 4 at the Speaker's desk will save their homes. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation to date has foreclosed on 99,937 homes. Get these figures and then get busy and do something for these home owners.

Let us save the homes of America. I may say that when we voted for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and for the $2,000,000,000 appropriation I knew and every Member of Congress knew that we would lose a lot of money. A home is a nonproductive place, and if the poor man did not have a job at the time he made the loan and has not had a job since, how can you expect him to pay?

Yet I feel the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the $2,000,000,000 was the best investment this Government has ever made. We need more home owners and then there will not be so many sit-down strikes. A person who has a home to protect will not want to destroy anything, and a person who has lost his home is ready to do a little destroying if necessary. Yet in spite of this fact we have foreclosed on 99,937 homes under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Is this all that we are going to do for the home owners?

The number of farms changing ownership per thousand of all farms, by delinquent taxes, is 5.9; foreclosures and bankruptcy sales, 20.3, making a total of 26.2. The total number of farms in the United States, 6,812,350. Average size of the farms, 154 acres. Average value per farm, $4,823.

Applying the ratio of 26.2 per thousand farms lost through indebtedness in the year 1936 to 6,812,350 farms, we find the total number of farms lost through indebtedness in 1936 amounts to 178,483, involving approximately 26,486,382 acres and having a value of approximately $860,645,026, or about one-ninth of the total encumbered farms were lost through mortgage foreclosure and tax sales in 1936. This number is so staggering that we feel it should shock the conscience of every real American.

A few examples of mortgage foreclosures during the years 1935 and 1936

Oregon (estimated)	4,000
Delaware	626
Iowa:
Sept. 1, 1936, to Mar. 1, 1937, farm foreclosures	1,032
Jan. 1, 1932, to Sept. 1, 1936, farm foreclosures	14,487
Maryland (estimated)	3,400
Indiana	9,484
Wyoming	714
Wisconsin:
Farm foreclosures up to May 18, 1937	10,569
City and town foreclosures up to May 18, 1937	10,527
Arizona:
Maricopa County	751
Estimate for entire State	2,500
New Jersey:
Mortgage foreclosures	26,378
Tax foreclosures	4,895
Vermont	679
New Hampshire	753
Minnesota	8,349

In Chicago the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has foreclosed, up to last March, on 5,350 homes.

The time has arrived that this Congress must assume the responsibility of doing something real for agriculture. No amount of lip service, camouflage, and deception will fool the farmer forever. We have reached the point where we import practically 20 percent of our agricultural products and substitutes. The time has come when we must encourage agriculture and not discourage it, that we expand it and not restrict it. We must again make the former farmers, now tenants because of mortgage foreclosures, home owners, otherwise our agricultural market will go to foreign nations.

The following agricultural commodities and substitutes were imported during the month of April 1937:

Animal and animal products (edible)	$10,137,280
Animal and animal products (inedible)	23,975,142
Vegetables, food products, and beverages	80,813,390
Vegetable products (inedible)	39,487,825
Textiles, fibers, and manufactures	47,846,004

Among others these imports consist of:

Cattle	head	56,015
Sheep and goats	do	3,186
Live hogs	pounds	556,931
Meat products	do	18,702,960
Pork	do	1,578,187
Canned beef	do	10,445,667
Hams, shoulders, and bacon	do	3,228,638
Pickled pork	do	427,052
Animal oils and fats	do	3,692,765
Dairy products		$1,480,252
Butter	pounds	1,130,167
Cheese	do	5,364,841
Fish	do	30,642,691

Yet our friends from Massachusetts have asked and received help from the Government to dispose of their fish.

Hides and skins	pounds	33,627,511
Barley	bushels	1,990,676
Corn	do	6,210,612

Also large quantities of rice and wheat.

The best way to accomplish this is for Members of Congress to go to the Speaker's desk and sign petitions nos. 2, 3, and 4. These petitions will bring up legislation that will protect the homes of the farmers and people in cities and towns and will give to the farmers the cost of production. May I ask the Members of Congress to sign these petitions now, because ultimately Congress will have to meet this situation intelligently.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am supporting this bill because it establishes a policy. This country is about 150 years old and this is the first time in the history of the country that an effort has been made by the National Congress to establish a policy for the benefit of the tenant farmers, and I am very pleased to support the legislation.

NOT CURE-ALL

I do not claim that this bill is a cure-all, it merely approaches the problem from one angle. To my mind it can be approached in a more substantial and effective way from a different angle. This bill merely gives the tenant farmer who receives such a loan an opportunity to get a start. In order for this new home owner, the former tenant, to be successful, he must receive a fair price for what he produces.

PRICE MAIN THING

There are several factors which must be considered in connection with the farm problem. The real cause of farm tenancy is the extremely low prices which farmers have been forced to accept. They have been forced to sell at the world's price in competition with the cheapest labor in the world, and have been forced to buy in the protected market and pay a high price. It is my belief that the time has come when it is the Government's duty to force higher prices for farm products. Farmers should receive at least 20 cents a pound for cotton and a dollar a bushel for corn, with other prices in proportion. If they were to receive such prices, I doubt that it would be necessary for the Government to assist them in purchasing homes, as they would doubtless be able to borrow money locally at a reasonable rate of interest and purchase a home of their own choice without the necessity of troubling the Government in any way. With a good price, the farmers do not need much help; without a good price it is doubtful that they can pay for any kind of a home on any kind of terms which may be furnished by the Government. No class in America works as hard and gets as little for it as the farmers.

PROBLEM ALSO APPROACHED FROM ANOTHER ANGLE

While we are endeavoring to assist the tenant farmer in owning a home, we are not stopping there; other legislation has been enacted and new legislation is being proposed, having for its purpose better prices for the farmers, so the problem is really being approached from both angles, the angle of easier money for home ownership, easier from the standpoint of long-term money with low interest rates to make home ownership possible, and from the standpoint of better prices, which will enable the new home owners to pay for their homes and enjoy economic security.

IF FARMERS ARE PROSPEROUS, COUNTRY IS PROSPEROUS

Ever since I have been in Congress I have insisted that we must give the farmers a fair price or the problem could not be solved. Price is the main thing. There are 36,000,000 people in this Nation who are dependent upon farming for a living. This number includes the farm owners, tenants, sharecroppers, their wives and children, and the hired hands and their wives and children. If these 36,000,000 people receive a fair price, they have money to buy what other people produce in other sections of the country as well as their own. They can buy what other classes and groups have manufactured and are desirous of selling. The farmers represent enough of the American market to cause this country to be prosperous if they are prosperous, and to cause it to suffer if they suffer. In every speech that I have made in this Nation—to business groups and members of different organizations—I have brought out the point that other classes and groups must realize that the farmers must be made prosperous before they themselves can be assured of remaining prosperous. This was done to cultivate sentiment in favor of the farmer. Other classes and groups are dependent upon the farmers and they must be made to realize it.

FARMERS NOT SUFFICIENTLY HELPED

Although much has been done during the past 4 years in the direction of helping the farmer by a better price, and in other ways, we have not done enough. The kind of help the farmer needs the most is protection from greedy interests, equality of opportunity, and a fair price, all of which are in the public interest. After the hand of greed and special privilege is taken from the farmer's throat he will have an opportunity to better work and earn a living for himself and family. Then, with a fair price, the farmers will be helped and the Nation will be helped. It is one of the first duties of government to protect the weak against the strong. If other classes, interests, and groups were not assisted and there were no monopolies or trusts, there would be little or no demand for farm relief.

TWENTY-FOUR TO FORTY PERCENT INTEREST

When I was a tenant farmer it was the custom in the community where I lived for farmers to pay 10 percent interest for a whole year, although they used the money borrowed for a short time. Those who extended the loans did not become rich making them, as such loans were very risky, and losses tremendous. Misfortunes overtook many, and they could not pay. Nevertheless, farmers contracted to pay in many instances from 24 to 40 percent interest. The 2 years that I was a tenant farmer I paid 24 percent interest myself. Since I have been a Member of Congress it has been my pleasure to assist in the formation of governmental agencies that have forced down the rate of interest. Feed and seed loans are an example. The farmer, through this organization, pays about $2 for the use of $100 during the crop season instead of $10 as under the old system. The production credit associations have assisted materially in reducing interest rates. The Federal land banks, assisted by the Farm Credit Administration which was created by this administration, during the past few years have permitted the farmer borrowers to enjoy the lowest rate of interest that the farmers of any nation in the world have ever enjoyed in the history of the world; interest rates must continue low. All these things are great accomplishments, but, after all, the farmer can pay a good rate of interest if he gets a fair price, and he cannot pay even a low rate of interest if he does not get a good price, so price is more important to the farmer than anything else.

ELECTRIFYING THE FARM

Rural electrification is being encouraged by this administration. The program has expanded rapidly in certain areas where low-priced electricity is available. Over a long period the farmers are going to be helped tremendously in this way. Electricity is one of the greatest blessings of mankind; low-priced electricity will remove much of the drudgery from the farm and will especially take many of the back-breaking duties from the housewife. The Denison Dam will, in all probability, be constructed on Red River near Denison, Tex. When it is completed, low-priced electricity will be available to all the farmers in the district that I have the honor to represent. This is interesting information and looks good for the future, but at the present time our farmers need a good price—not an unreasonable price—they are not asking for that; just enough to allow them to make a decent living, educate their children, provide comforts and conveniences for themselves and their families, and fair assurance of an opportunity to enjoy economic security in the future.

LOANS NOT AS IMPORTANT AS PRICE

Cotton is the principal money crop in the district I represent. When the farmer picks his cotton, he carries it to a gin to have the lint separated from the seed, and to have the cotton baled in order that he may sell it. The cotton gin usually charges a fair price for ginning and baling the cotton. If all the cotton gins were in distress and needed help, we could not cure their problem by extending loans over long terms at a low rate of interest. It would be necessary to give them a better price for ginning in order to entirely solve their problem; the loan would be helpful, but without a sufficient price for ginning they could not pay the loan or the interest. With a good price they probably would not need the loan and could pay a better rate of interest. The farmers are in the same situation; although the loans at a low rate will be helpful they will not solve their problem. The ginners with few exceptions receive a fair price and for that reason there is no demand from them for help, and if there were such a demand I am sure that it would be a demand for better prices for ginning instead of loans at low rates of interest.

RAILROADS RECEIVE HIGH RATES FOR TRANSPORTING FARMERS' PRODUCTS

When the farmer sells his cotton, the cost of transporting it to the markets of the world is taken into consideration in the price that the farmer receives. In other words, the transportation companies, including railroads, steamships, barges, and trucks must have a fair price for transporting the cotton. When the railroads need help, when they are not making a fair return, it is not loans providing a low rate of interest that they clamor for but it is higher freight rates. If the railroads receive freight rates sufficiently high, they can obtain their own loans, and are able to pay the interest rate required, but if they do not receive a fair rate it will be difficult for them to pay back any kind of a loan providing no interest rate at all.

OTHERS HANDLING FARMERS' PRODUCTS RECEIVE FAIR PRICE

Many farmers produce perishables for the market. They are compelled to pay not only a fair return to the telegraph and telephone companies, whose facilities they must use in order to find a market at the best price for their products, but they must also pay a fair return to the railroad company for transporting such products. The Government, through its different agencies, and through the Federal courts of this country compels the people to pay a fair price for services to telephone, telegraph, and railroad companies. Any electric light company, water company, telephone company, or gas company can go into any Federal court in this Nation and obtain an order that will force the people to pay a fair price for their services to guarantee them a fair return.

FARMERS PROVIDE PROFIT TO OTHERS

Since the Government has been so kind to such corporations, it occurs to me that it is time for our Government to make sure that the original producers of our Nation receive a fair price. They should not be compelled to destroy themselves by hard labor and receive nothing for it in order merely to provide business and profit for those who handle what they produce.

WAGE EARNERS' PROBLEM NOT SOLVED BY LOANS

The one who works and produces on the farm, on the ranch, in the orchard, or in the dairy makes a real contribution toward the success and prosperity of our entire Nation. The raw materials usually must be processed or manufactured in some way and, in practically all cases, must be transported and distributed.

There are about 40,000,000 people, including families, dependent upon wage earning for a livelihood. Much has been done in the direction of giving these wage earners a fair wage. It is right that they should receive a fair wage. By receiving fair wages they have purchasing power which they can use to pay the farmers, original producers, and other classes and groups fair prices. At the same time our Government has done so much in the direction of forcing higher wages, I am not convinced that the same efforts have been put forth to give the farmers and other producers a fair price. When wage earners need help, it is not long-term loans providing for a low rate of interest that they want; it is better wages. With good wages they can usually obtain their own loans locally and pay the rate of interest required. With insufficient wages it would be difficult for them to pay any kind of a loan providing for any kind of interest or no interest. The way to help the wage earners is to give them fair and sufficient wages. The best way to help the farmers, including tenants, is to give them fair prices. Practically all other problems will disappear with fair prices and fair wages.

FIXED PRICES FOR OTHERS, BUT NOT FOR FARMERS

Distributors of finished products receive, with exceptions of course, a fair price for distributing the products to the ultimate consumer. The consumer is required to pay the set and fixed prices exacted by the railroad, telegraph, telephone, electric, gas, and water companies which enter into the price of the finished article, and to pay distribution costs which in many cases are fixed and in other cases competitive, and such price as the original producer is permitted to receive. If the retailers and other distributors in our country were complaining because they were not making enough money and were demanding relief from the Government, they would not want long-time loans with low rates of interest without also receiving assistance in the form of better returns for their services. While long-term loans with low interest rates are always desirable, fair prices and fair wages are more desirable.

SELLS IN WORLD MARKET, BUYS IN PROTECTED MARKET

In addition to all these fixed and set charges, the farmer sells his produce in competition with the produce grown in other countries with cheap coolie and peon labor in the markets of the world at the world price. When the farmer buys finished products, he pays an increased price by reason of the tariff. Selling in a world market and buying in a protected market is very detrimental to farmers' interest.

FARMERS RECEIVE 5 CENTS AND 10 CENTS AN HOUR

The farmer is the steel manufacturer's best customer. The Government has assisted in the formulation of policies that recently increased wages to workmen in the steel mills. By reason of this increase in wages steel was increased in price $6 a ton. The Government also has a tariff on the importation of steel, which permits the steel companies to profit by a higher price. In this case the Government has forced a higher and fixed price on one of the principal commodities needed by the farmer by causing increased fixed wages and providing a tariff duty on steel. Therefore the Government should either assist the farmer in receiving a fair price or fixed prices and fixed wages for others through the help of the Government should be abandoned; monopolies, trusts, and price-fixing eliminated; and the farmer privileged to benefit through competition caused thereby. If it were possible to repeal all laws and abandon all policies, which give special privileges, fixed prices, and special benefits and prevent all monopolies and trusts, possibly that would be a better approach to the problem than the Government assisting the farmers with a higher price, but we know that is not probable. So, the easiest approach to the problem is to assist the farmer in obtaining a fair price in order that he may be placed on a parity with industry.

Workers in certain lines of work are receiving as much as $20 a day or $2 an hour. Wage earners generally are receiving from 70 cents to $2 an hour. Contrast this with 10 cents an hour on the farm and I believe that a substantial number of our farm hired hands and small farmers, if the work of their wives and children is considered, do not make 5 cents an hour, and with that 5 cents an hour they must clothe and feed themselves and families. This is a shame. It is a disgrace. It should be corrected immediately.

FARM HOME OWNERSHIP DESIRABLE

This bill, providing long terms at a low rate of interest, will be helpful to many worthy and deserving tenant farmers. For that reason I am supporting it, but it is not a solution of the farmers' problems. The increase in farm tenancy is alarming, and we cannot solve it by loans and interest rates alone. Ownership makes better citizenship. We must do everything in our power to afford every American citizen an opportunity to own a home. To grant him a loan at a low-interest rate is one way to start, but he cannot remain a home owner unless he receives a fair price. With home ownership waste is discouraged and the soil is conserved, and the Nation is thereby helped. If farmers receive a fair price, loan agencies all over this Nation will quickly clamor for the opportunity of extending loans to the farmers for all purposes that they need loans.

PRICE FIXING FOR FARMERS

During more than 8 years that I have served in Congress I have worked unceasingly in behalf of a program that will permit a farm family which is farming for a livelihood to receive a sufficient price to permit a fair minimum income. I believe that the price of cotton should be fixed at least 20 cents a pound, wheat at least $1.50 a bushel, and corn at a dollar, and other commodities in proportion, to the farmers who are working on a farm and are dependent upon a farm for a livelihood, in order to enable them to earn a minimum of a thousand dollars a year at these prices. If it is right for the Government to force fair minimum wages for the workers, it is also right, and equally right, that a fair minimum annual return be allowed a farmer if he actually produces a sufficient amount at a fair price to earn it.

For instance, if a farmer produced 10 bales of cotton, 500 pounds to a bale, at 20 cents a pound, he would receive a thousand dollars. Regardless of the price of cotton, the Government would protect him to that amount. If he only produced 1 bale, he would receive 20 cents a pound, or $100, and no more. The same plan could be used for other products. There would be no protection above that amount, and there would be no protection to one who was growing cotton for speculation or for profit only, and who was not actually engaged in working on the farm, unless he profited as a farm owner. Under this plan there would be a demand for tenants, as the landlords would get better rent. Those who wanted to sell land would have plenty of buyers whose credit would be good. During this time I have appeared before congressional committees advocating this proposal. I have visited officials of our Government on numerous occasions and discussed this program at length. I have worked with national and local farm leaders who had the interest of the farmer at heart. The only dinner that I know of that was ever given for the farmers of this country in their name and for their benefit in the Capitol of the United States I gave about 2 months ago to the members of the Committee on Agriculture in the House, agricultural leaders who were in Washington, and to officials of the Department of Agriculture, for the sole and only purpose of having an opportunity to discuss with all of them at the same time the seriousness of the farm problem, and the absolute necessity of permitting every farm family to receive a fair price for what is produced up to a fair annual income, which should certainly not be less than $1,000. I have insisted upon a family allotment. At these meetings and conferences much encouragement has been received, and I believe that we are making headway, but our gains have been slow. Oftentimes it has appeared discouraging. The fight will continue, so far as I am concerned, until the farmer gets a square deal. I cannot understand the reasoning of a person who insists that every corporation and individual that handles what the farmer produces or has anything to do with what he produces should receive protection from the Government to the extent of minimum wages, maximum hours, fair rates of interest, and guaranteed profits, but who is not in favor of providing for a minimum annual income for a farm family where that farm family actually produces a sufficient amount to justify it if fair and decent prices are paid.

CONSIDERATION DIFFICULT TO GET

A Member of Congress, in order to be effective in the advocacy of any proposal that he believes will be helpful, must spend considerable time and effort building up sentiment in favor of the proposal before there is a committee hearing and before it reaches the floor of the House or Senate in the form of a bill. With 15,000 bills usually pending in Congress, it is a difficult matter to get consideration of any one proposal.

Last month, in order to get the attention of a large number of Members of Congress on farm legislation and issues helpful to the farmer, I sponsored a boat trip on the Potomac River. The trip lasted all day and on a boat, we were away from everything that would be calculated to disturb us. Attending the meeting on the boat there were more than 100 Members of the House of Representatives and the United States Senate; all except one of the southern commissioners of agriculture; officials of the Department of Agriculture; high officials of the W. P. A.; other such recognized farm leaders as the Honorable Lawrence Westbrook, of Texas, and such unselfish citizens who have demonstrated their interest in the farmer as ex-United States Senator Robert L. Owen, of Oklahoma, framer of the Federal Reserve Act; the Honorable Robert Hemphill, financial writer for magazines and daily newspapers, and for 25 years credit manager of the Federal Reserve bank at Atlanta, Ga.; Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University; and another one of the finest characters I have ever known, Mr. Dale Carnegie, who is the author of America's best book seller, How to Win Friends and Influence People. We spent the entire day with short talks and discussions. In this way the importance of the farmers' problem and the extreme necessity for it to be solved at an early date in order to help the entire country was emphasized. The money question, as it relates to the farmers' welfare, was especially discussed. The following resolution, which is self-explanatory, was later forwarded to me:

Meeting at Washington, D. C., June 6–8, 1937.
Presiding: Harry D. Wilson, Commissioner of Agriculture, Baton Rouge, La.

"Whereas Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, has rendered great and valuable service in giving our people monetary relief through his patriotic efforts to restore to the Congress their constitutional right to coin and regulate the value of money:

"Be it resolved, That the southern commissioners of agriculture in behalf of the southern farmers and agriculture express our sincere and deep appreciation for this service rendered by Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN.

"Be it further resolved, That the secretary be authorized to deliver a copy of this resolution to Congressman PATMAN."

I hereby certify that this is a true copy of the resolution passed by the Association of Southern Commissioners of Agriculture at a meeting held in Washington, D. C., June 8, 1937.

C. C. HANSON, Secretary.

In order for the farmer to get the protection he is entitled to receive, Members of Congress and the people generally must be sold on the fact that his cause is just and that the entire Nation will be benefited by helping the farmer.

With public sentiment for the farmers they will be successful in their fight, but without public sentiment success is improbable.

LANDLORDS

The tenants are not the only farmers who are in need of price protection. There is another class of farmers that has suffered greatly, and especially during the depression.

That is the class that owns their land or that holds title to their land although they owe for it. During the worst years of the depression, the landlords were required to pay taxes and pay interest on the debt, make principal payments, to keep up the fences, the houses, and make other necessary improvements. The tenants, although they suffered along with the landlords by reason of the low prices, they were privileged to occupy the houses of the landlords and use their improvements, and if a crop was made, the tenant received his share, but if it was not made, the tenant did not lose anything on the land, buildings, or improvements, and was not compelled to pay interest or taxes.

FARMER'S CREDIT NOT GOOD WITHOUT PRICE ASSURANCE

If the Government will adopt a policy of allowing a fair price for a sufficient amount of farm products to each farm family to allow that farm family to earn a thousand dollars a year at a fair price, which will entitle them to it, then the landlord will be benefited not only as an owner but by higher rent, and if the landlord desires to sell a part of his land, the tenant will be in a position to buy it. If the tenant knows what he is going to receive if he works and earns it, his credit, according to his standing in the community, will become valuable. If the farmer's credit is restored, landlords will be wanting tenants, and farm owners will be wanting to sell land to them. As long, however, as the farmer has no assurance of what he is going to receive, his credit will not be good, his earning power very limited as it is now, landlords will prefer machinery to tenants, and the tenants cannot buy and pay for farm homes.

WORK AND KNOWLEDGE REQUIRED OF FARMERS

In order for one to operate a farm he must be a hard worker. He must get up early in the morning and work until late at night. The hardest kind of manual labor is involved. He must keep up with the weather and have a fair knowledge of soil, fertilizer, germination of seeds, cultivation of crops, extermination of the many different kinds of pests and insects, and proper handling and marketing of the matured production. This requires considerable knowledge as well as work. It is my belief that workers in industry, who receive a dollar an hour and more, are not required to have the knowledge and information that farmers are required to possess, and they are not required to do anything like the hard work that farmers are required to do. A farmer can work hard all the year, and a few minutes' hail, or a flood, or a few weeks' drought will destroy all of his labor. The death of livestock, or illness in his family, or any one of many other misfortunes may take everything that he makes during the whole year. No class or group works so hard, must possess so much information and knowledge, must run so many risks and receive so little for it, with no assurance of any income whatsoever, as the farmers of this country. Yet they feed and clothe the world. Without them the health, happiness, and prosperity of all the other people in the Nation would be endangered if not destroyed. Our Government has helped practically every other class, group, interest, or business, but to that great class or group to whom we are so greatly indebted as a Nation and who has been thereby placed at a disadvantage, so little has been done.

TAXES AND INTEREST

Lower taxes will help the farmer; so has lower interest rates helped the farmer. But a fair price will help him more than anything. If he did not have to pay interest at all or any taxes at all, if he does not receive a better price than he has in the past, he would not be earning a livelihood. If all of the farmers in this Nation used the cost-accounting methods that industry uses, I doubt that a half dozen farms in America would make a net profit, and all the farms combined would have a several hundred million dollar loss each year.

PRESENT ADMINISTRATION HELPED

In connection with what this administration has done to help the farmer, it is interesting to note that in 1932 it required two bales of cotton for a farmer to pay the interest on a thousand-dollar loan, whereas in 1936 it required only one-half bale to pay the interest on a thousand-dollar loan. It required 160 bushels of corn to pay the interest on a thousand-dollar loan in 1932, but only 40 bushels in 1936; it required 140 bushels of wheat in 1932, but only 50 bushels of wheat in 1936; it required a 1,200-pound beef to pay the interest in 1932, but only a 600-pound beef would pay the same interest in 1936. This administration has helped the farmer substantially, and is now sponsoring other measures calculated to be of great and lasting benefit to all farmers, tenants, and farm owners.

SURPLUS

Much has been said about the surplus cotton and surplus farm products. I am not so sure about other products, but I am reasonably certain that if all of the people in America could buy the cotton products that are needed and that could be used for desirable and not wasteful purposes, we would not have a cotton surplus. I recall that when every third row of cotton was plowed up, Negroes were seen clad only in a jute rag, which was wrapped around them, plowing up this cotton. Jute is produced in India and not in America.

PROUD PEOPLE ON FARM

People who live on the farm are proud people. They have pride; they take interest in the building and the development of the home, the church, and the school. Half of the people in this Nation would be in tears if they only knew how hard the farmers and their families work and how little they can possibly accomplish in proportion to their efforts. Home-demonstration agents and county agents are very helpful. They have assisted the farmers in many ways, and their wives are assisted in the preservation and canning of fruits, vegetables, and meats necessary and desirable for home consumption. These savings are very beneficial; but, after all, the farmers need more than something to eat; they need other comforts the same as other people. They want to educate their children; they want to enjoy conveniences that other people enjoy. They are entitled to these privileges and benefits and they are possible only with a fair price for what they produce. I have visited the homes of some of the poorest tenant farmers. I will describe one that I visited.

The floor of the house was as clean as it could be kept; there were beautiful flowers in the yard; the house was tidy and just as nice as it was possible to make it. No electricity, no gas for fuel, no running water. It was evidently a cold place in the winter and a hot place in the summer. Although the furniture was crude and old, and there were no rugs on the floor, no tablecloths on the table, and no towels except what they had made from sacks in which they bought things from the stores and used in making towels, it was a real home, like one of the thousands of such homes where some of the best people in the Nation reside; and from such humble homes some of our greatest men and women were born and reared. Too much cannot be said in praise of the good, enterprising farm wife who accomplished wonders under such adverse circumstances. It seems a shame to me that these people who work so hard and grow cotton are not permitted to actually buy a sufficient amount of the products that are made from cotton to furnish them with the simple comforts of life. This, to my mind, is partly caused by a fallacious monetary system. If it is corrected, the farmers will get a better price. Money is a vehicle which is just as necessary to transport goods to consumers as boxcars. If the amount of money, including bank deposits, is increased, everything the farmers produce is increased in proportion. If money becomes dear, everything else becomes cheap. I will not discuss the money question further than to say that much can be done in the direction of helping the farmers by giving them a better price by perfecting the monetary system.

CONCLUSION

I submit the following for consideration:

First. The Government should, if necessary, arbitrarily fix the prices of the basic farm commodities at a price that will allow a farm family to earn a decent living if they produce a sufficient quantity of such products at such fair price to justify it.

Second. Taxes and interest should be made just as low on the farmers as possible until at least they are in a position to enjoy economic security by reason of good prices and on a parity with industry.

Third. Good prices and good wages are both necessary and desirable, since it is only through good prices and good wages that the American people pay their debts. If wages and prices are reduced 50 percent, the debt and tax burden of the people, in what they have to pay with, will be increased 100 percent, and vice versa.

Fourth. The 12 Federal Reserve banks should be owned by the Government and operated in the interest of all the people, banks, industry, and commerce instead of being owned by private banking corporations as at present.

Fifth. So many tax-exempt interest-bearing bonds have been issued that the rich are becoming richer and the poor are becoming poorer. The poor people of the Nation are being compelled to pay taxes upon what they owe and upon what they consume to support the different governments from local to Federal. No more interest-bearing tax-exempt bonds should be issued.

Sixth. We must place a noose where there is now a loophole in our tax laws. It appears that corporations are entitled to more rights than citizens, since citizens are incorporating to escape taxes. It appears that foreign corporations are entitled to more rights than even an American citizen or American corporation, since foreign corporations are being used to escape taxes. Holding companies are unnecessary. They do not serve a useful or constructive purpose. They are merely used to avoid taxes, shirk responsibility, and mislead the investing public, and they should be abolished.

Seventh. It is idiotic and imbecillic for the Government to pay interest on its own credit. If this is corrected, the Government will save almost a billion dollars a year, and it can be corrected if the Government should purchase the stock and own and operate the 12 Federal Reserve banks.

Eighth. Monopolies and trusts should be broken up. The Department of Justice has recently commenced action to dissolve the Aluminum Trust. A judge, appointed by President Harding, evidently approved by the "Ohio gang" and admittedly had the endorsement of Andrew W. Mellon, has granted an injunction restraining our United States Attorney General, something that never happened before in this country, from bringing any suit against Mellon and the Aluminum Co., except in his court to be presided over by himself. Mr. Robert H. Jackson, Assistant to the Attorney General of the United States, says that a judicial monopoly is sought, as well as the aluminum monopoly.

Ninth. Independent business, locally owned and owner operated, should be encouraged instead of absentee ownership. The boys and girls of the future should not be denied an opportunity because they do not have sufficient acquaintance or pull with some New York banker, who owns or controls the local business. The Department of Agriculture has recently had to go into the market with Government funds and buy potatoes because a few large national concerns handling potatoes had so depressed the market that the farmers were being robbed. Corporations should not have so much power, as they will certainly abuse it; other similar instances could be cited.

FIGHT WILL CONTINUE

My family has been attached to the soil of America for more than 300 years. John Patman, my ancestor, came from England on the ship Peter Bonaventure, landed near Jamestown, Va., in 1635. Ever since that time our family has owned and worked on land. Therefore, by reason of having been a farmer myself, my father was a farmer, my grandfather was a farmer, and my family for more than 300 years having been attached to the soil of this great country, I have inherited a loyalty and affection for the farm and the problems of the farmer. I am hoping that I can make a substantial contribution toward solving the major problems of the farmer. If I can assist in giving to that great class of public-spirited, patriotic people, the farmers, who help to build and sustain our country in time of peace and who help to save our country in time of war, that measure of justice they should receive from a grateful Government, I shall feel that my service in Congress has not been in vain. My efforts in that direction will continue.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the committee has brought in a conference report indicating an agreeemnt upon a figure which is $2,050,000 above what the bill was when it passed the House, and about $59,100,000 more than it was when it passed the Senate. I have been over the matters in difference as to amounts, and roughly, as far as I have been able to determine, the low figure of either House was agreed to 5 times out of 44 times, and the high figure or one in between, 39 times out of 44 times. Frankly, I must say, if we are going to economize, we must get more of economy than this report indicates.

M. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's suggestion, this bill is more than $3,000,000 below the Budget estimate. The Senate made a formal cut of $60,000,000 in the soil conservation and domestic allotment item, but the Government has made a proposition to the farmers of the Nation, and after the farmers have accepted the proposal and carried out their part of the agreement, the United States Government must redeem its pledge and provide money to pay the farmer the amount to which he is entitled under the law of contracts.

Eliminating this amendment the bill is $1,880 below the Senate bill and is an economical bill notwithstanding the fact that it provides in a large measure items which are not purely agricultural in nature. For example, the difference between the Budget estimate this year and the amount of the bill last year is $140,000, and out of that amount $110,000 is for highways, a matter which is of interest to the country generally and in no sense a purely agricultural appropriation.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Is it not a fact that this bill is the biggest bill for the Agricultural Department that has ever been enacted in the history of the country?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Not when you eliminate the items not directly chargeable to agriculture. And such increases as have been made are in response to the mandate of Congress as expressed in legislation which this House has enacted in the last 2 years. Practically every addition to this bill and every increase in the amounts it carries have been made in response to legislation passed by the Congress since the last bill was adopted.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas, the ranking minority member on the subcommittee.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is not every agricultural bill and every bill this year of every subcommittee larger than any preceding one ever was, except possibly the legislative bill? I see representatives of the other subcommittees in the Chamber and I see the gentleman from North Carolina rising.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I thought it had been stated so many times that it was now known by all Members of the House that the naval appropriation bill was not only under the amount appropriated last year, but was $37,000,000 below the Budget estimate. I therefore do not understand why it is that my good friend from Kansas, and many others in the House, still insist that there was no reduction in the naval appropriation bill. The record should be correctly stated.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM].

Mr. THOM. Mr. Speaker, this appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture contains an allocation of $3,000,000 to continue the purchase of land for forest reserves. Those purchases are made under the auspices of the National Forest Reservation Commission. A program has been laid out under which new national forests are to be established in a number of the Middle and Southern States which heretofore have never had such benefits.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOM. I yield.

Mr. BIERMANN. Do those national forests include the forest in southern Iowa?

Mr. THOM. Yes.

Mr. BIERMANN. We will actually get that, then, will we?

Mr. THOM. I am coming to that.

About a year or two ago the National Forest Reservation Commission set up a rule that no further purchases should be made in any units that have been located unless there have been already 20 percent of the lands in those respective units purchased.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOM. I prefer to wait until I state the proposition and then I will yield to the gentleman.

Now, the effect of that rule as set up by the National Forest Reservation Commission was simply this, that in many of the various forest units progress has stopped. In many of those units that have been located, options have been secured on behalf of the National Forest Reservation Commission, and it was naturally expected that land would be duly purchased under those options. Then came this rule of the National Forest Reservation Commission which stopped all purchases unless 20 percent of the unit had already been procured and the title was in the name of the United States Government.

This bill contains this provision:

> That $1,000,000 of the $3,000,000 appropriated shall be available only for purchase of lands in purchase units where as much as 20 percent of the lands within such purchase units have not heretofore been acquired.

In other words, the rule of the National Forest Reservation Commission was to be lifted so far as $1,000,000 of the appropriation in this bill is concerned. I reluctantly agreed in conference that this provision should go out, so that we have for the next year the same provision standing, that no purchase shall be made in any unit unless 20 percent heretofore has been acquired.

Now, the point I want to make is this: Representatives of Iowa, Indiana, Missouri, and Ohio—I think nine States in all—are dissatisfied and feel that they have been discriminated against for the reason that their forest units are not being added to, and the work on them has practically stopped.

Without any further discussion, this is just a subtle hint to the National Forest Reservation Commission that if something is not done about this 20-percent rule, in the next session of the House of Representatives they are going to find Representatives from such States as Iowa, Missouri, and Ohio opposing any further purchase of land for forest purposes. That is the situation in a nutshell. I simply want it in the RECORD so that the National Forest Reservation Commission will be forewarned when this appropriation bill comes up next year.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOM. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Ohio yielding to me and I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but since the gentleman has given a gentle hint to the National Forest Reservation Commission, of which I am proud to be a member—and the membership of that Commission is composed of three Cabinet members, two Senators, and two Members of the House—I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOM] if he thinks that Commission, with a measly sum of $3,000,000 can do anything worth while toward the acquisition of any forest lands, whether it is in those units where there has been 20 percent or less of the land purchased, or anywhere else. For the information of the gentleman, I want to tell him that the National Forest Reservation Commission adopted this policy of not purchasing any lands in units established where the purchase had not been 20 percent or more of the total number of acres supposed to be purchased; but it was not because of any desire on the part of the Commission. It was purely for the reason that we had no money with which to function. We have something like 60 forest units in the United States, throughout the various States in the Union, where they have a set-up that is going, and a great percentage of the acreage in the units have been purchased, because the States have complied and cooperated in many ways, and they began back under the Clarke-McNary Act.

States like Ohio, Iowa, Indiana, Missouri, and those other States mentioned, have just come into the picture because they have just become forest-minded with reference to the solicitation of Federal aid, and have passed State laws whereby they could come in. We do not have the money to develop these units, although we have established these units. We desired to go into those States and establish and develop national-forest units. We established them and did take some options. But our money ran out and we just had to do the best we could. I am one member of that Commission. The distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] is also a member; Senator GEORGE, of Georgia, and Senator BRIDGES, of New Hampshire, are members. The Secretary of War is chairman, and the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Interior are members. Our Commission has no desire to adopt just any kind of a policy, but on account of lack of funds we had to determine how best to spend our limited funds. I ask the gentlemen who are interested, and the distinguished member of the Committee on Appropriations if he thinks that $3,000,000 could do anything toward satisfying those States, like Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, and the other States, which would in any way comply with the request or the gentle hint that the gentleman has given?

If this Congress will appropriate the money, our Commission will spend it, and I may say we will get value for what we spend. The record of our Commission speaks for itself and I know, and I feel you gentlemen know, that what money we have spent has been spent well and wisely. We have made our money go as far as possible. The work of the Forest Service and of the National Forest Reservation Commission in my judgment is outstanding. If the money is provided by Congress, we can purchase land in these units. If we do not have the money, we can give little relief to our interested friends, whom we would like to help if we had the money.

I do not know whether the Commission is going to lift this policy or not, but I do know that $3,000,000 is not going to be a drop in the bucket toward acquiring additional land in any of the eighty-some-odd forest units in the United States. Nobody wants to cooperate more than I, but it is a question of money available and not desire. May I, in my turn, hint to Congress that the National Forest Commission cannot buy lands if they do not have money. If $3,000,000 is all the money we are to have, we shall use discretion and our best judgment and make it go as far as we can. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. THOM. I hope that the National Forest Commission puts into effect—and it has the power to—this provision eliminated from the bill now permitting $1,000,000 to be used in those sections where there have not been purchased lands aggregating 20 percent of the unit proposed.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOM. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I would remind the gentleman from Ohio that the same situation that he states obtains in Ohio obtains likewise in other sections of the country, especially in the State of Mississippi and that part of the State wherein my district lies. I believe that the remedy is not so much the giving of direction to the Commission as it is the giving to them of additional appropriations to purchase new land.

Mr. THOM. It ought to be divided equitably between the States.

Mr. DOXEY. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio if he thinks that even if all of this $1,000,000 were used in the way he suggests—and I do not know whether it will be so used or not—would it aid in any way to substantially relieve the condition that now exists in Ohio and Iowa and some other States?

Mr. THOM. It would to the extent of $1,000,000.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, with the disposition of this conference report we shall have made material progress in the enactment of the supply bills for the coming fiscal year. When the House adjourned last week there were still six bills undisposed of—the Agricultural bill, the District bill, the relief bill, the two War bills, and the Interior bill. We have just agreed to the conference report on the District of Columbia appropriation bill. The conference report on the relief bill will be ready for report to the House this afternoon. And with the disposition of this conference report, only the War Department bills and the Interior Department appropriation bill remain. The conferees on the War Department bill are in session at this time and hope to reach an agreement before they adjourn tonight. The Interior Department bill is in the Senate, and we hope to be able to send it to conference not later than tomorrow; so, barring unforeseen delay, we expect to be able to secure enactment of the supply bills before the end of the fiscal year, day after tomorrow.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we are fast reaching a critical situation in the purchase of timberland. We are fast reaching the point where we must put a stop to this competition between the States to sell land to the Government and then have the Government build roads through it and clean it up. Unless we call a halt to this program it is going to prove to be an endless outlet for Government expenditure. I think it is creating an alarming situation and that Congress must meet the situation and stop the purchase of forest land before it gets too wildly extravagant.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, that is a matter of opinion. The committee has been severely criticized, for instance, because it failed to report out the full authorization of $14,000,000 for the acquisition of land, which passed the House last session. The appropriation carried in this bill for the acquisition of lands, generally, is the minimum and is relatively unimportant in comparison with the real agricultural issues the gentleman might have discussed this afternoon. Mr. Speaker, agriculture was the first to suffer when prices dropped in 1920 and the last to recover. Even under the Agricultural Adjustment Act recovery was disproportionate and farm prices lagged far behind industrial prices and union wage scales. When this session convened no pledge to the country was more emphasized than the pledge to stabilize agricultural prices and give the farmer his fair share of the natural income.

The need for legislation was intensified by the decision of the Supreme Court nullifying the A. A. A. and by legislation which has widened the disparity between agriculture on one hand and labor and industry on the other. Laws have been enacted by this Congress artificially increasing the farmer's cost of living and raising the price of practically every item entering into his cost of production. Up to this time the relief Congress was pledged to provide has not materialized. Now that harvest is approaching wheat has dropped approximately 30 cents per bushel. For the last 2 months the price of hogs and cattle has been going down while the price of beef and pork has been going up. The farmer's share of the national income is steadily decreasing. Instead of relieving the farmer, this Congress is adding to his burdens. We have passed laws adding to the price of his coal and his fuel oil, legislation increasing his costs of transportation, legislation raising the price of every manufactured article he buys. All this legislation has the approval of the farmer. He believes in high wages, short hours, liberal returns on invested capital, and a high standard for living for both labor and industry. But he also is entitled to a fair wage for his labor, an honest price for his products, and an adequate return on his own investments in land and equipment.

This Congress has ignored his rights, forgotten its pledges, and utterly failed up to this time to take any steps to bring about the long-promised parity for agriculture. The gentleman from Kansas might have discussed this situation. He might have urged legislation to meet the situation. Time is short. We are nearing the end of the session. If we expect to enact farm legislation it must be done promptly. I trust the gentleman from Kansas and all other Members who are interested in carrying out the pledges made by all political parties over the last 10 years to bring agriculture up to a plane of economic equality with labor and industry will join in urging consideration of a farm bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as no Member desires to be heard on the conference report I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was adopted.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 88: Page 74, line 18, after the colon strike out the balance of line 18 and all of lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That not to exceed $450,000 from the administrative funds authorized by the act approved November 9, 1921, and acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto, in addition to the amount remaining available under the authorizations contained in the Agricultural Appropriation Acts approved May 27, 1930, May 17, 1935, and June 4, 1936, shall be available, in the total amount of $1,360,000, for the construction (including the cost of a site already acquired) of a laboratory for permanent quarters for the testing and research work of the Bureau of Public Roads."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 88 and agree to the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 124: Page 97, line 2, after the word "item" insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That such amount shall be available for the purchase of seeds, fertilizers, or any other farming materials and making grants thereof to agricultural producers to aid them in carrying out farming practices approved by the Secretary of Agriculture in the 1937 programs, for the reimbursement of the Tennessee Valley Authority for fertilizers heretofore or hereafter furnished by it to the Secretary of Agriculture for such purpose, and for the payment of all expenses necessary in making such grants including all or part of the costs incident to the delivery thereof."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 124 and agree to the same.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I always supposed that the Tennessee Authority was granted funds by the Deficiency Committee for the fertilizer experiments they were conducting. Does this not give them funds from another source out of the Public Treasury?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this allocation has been in effect for a number of years. Seed and fertilizing material have been supplied by the T. V. A. for experimental purposes without special authorization. But the General Accounting Office has now raised the question of authorization, and in order to place the allocation beyond question, this provision is included in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 126: Page 98, after line 8, insert:

"INTERCHANGE OF APPROPRIATIONS

"Not to exceed 10 percent of the foregoing amounts for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office herein provided for shall be available interchangeably for expenditures on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office, but no more than 10 percent shall be added to any one item of appropriation except in cases of extraordinary emergency, and then only upon the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided, That a statement of any transfers of appropriations made hereunder shall be included in the annual Budget."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is the provision with reference to the transfer of not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of money which has been appropriated.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, this provides for interchange within bureaus only, and does not permit interchange as between bureaus of departments. This provision has been carried in the annual bill for 15 or 20 years, and was included in this year's bill, but was stricken out on a point of order, as the gentleman will recall, because we added a provision that a statement of such transfers be included in the annual Budget.

I know the gentleman will agree that the annual Budget should show all transfers of this character, but the inclusion of that additional matter made it subject to a point of order, which was sustained. The Senate restored the item and now we propose to agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. TABER. Does not this give the Bureau the opportunity to spend a lot of money that otherwise might be recovered?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No. It is the same item we have been carrying for many years and merely provides for an interchange within a given bureau.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 134: Page 103, strike out lines 9, 10, and 11, and insert the following:

"That for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1938, and June 30, 1939, the apportionment for forest highways in Alaska shall be $350,000 and the remainder of the sums which otherwise would be apportioned and prorated to Alaska for said fiscal years shall be reapportioned in the same manner and on the same basis as provided in the second paragraph of section 23 (a) of the Federal Highway Act among those States whose forest highway apportionments for the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 otherwise would be less than 1 percent of the entire apportionment for forest highways."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a motion to reconsider each of the motions will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

FARM TENANCY BILL

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7562, to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, in order to save time, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7562, with Mr. DRIVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

THE TENANT PROBLEM

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 12 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the time limitation and the great demand for the privilege of speaking by those who are interested in this bill, I am going to request the Members not to ask me to yield for questions at this time. I hope they will defer any questions they may wish to ask me until the measure is taken up under the 5-minute rule.

I have handled many measures for this administration. In fact, it has been my privilege to handle practically all of the farm legislation. During this period there has been no problem that presented as many difficulties as that of farm tenancy.

We had rather extensive hearings. There were many witnesses. No two of these witnesses agreed as to all of the details of the program. When the hearings had been finished, no two members of the committee were in complete accord on all phases of the subject.

THE PROBLEM OF THE LAND

The problem of the land is as old as history. Contact with the soil is as essential as sunlight and air. There can be no life either in the vegetable or the animal kingdom without the products of the land. All life gets its sustenance from the soil.

It is not surprising, then, that disagreements and disputes should arise in reference to any general land policies. In Biblical days disputes arose between Abraham and Lot in reference to access to the land, and this compelled a separation. Throughout all history disputes have arisen as to land and land policies.

To permit the private ownership of land as a basis for a home and at the same time to prevent too great an accumulation of land in the hands of a few is a problem that practically all countries have been compelled to meet face to face.

INCREASE IN TENANCY

Fifty years ago less than one farmer in four was a tenant. There has been a gradual increase through each decade until now about 42 percent of the tillers of the soil are tenants.

That it is very desirable to check this increase and reverse the trend every thinking person must admit. There are approximately 2,800,000 tenants in continental United States. Practically all of them would like to be home owners. But to accomplish this purpose is another question. It cannot be solved by the waving of a magic wand or the expressing of a wish. It cannot be solved by an appeal to the emotions or a display of sentiment. These have been indulged in for more than a generation. At the same time land ownership has grown less and less, and land tenancy more and more.

THE STARTING POINT

As a basis for beginning, two things are necessary. First, it must be made financially profitable to own a small farm home. Second, a way must be found to finance the purchase of small farm homes by owner-operators on long-time payments at low interest rates.

MAKING FARM OWNERSHIP PROFITABLE

Several steps are necessary in order to make farm ownership profitable. The prime essential is to maintain a fair price for farm products. This price is the most important single element in the whole question.

We have already made much progress along this line through the operation of the Farm Act and the farm-credit system.

I hope and expect that farm legislation of a general character will be passed just as soon as it can be properly worked out and perfected. Then there is also the question of interest rates. We have gone a long way with those in the Farm Credit Administration, but there are still some phases which have not been covered.

I agree with the remarks made today about the fine work of the Farm Credit Administration. I think Governor Myers is one of the best administrators in this Government. [Applause.] However, Governor Myers handles a business institution. He fears—and I think there is some ground for his fear—that if the bill partakes not only of business but also of some social features, although it concerns a real problem, some of those who buy the obligations of the institution may get the two phases mixed, and it may hurt the sale of obligations and injure the fine results which are being achieved by the Farm Credit Administration. Governor Myers prefers that we handle the matter in this way, and I think he has good ground for that preference. My first inclination was to follow the other route, but I came to the conclusion after study that this was the better method.

WHAT IS BEHIND THE PROBLEM?

In reality tenancy is not the problem. It is but a manifestation or a breaking out of the problem.

Neither the landlord nor the tenant has had a fair share of the national income. Behind the tenant question is the problem of price and income.

As a matter of fact, the percentage of tenancy for the Nation as a whole has not increased since 1933, but it has only been checked and has not been decreased, and it therefore remains an appalling problem. Further provision is necessary in the direction of price maintenance and in financing the purchase of family-sized farms if the problem is to be solved.

TAXES

Then, too, the question of State, county, and district taxes is extremely important. In most of the States an undue share of the taxes has been borne by the small farmers. The farm cannot get away. It is easily found. Frequently the small tract of land, both in the town and in the country, has borne a larger pro-rata share of the taxes than the larger tracts of land. Besides both the larger and the smaller tracts of land have borne an undue share of State and local taxes.

STATE COOPERATION

Much assistance can be rendered by States and subdivisions if they will cooperate in the program. It seems to me that on small tracts the taxation should be limited either by providing a small exemption or by providing a maximum total ad valorem property tax that can be levied against small tracts. Some of the States have already taken steps in this direction. As a part of the effort to solve this situation, steps should be taken to secure State and local cooperation all along the line. Under the system now prevailing in many of the States a full property levy is made by both State, county, and district units against all lands, regardless of whether there is a crop failure or any form of income from the land. The program will be greatly handicapped in any section where this condition prevails.

In many States and localities, a portion of these taxes could well be shifted to other forms of income and property. This added inducement would go far to make any steps taken by the Federal Government in financing such a program successful. With the cooperation of the State and subdivisions, the Government could well afford to finance the purchase for worthy and ambitious tenants of a small farm home, to be paid for on long-time amortization payments at a low rate of interest. These payments could thus be made on a basis that would not cause an undue burden on the purchaser. In practically every community in America there are worthy tenants who would like to own a home and who would work hard to pay out a home if it could be purchased under such conditions as to give them an opportunity to see daylight.

A TREMENDOUS PROBLEM

The problem is tremendous and far reaching. It cannot be solved overnight. The cost would run into billions of dollars. It is necessary to start gradually and endeavor to keep on a sound basis. The problem is so difficult as to be almost discouraging at times, but this makes it all the more important that it be tackled. It is the hope that by beginning and carefully working it out progress may be made and that cooperation by the States, as well as by individuals, may be stimulated.

THREE METHODS OF APPROACH

For the time being the committee has recommended a three-wing approach to the question.

First, a provision for financing tenants in the purchase of small farm homes.

Second, rehabilitation loans for temporary aid to tenants and distressed landowners who need immediate assistance.

Third, the purchase of submarginal or other lands not primarily suited to cultivation, and the utilizing of such land for various public purposes.

Under the first provision—that is, for the financing of the purchase of small farm homes—we provide a fund of $10,000,000 for the first year, twenty-five million the second, and fifty million the third year to be apportioned among the various States on the basis of farm population and prevalence of tenancy.

The measure provides that loans may be made not in excess of the appraised value of single unit farms to worthy tenants who will obligate themselves to repay the purchase price over a 30-year period, with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum.

The Committee on Agriculture has provided that in each county where the program is to be put into effect, a committee of three resident farmers who are familiar with local conditions shall assist in administering the act.

It is further provided that application shall be made through such local committee and that no farm shall be selected and no tenant shall be financed except with the approval of the local committee. In this way the tenant will be consulted in the purchase of the farm, the price to be paid and the details of the transaction. It is hoped that by this select method on the part of the local committee, the program will be given its greatest opportunity to succeed.

SPECULATION

In order to avoid speculation it is provided that no purchaser shall be permitted to sell the land to other than a resident home owner who is approved by the Secretary of Agriculture until the entire obligation to the Government has been paid. In other words, the purchaser will not be able to make an unauthorized sale of his property until he has met all the terms of his obligation. This method is adopted in order to prevent speculation in land, which has frequently been the curse both of the farmer and the home owner.

TITLE II

Title II of the measure provides for the making of rehabilitation loans to cover equipment, livestock, essential supplies, and financing.

The Resettlement Administration is abolished, effective June 30, 1937. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to establish the Farm Security Administration, which would administer the provisions of the pending measure.

The Resettlement Administration not only inherited the old subsistence homesteads provisions, but also was called upon to administer relief funds, which were transferred from the Relief and Public Works lump sum appropriation to the Resettlement Administration for administering this program as it pertained to the needs of the farm population.

Under the terms of that transfer, the Resettlement Administration made both loans and grants to people in the country.

We authorize the Administration to utilize any funds that may be transferred by Executive order from Relief and Public Works appropriations for such purpose.

The Resettlement Administration cared for more than 300,000 farm families through loans and grants. We have recommended the broadening of the base of these loans in order to make all those who are unable to secure credit elsewhere eligible for these loans. It is hoped that through this method many individuals may be placed in such a position as to enable them to purchase small homes through private sources.

TITLE III

Under title 3 an appropriation of $10,000,000 is authorized to be made available for the first year and $20,000,000 for each of the 2 succeeding years for the purchase of lands not primarily suitable for tillage. These lands may be used for any public purpose, such as parks, game preserves, recreation centers, forest reserves, or for any other public purpose.

The needs for such a program are manifest and are well known to those who are familiar with conditions which prevail, especially in certain sections of our country.

AN OLD QUESTION

The tenant problem is age old. Far back in the history of our race, in times less complex than our own, we find the farmer tilling land that did not belong to him. He did a share of the work in the agricultural village and received a part of what was produced. Such relationships between tenant and landowner are found in various ages and various types of government.

It is only natural that the idea of tenancy should reach our shores early in our own history. We know from writings of colonial days that tenancy existed at a very early date. There were many large landed estates and gentlemen farmers. Our long period of westward expansion and the opening of free land, however, delayed the development of tenancy as a problem. We were still developing, still growing. Opportunities lay always ahead. Then, with the closing of our frontiers, we settled down and began to grow as a nation.

The development of the tenancy problem has taken place largely in the last 50 years, and today we find tenancy existing in every State in the Union. It is more acute in the South, perhaps, than in any other section. This is due largely to the fact that after the War between the States there was very little money in the South, and most of the financing necessarily came from the outside. This caused interest-rate payments to flow out of that great section of the country. A money crop was necessary. The logical development was the one-crop system of cotton, because it was the single one that would produce the returns necessary to replenish the section for the outflow of money and high interest rates.

NOT LIMITED TO ONE SECTION

The rapid increase in tenancy, however, has developed into a problem in many other sections of our country. This has been due in the main to land speculation. The boom years threw land into speculation and into mortgages. The depression years caused difficulties and foreclosures and consequent changes in ownership. Thus the number who were compelled to rent land was increased.

Any attack on the problem, therefore, must be Nation-wide in scope and not limited to any particular area. It is truly a national problem and the remedy must apply equally to all sections.

AN ESSENTIAL OF GOVERNMENT

In working to solve the tenancy problem, we are endeavoring to add strength to one of the most essential parts of every free government. We are seeking to perpetuate the home.

As long as it is possible for a man to return to his home after a day of labor in the office or in the field, and find awaiting him all the things that home means, we will have a substantial and patriotic citizenship. It is the home that is the first unit of all organized society. It is the starting point of training, the place where character building is begun. The future of our form of government depends on maintenance of the American home. That is why the tenancy measure, directed toward turning the trend back toward farm home ownership, is important.

Regardless of the merits of any other essentials of government, there can be no difference of opinion about the desirability of home ownership. To stop the trend away from home ownership and throw the tendency back in the other direction is the purpose of this measure.

The first thought of the pioneers who founded this country was to own a piece of land. The first step of practically all of them was to secure title to a small part of the land in the new America. This desire to own the land was responsible for the ring of the ax that made possible access to the land. It was responsible for the creak of the western-bound prairie wagon as the early settlers made their way to western homesteads.

THE FINEST STEP WE COULD TAKE

Unfortunately in the complex economic structure that has developed within the last few decades, much of this contact has been lost. In my judgment the Government could take no finer step than to make possible the ownership of small farm homes and to take the further step of formulating policies that would make those homes secure.

There is something in the contact with the soil that tends to build character. The Republic is anchored in its homes. The threats of those who do not at heart believe in our system of government and who wish to tear down its institutions cannot get far among a home-owning and liberty-loving people. Every man in America, whether he lives North, South, East, or West, is vitally interested in stimulating home ownership both in the country and in the city. Such a course will tend toward a stronger government and national security for all. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the indulgence of my colleagues for at least a portion of the time that has been so generously allotted to me by the chairman of the committee to present for your consideration and for your thoughtful meditation, not the details of the proposed legislation, but I shall undertake to draw for you a broad picture of this so-called tenant-farming situation.

As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] has so well said, I regard it as a problem of tremendous importance. I may be pardoned for making a personal reference, maybe, to explain my inherited interest in all farming problems. My direct ancestors on both sides of my house for 150 years in this country have, without exception, until my generation, been tillers of the soil; and if there is anything in the theory of inherited predilections, I imagine that may account in some measure for my deep interest in all agricultural problems, aside from their grave economic manifestations.

Now, it has been said that the Congress of the United States in the last few years has been particularly solicitous of and generous to all of our farm problems, and I think this is true. I think that we men who represent largely agricultural districts are under a debt of everlasting gratitude to the Members of Congress from the great industrial centers, and particularly from the great cities of the United States, for the consistent and uniform support they have so ungrudgingly given to these great measures for agricultural relief [applause], because, Mr. Chairman, to any thoughtful man, whether he lives in a great city, whether he abides in an area of congested population, upon reflection, must know the absolute indispensability to life and to society and to progress of the products of the farm. The clothes that you wear, the shoes with which you are shod, the food which you consume to continue your life, the shelter that is over you to protect you from the vicissitudes and inclemencies of the elements all directly are remotely come from the good earth; and farms are operated by men, and it is the present condition of a large segment of the agricultural population that has particularly appealed to our consideration and has afforded the basis for this legislation—the farm-tenant class of our population.

A little later, if I have the time, I shall incorporate in the RECORD for your study some statistics as to the number of farm tenants in the country, according to the census of 1935, the number of operating farm tenants, and the number of their families. It is a rather staggering thing to contemplate that, today, practically one-third of our entire farm population is in the class for whose interest we are undertaking to legislate today; and one of the disturbing factors in a study of the whole problem is the increasing, the constantly increasing, number of farm tenants in some sections of our country; not particularly in the South, because our farm-tenancy situation in the last few years has been, in a way, diminishing, but in the great wheat and corn and cattle sections of the country there has been a tremendous increase, which is a challenge to us to undertake to meet and master, if we may, this acute economic problem.

But what about this man I am talking about—this tenant farmer? Oh, it has been said, and argued with some reason, that if a farmer is of any value, if he has any initiative, if he has any backing and capacity, if he has any ability, he can get along, he can borrow money, he can make his way without any governmental assistance; but those of us, Mr. Chairman, who are intimately familiar with this problem, know that that is not always true. I may call your attention to the fact that down in my section of the country, and especially in the hill sections of the South, some of these poor tenant farmers, by descent, are of the best blood of this Republic, sons of the Cavaliers and of the Huguenots, who moved into that section of the country, and decade after decade, because of disadvantages to which they were subjected, which I shall not have the time now fully to enumerate, from generation to generation they have gone from bad to worse in their efforts to sustain themselves according to the traditions and standards of their ancestors; but the very system and environment by which they have been surrounded has made it absolutely impossible.

I am going to be perfectly frank about this thing. I do not know conditions in other sections, but I wish that some of you could visit some of the tenant farms in my section of the country, both white and colored, and see the desperate and hopeless situation by which they have been submerged, I claim, not entirely in all cases because of their own incapacity, but by reason of these circumstances to which I have referred, lack of credit facilities, poor prices year after year for their products, the isolation of their families from contact with their neighbors, their inability to form cooperative associations and to assemble themselves into unions as those in the industrial centers have done for the protection of their interests.

And there stands a desolate, hopeless, dejected man, working some other man's property, pillaging it, despoiling its rich resources by virtue of the fact that it is not his, but some other man's, and at the end of the year, when they cast up the account, this man who has worked in season and out of season during the whole crop season finds himself with no profit with which to go through the winter, with nothing with which to buy magazines, medicines, or comforts for his family. It is a rather pathetic picture, and as a man representing that section of the country I am ashamed, almost, to describe it here before my colleagues, but God's truth is the God's truth wherever we stand face to face with it. I do not know that the allegory applies all along the line, and some of you may think that it is a fanciful description, but I tell you that the condition of the farm tenant in some sections of the country does not fall far short of that great allegorical poem, The Man With the Hoe, because he is in large measure the forgotten man of agriculture—the man with the hoe—as described by Edwin Markham:

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and that never hopes,
Stolid and stunned a brother to the ox?
Who loosed and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?
Is this the thing the Lord God made and gave
To have dominion over sea and land;
To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;
To feel the passion of eternity?
Is this the dream He dreamed who shaped the suns
And pillared the blue firmament with light?

* * * * * *

Slave of the wheel of labor, what to him
Are Plato and the swing of Pleiades?
What the long reaches of the peaks of song,
The rift of dawn, the reddening of the rose?
Through this dread shape the suffering ages look;
Time's tragedy is in that aching stoop;
Through this dread shape humanity betrayed,
Plundered, profaned, and disinherited,
Cries protest to the judges of the world—

And we here in the Congress of the United States are his temporal judges this day, my friends. [Applause.] As the chairman of this great committee has so well said, "It is a challenge not only to our humanity, but to our economic judgment." What is the ultimate success of farming in this country? The purchasing power in the aggregate of the producers of the country. And when you deprive a man, as has been suggested, of the impulse and the passion to succeed, that is generated by the consciousness that he is working on his own acres, as the gentleman from Texas so well said, "You hasten tragedy, for there is something in the very thought and sentiment of ownership that seems to give some type of almost divine afflatus to the efforts of a man, no matter how humble he may be." Do you own a farm, do you own a lot in the city, have you fee-simple title to your own property? Subconsciously the satisfaction is great to go out on your own acres, on your own land, put your foot down upon it, look up into the sky and say this, thank God, this little bit is mine. [Applause.] But not so with these drifters, these unhappy, these distressed men. And they are the men—there are 3,000,000 of them in the United States of America out of our total farm population—whom we are seeking in this very limited approach to undertake ultimately to salvage and save and "rebuild in them the music and the dream", to give to them as far as possible that feeling of ownership, of their own, which I have so feebly undertaken to express.

Oh, it is candidly admitted that this bill does not go very far. I heard the strictures of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. LEMKE] with reference to the inadequacy of this bill. It is admittedly only capable of reaching a very negligible percentage of those who need this assistance, but it is the establishment by the Congress of the United States of a policy, as suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] in his short statement this morning. A great many other useful things that have taken deep root in our governmental enterprises started as experiments. I very well recall when my honorable father was pioneering here in Congress for Federal aid for the improvement of our national highways. It was regarded as a dream, as unconstitutional, and never possible of accomplishment, and he was content to take an experimental appropriation of $75,000 to see if it would work in practice as in theory. And you see the result. Take the delivery of the mail. The rural free delivery of the mail started as an experiment on a very short route. Who would take that away today from the American people? The same with the parcel post and with our present system of vocational education and farm extension. It all started in a small experimental way, and probably after all, my friends, although I would prefer to have had $50,000,000 appropriated for this bill, though we could not get it—and there have been sound reasons, I think, on the part of the administration in view of our present fiscal condition, to try to trim down as far as possible these appropriations—probably in the long run it may be best for us to feel our way with this thing, to set up an organization, and I hope that organization is going to be a practical thing to be handled by practical men who will be on these county committees all over the country, and not encourage tenants to take up a four or five thousand dollar nicely painted house with lightning rods all over it, and other burdensome and at first unnecessary improvements.

He can go out and build a log house to start with; just the meager necessities, provided it would be his own. I think the biggest factor today in this whole problem, intensified upon the part of those people who are to be served by this legislation, is the fact that they are going to be given an opportunity to show that they can make good as practical farmers; can put off the sackcloth and ashes that they have worn for so many years with an inferiority complex and stand up and look into the face of the sun and their Creator and say, "By the generous grace of a sympathetic Government I am being given another opportunity to prove 'the mettle of my pasture.'"

As I conceive it, that is the objective of this legislation; and we will work it out, I think, if we can get a start here—not too fast. I do not want to go precipitately, because of all the measures that have ever been proposed in the Congress of the United States this is one thing that I do not want to see fail by a bad start. So, Mr. Chairman, in this rather fragmentary fashion I have asked the indulgence of the Committee to submit for their consideration the spirit and, if I may use the word, the sacrament of this legislation. The thing that has animated my ambition about it, my desire to help in it, has been very feebly expressed, but I feel that it is possible for this great Government of ours, without assuming in the long run too great burdens, to take up out of the dust these men, to nurture them to freedom by friendly assistance and Government instruction and leadership, to make them again independent, self-supporting, and extremely useful citizens for agriculture, and for all of the best interests of our Republic. I do hope that this bill will pass without any substantial modification. If there are any differences of judgment between this body and others on the details of this legislation, it may well be ironed out in conference.

I thank you very much. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I append hereto two tables of statistics. The first shows the total of white and colored farm population and total tenants by regional group, as follows:

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I know I speak the sentiment of every Member who has been in this Chamber during the last 20 minutes when I say the address just delivered by the Speaker of the House has been an inspiration to us all. [Applause.] He and the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], in presenting this bill, have lent a dignity to this debate and a tone which the importance of the measure amply warrants.

My excuse for inflicting myself upon you for 15 minutes is due to the fact probably that I have been bound by a tradition very much like the tradition described by the Speaker a few moments ago. No member of my family during the last 150 years has been engaged in any business but farming. I refer to that group of the family that lives in a certain area in western New York. It has always been a fascinating problem to me. I have never been able to tear myself away from it. Indeed, I have not tried. I join with the prayer of certain Members that the Congress adjourn quickly, that I may go home.

We are starting on a tremendous experiment. It has been with great reluctance that I have been brought to the conclusion that we should start on such an experiment. My inclinations have always been against the Government of the United States taking any part in business or in financing what might be termed private commercial undertakings, be it upon a farm or in a factory.

But this question of farm tenancy and its underlying problems have become of such immense importance in the life of the Nation, important from its social and political aspects, as well as economic, that reluctantly, as I admit, I have come to the conclusion that the Federal Government should undertake this cure. [Applause.] At the same time I am not unmindful of the fact that governments, like individuals, may make fearful mistakes in the management or financing of business. While I am willing to see—indeed while I am more than willing to see this experiment start, and I rejoice that it is in a small way, nevertheless I can visualize some mistakes which may be made which may bring it to failure in the future. When I endeavor to point out those mistakes I beg of you to believe that I do not boast of knowing everything there is to know about farming. Indeed, I have never met a man who knows everything there is to know about farming. But there are certain fundamental things which every good farmer, at least, knows; certain fundamental principles the violation of which over any considerable period of time will bring any farming operation to ruin, no matter in what part of the country it is undertaken.

Farm troubles in this country which, of course, have been made much more acute as the result of drought, have been growing upon us for 20 years or more. Some of them have an economic origin, the loss, for example, of our foreign markets, in which we were accustomed to rid ourselves of surpluses of certain crops; accidents, acts of God as they are sometimes denominated: Drought, floods, and in recent years, very, very extensive droughts; and then, if you will not regard it as impertinent, bad farming. We might just as well admit that in certain directions and in certain important areas one of the contributing elements to farm distress has been unsound farming. I do not mean to seem to scold, but I cannot blind myself to facts. My concern with respect to this bill is that the Government, if it is to finance the purchase of farms and lend 100 percent of the value of the farms to the purchasers, shall see to it, if possible, without undue regimentation, that sound farming be practiced; otherwise, Mr. Chairman, from 25 to 50 percent of the effort will go to waste. Bear in mind that tradition of which I spoke and of which the Speaker spoke—in fact, I got it from my father and he in turn got it from his father—that the best thing for the land is the foot of the owner, an old-fashioned farming adage. It implies that the owner is exercising constant care and thought as he tramps across his acres, that he loves those acres, and is intent so to manage his farm that the fertility of the soil shall not be impaired. Impair the fertility of the soil and the capital investment is impaired, for the real capital of a farm is its fertility.

It so happens that I live in a strictly farming region in which very, very few requests for aid under this bill will arise. I live in a region fortunate above the average region. In it very, very little demand for agricultural relief has arisen in the last 20 years. I can say to you without the violation of any confidence or the exposure of any secret that within the 5 years that I have had the honor of serving in the House of Representatives I have had only two letters from farmers in my county, Livingston, in the Genesee Valley of western New York, requesting farm-relief legislation. This does not mean that they have not had their troubles; this does not mean that the depression did not hit them exceedingly hard in certain directions, but it does mean to me—and I would have this borne in upon you—it does mean to me that the tradition of sound farming has been practiced in that particular area so long as not only to assure a preservation of the fertility of the soil but also to assure a preservation of the spirit of independence of the owners. This region is not alone; there are many other regions equally fortunate. I am thoroughly and intimately acquainted with a system of farming which has been in operation for 120 years. It is practiced not only by owners but by tenants; and whenever I think of this bill and the possibilities of the future in connection with it, my thoughts revert to this thing with which I am familiar: It is utterly against the rule, a self-enforced rule, I may say, for the good farmer in the region where I live to sell any rough fodder off the farm; it must be fed to livestock. Through the feeding of livestock the fertility is maintained.

I am in possession of records which show that these particular acres—and there are many, many farms under all kinds of ownership—these acres are producing as many bushels of wheat, of oats, of corn, and other crops as they did 110 years ago. This is the result of sound farming.

Uncle Sam now proposes to finance the purchase of farms and to put carefully selected men upon them. As you all know, I am constitutionally opposed to undue regimentation of the individual by the State, but if the State is to go into this financing of commercial undertakings and is to risk 100 percent of the value of the undertaking, it may become indispensable for the State to see to it that the property the purchase of which it has financed is not injured by unsound practices. Unsound farming extended over 3 or 4 successive years can just about destroy the present productiveness of a farm. Unsound farming extended over 3 or 4 years may require 5, 6, or 7 years of unremitting effort for the restoration of the capital; in other words, the fertility of the soil.

This is not an easy thing that we are attempting; we shall not solve it today. I am waiting to hear with great interest the discussion of the amendments to be offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN], one of which I believe impinges upon this question I have just touched upon. This is an enormously difficult thing. I am not afraid to have the Congress tackle it, but we would better not tackle it with a hysterical enthusiasm, an excessive confidence that will lead us to make all kinds of promises to all kinds of people that agricultural Utopia is at hand.

I greet the presentation of this bill in a sympathetic spirit. There are one or two things in it which I think should be changed. In general I acknowledge that this problem has become so great and so significant with respect to the future of this country that the time has come when Uncle Sam should make it his business to do what he can to help. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY]

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, in the brief time at my disposal I cannot enter into an exhaustive discussion of this measure, but I cannot repress the impulse to comment upon the atmosphere of good feeling that is manifest in the general debate on this bill. Our distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, appreciating that we had but a limited time in which to discuss this bill, took but a few minutes. He was followed by our beloved Speaker, whose wholesome remarks were received by you with marked attention. Our distinguished Speaker made not only a logical, sound, and effective presentation of the farm-tenancy problem but he brought you a wealth of information which must convince even those who are strangers to the problem that it is most serious.

We appreciate, I know, the three very brilliant speeches that have been made, including the speech of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], on the other side of the aisle, who talked in such a convincing and sincere manner. I say we do appreciate hearing these gentlemen at this time for their speeches show not only their interest in this problem but also their firm grasp of this farm-tenant situation in which so many of us are vitally interested.

Mr. Chairman, realizing that the time for general debate on this bill is limited and that quite a number of Members desire to speak on the bill, I propose to be brief in what I wish to say here today regarding the bill that we are now considering, H. R. 7562, known as the farm-tenant bill.

This bill is substantially the same as H. R. 6240, which was reported by our Committee on Agriculture to this House some several months ago.

The reason we are now considering H. R. 7562 instead of H. R. 6240 is that in our efforts to get a rule to bring H. R. 6240 before the House for a vote we had to compromise with regard to the amount of the appropriation.

Under this bill, H. R. 7562, authorizations of appropriations under title I of the bill (tenant provisions) are limited to $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1938, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year 1939, and $50,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940.

Under title II (rehabilitation provisions) the $75,000,000 authorization has been eliminated, but the power of the President to allot relief funds for the purpose remains. I wish we could have secured funds to help the farmer pay at a low rate of interest the mortgage that rests on his farm, but we had to take what we could get.

Under title III (acquisition of submarginal lands) the appropriations authorized are $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1938 and $20,000,000 for the 2 fiscal years thereafter.

Our original bill (H. R. 6240) carried an appropriation under title I of $50,000,000 for each of the fiscal years ending prior to July 1, 1942. Title II of H. R. 6240 carried for rehabilitation loans an authorization for an appropriation for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1938, and June 30, 1939, a sum not exceeding $75,000,000 for each of such fiscal years. Under this title II of H. R. 6240 we tried to take care of the farmer whose farm is mortgaged and give him the right to secure money at a low rate of interest to pay off his present indebtedness but under the new bill we had to eliminate the authorization for this appropriation. Title III of H. R. 6240 (retirement of submarginal land) carried an authorization to be appropriated the sum of $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and $20,000,000 for each of the three fiscal years thereafter.

It will not be my purpose here to discuss the reasons for the authorizations for reduced appropriations. We did the best we could and surmounted our many obstacles as best we could. It has been a hard job to get any bill at all.

On Thursday, April 29, 1937, I made a speech on the floor of this House wherein I discussed in detail H. R. 6240. That was after the Rules Committee denied the House Committee on Agriculture a rule for the consideration of H. R. 6240.

At that time I endeavored to explain H. R. 6240, section by section and title by title, and implored the Rules Committee of the House to give us a rule so we could take this legislation up in this House.

I am indeed gratified that we have been able to work out a compromise and obtain a rule for the consideration of this modified farm-tenant bill at this time, which is cited as the Farm Security Act of 1937.

This has required time, tact, effort, and the spirit of giving and taking on the part of those who have had this farm-tenant problem under consideration for quite some time.

At the outset I want us to bear in mind that the position the House Committee on Agriculture takes, as evidenced by this farm-tenant bill and the provisions contained therein, differs materially from the position the Senate Agriculture Committee takes, as evidenced by the provisions of the Senate farm-tenant bill, S. 106.

Of course, I do not know in what respects the membership of this House will amend this farm-tenant bill that the House Committee on Agriculture has worked so hard and long on.

We have brought it on the floor of this House wide open for amendments and after general debate, it will, of course, be read under the 5-minute rule, and I know various and sundry amendments will be proposed.

Of course, no one knows what the final vote will be or in what form this House will pass this bill. However, I trust that we will pass this House farm-tenant bill in substantially the same form as it is now being presented to this House by our House Committee on Agriculture. If we do amend this bill here, I hope that whatever amendments this House adopts will be helpful instead of hurtful in our efforts to tackle this farm-tenant problem.

If the Senate passes a farm-tenant bill, it will, in my judgment, be quite different to this farm-tenant bill that we are now considering in the House.

Of course the conference committee will have to be selected and the whole matter as presented by the position of both the House and the Senate on this question will have to be considered and threshed out in conference.

If the proposed legislation reaches that stage I am likely to be selected as one of the House conferees, and I feel now that the conferees will be faced with some rather serious and fundamental questions involving this particular legislation.

No one knows just what will be finally agreed to, and if and when we finally work out our differences at this session of Congress, no one knows what the Farm Security Act of 1937 will really contain.

I am sure all of us hope that we can get some real constructive legislation enacted at this session of Congress that will enable this administration to tackle this serious and complicated farm-tenant problem in a way that will lead to lasting and worth-while results.

We know it is a vital question and one that certainly presents a most serious problem to the present and future generations of this country.

To my mind, it is certainly a problem so serious and far reaching as to require handling by the Federal Government. However, we must ever be mindful that the Federal control and supervision of this problem should be of a logical, practical, and reasonable nature.

As I have formerly said on the floor of this House in discussing this question, this farm-tenant problem is one that should be cautiously and thoughtfully undertaken.

Personally I feel that the House provisions as set forth in this bill, H. R. 7562, are much better than the provisions of the Senate bill, S. 106. However, I am aware of the fact that the President's Special Farm Tenancy Committee, as well as some of the heads of this administration, prefer the provisions and philosophy of the Senate bill to those provided by our House farm-tenant bill.

To my mind, this does not amount to more than a trifle, and the policy of the administration in handling this matter that will be shaped if and when we finally agree and pass a farm-tenant bill is, to my mind, one of great importance.

If the idea prevails as set forth in the Senate bill, the Government will be absolutely in the land-purchasing business.

Under the Senate bill the Government buys the land in fee simple and in turn sells the land to the prospective home seeker. The Government retains title, and the tenant does not and cannot receive absolute title to the property until after a long period of years.

The Senate bill, to my mind, presents some serious and grave problems in regard to taxation as to local, county, and State requirements. This land should be subject to taxation.

I will not attempt here to analyze the Senate bill. We will cross that bridge when we get to it, as no farm-tenant legislation has been considered on the floor of the Senate thus far this session.

As my time is passing rapidly, I shall be glad to yield to any of my colleagues for any questions they may desire to propound relating to this bill that is now before the House, because I know the Members are interested in this bill, and, although it is not what a lot of us like, it is the best we can do under the circumstances and is a step in the right direction. It is the policy we have agreed upon. I do not hesitate to yield to any Member to answer what questions I can with reference to how this act is supposed to be administered. I shall be glad to answer any questions I can with reference to the set-up under this act, the benefits of which will be brought to every district of the United States where farm tenancy exists and where it is prevalent according to the need and as far as the funds will go that we provide.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I call the gentleman's attention to the language on page 4, line 15, paragraph 4, which reads as follows:

Be in such form and contain such covenants as the Secretary shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented.

Mr. DOXEY. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is upon that point I endeavored to address myself a few moments ago. I would like to have the gentleman state to us, if he will, how far it is contemplated the Secretary of Agriculture will obligate the man who has purchased the farm with Government money to refrain from unsound farm practices and, if he does not so refrain, what will be his fate?

Mr. DOXEY. I have an opinion, and it may be speculation on my part, because I cannot answer in detail those questions which will be entirely up to the administrative agency to determine. The matter will be regulated somewhat in this way: There will be the various county committees and these county committees will select, from among the multitude that possibly will apply for the loan to buy a farm, those who appear to be best qualified to receive the benefits of this act. The county committees will select applicants by taking into account their experience, character, standing, and also whether or not they have dependents, are married, have made a partial success of farming, have enough farming implements and livestock to carry on their farming operations and so forth, all leading to a final test of whether or not in their specific cases they have been successful as farm tenants.

This bill applies only to people who are now farm tenants, including laborers, sharecroppers, and those who get the biggest portion of their income from farming operations. It does not say that a man who has possibly owned a farm in the past and who has engaged in sound farming operations, but on account of the depression or some other condition that we know has been prevalent throughout the agricultural sections of our country is now in the class of a farm tenant, cannot be selected. When the individual is selected by the county committee and the farm that he is supposed to buy or be placed in charge of is selected, the contract is made. I may say that what would be a real, practical, sensible, sizable farm in the Middle West would not be the same in the deep South or in the county from which my distinguished friend from New York comes. We know this bill can only scratch the surface, but it will enable people to enjoy the benefits from this particular bill if they will indulge in sound farming practices. When the man is selected and passed upon by the county committee, and approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, or those acting under him, and the farm is agreed upon, I imagine there will be an understanding as well as a contract between that person and the source from which he receives his benefits. This will be his home, as has been so beautifully and touchingly described by not only the Speaker of the House but by the chairman of our Committee on Agriculture, as well as the gentleman from New York.

With reference to that specific paragraph and what will constitute waste and what will not constitute waste, that is left in large measure to the sound, discretionary judgment of the man who fills the position of owner and, of course, to an extent it will be regulated by the Secretary of Agriculture. There is no Member of this Congress or no member of the Committee on Agriculture who can definitely and specifically outline the program in advance. That will have to be worked out by the Secretary of Agriculture and those assisting him in the administration of this bill.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOXEY. I gladly yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Does not my distinguished friend feel that since we want to start off in a small way and conservatively, we should follow the example of other Government lending agencies, or most of them, and require that the tenant make some little down payment of say 5 percent and put a ceiling to these loans, as we do in connection with most other Government loans, providing that not more than six or seven thousand dollars shall be lent to any one tenant?

Mr. DOXEY. Of course, I listened very attentively to the gentleman's speech this morning and I wish I had time to add something to what he said. The Committee on Agriculture has discussed every phase of this bill. We did not just begin during the present session of this Congress to study and work on this tenant problem. We started hearings on the farm tenancy problem back in 1935. We have worked assiduously on the measure and, as stated by the chairman of the Agriculture Committee, there is a great diversity of opinion. This bill provides for a county committee, which will take into consideration some of the things I have enumerated and I imagine if they find an applicant who is able to make a down payment, that will be quite a factor in that individual's being selected, you may say, from the eligible list. [Applause.]

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I have heard our distinguished Speaker refer to some tables. I do not know what the tables are to which he refers and I do not know whether he is going to put them in the RECORD. However, I have a break-down of the statistics on the tenancy question with reference to States. If our distinguished Speaker does not include them in his remarks, I should like to revise my remarks and include therein these tables, showing not only the number of farmers in each State and the number of tenants, but the number of home owners, the number of farmers who actually operate farms today but do not own them, and the number of farm owners who do not operate their farms. I think all this information will be helpful to the membership of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Mississippi that it would be necessary for him to obtain the consent of the House for the inclusion in his remarks of the tables to which he refers.

Mr. DOXEY. I just ask to revise and extends my remarks and set out these tables.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may extend his own remarks, but the gentleman will have to obtain the consent of the House to include the statistics to which he refers.

The consent of the House having been obtained, the tables referred to are as follows:

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are now discussing the Farm Security Act of 1937. Naturally I am as interested in the security of the American farmer as any individual Member of the House, and have been very much concerned about the problems of the farmer. In my opinion he is the hardest working and most industrious individual in this country, spending many hours working on his farm to secure a livelihood. And this applies not only to the farmer on the farm but to the wife of the farmer who spends more working hours than any other of the women of this country in assisting the farmer in running the farm.

These farmers are as fine a class of people as there are living in this country today. But, I question very much the benefits of some of the things which have been put into effect as law by this administration, especially for the farmers of my district. For instance, these reciprocal-trade agreements, whereby farm produce is imported into this country in greater and greater quantities today than ever before. I know that is the case with dairy and farm products, and if that is aid and assistance to the farmer then I do not understand the economics which this administration is trying to effect. We must keep the American markets for the American farmer.

In this bill, section 41a, provision is made that the Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to appoint those who are to administer the act without regard to civil-service rules and regulations. This I am opposed to. I think we should have the merit system in Government rather than the old log-rolling political methods which those in control of the House have so frequently objected to but which they still support.

Why, it was only last week here in the House we Republicans tried to get a vote on the C. C. C. bill and practically every Member on the Democratic side refused to grant civil service to the employees of the C. C. C. camps. Yet you say you are in favor of civil service. It is just too bad that a vote could not be had on the civil-service provision of that bill so you fellows could have been recorded. Let your constituents know where you are by a vote. Do not be afraid to be recorded. When they asked for a rising vote only five Democrats stood up, and we were unable to get a yea-and-nay vote.

It is appropriate here to add a few remarks on the state of the Nation, showing that by repealing a lot of laws which have been enacted we will benefit the farmer more than by enacting this present bill.

We want to get down to sound solid facts rather than a lot of political joyrides in legislation that will carry the farmer farther away from security rather than nearer to it. This Nation is right on a seething volcano, and if it erupts the farmers and citizens of this country will have no security under our Constitution.

THE STATE OF THE NATION

We have reached the lowest point in the depression both financially and morally from which we can survive as a republic. It is impossible longer to conceal the facts about or disguise the failures of the New Deal. The halo which was skillfully built around the personality of Mr. Roosevelt has just about disappeared. Today he stands revealed as a very human being, a blunderer who obstinately clings to the ill-conceived plans of his New Deal advisers.

That great changes are about to come in this country can be forecast from the great wave of crime which has lately come upon us and the absolute indifference of a large part of the population to law and order. We have seen those of our workingmen who refused to be exploited and herded into labor organizations forced into idleness. We have seen law and order give way before the assaults of armed and organized mobs in many cities. The impotence of State and Federal authorities in the situation has been manifest throughout. In their zeal for the success of friendly cooperators in the ranks of organized labor the New Deal agencies have, at times, themselves become the principal violators of the practices they so loudly condemn in others.

The American workingman looks over the present situation and in the privacy of his home comes to the conclusion that he will be the ultimate victim of the economic breakdown which appears to be upon us; he faces the facts and finds that there has been but little of substantial value accomplished for him and his family.

Mr. Chairman, the workingman of America now knows that we are more than $36,000,000,000 in debt. He knows that the social security he has been promised is based on pauperism. He knows that the frontiers that will be extended for him are the frontiers of regimentation and collectivism.

Mr. Chairman, while there are still many in the country who will not willingly give up their hereditary notions of the private right to work public wrongs, these present no greater dangers to the Republic than the politicians whose ascent to power has been followed time after time by raids upon the public till on their own accounts. The huge army of public employees—Federal, State, and local—has forced many of the States for the first time in history to set up economic trade barriers between each other. We are about to drive out of business many of the great industrial leaders whose services to the people and to the Nation are cheaply paid for by allowing them the acquisition of moderate private fortunes.

The demands of the Government for more and more taxes and a greater share in the production by constant applications of the tax burden have forced many of these industrialists into retirement or to seek other sources for the investment of their capital.

So the situation can be summarized. The people of the Nation no longer prostitute their hearts and hopes at the footstool of Mr. Roosevelt. Events, not politicians, have changed the national outlook. Five years ago the issue was the national depression. Last summer it was the return to prosperity. Today the issue is, Shall the Republic survive?

Mr. Chairman, the people of the Nation will no longer quietly acquiesce in the demands of the President that he be allowed full control over the purse strings of the Nation and the economic life of the masses. This Congress has a responsibility to the people and to the nations of the world. Will Congress assume this responsibility?

This Congress must act. This Congress must do something to end the uncertainty which clouds the citizen's right to work without interference from either the hand of a Federal bureaucrat or the sanction of a labor organizer. Mr. Chairman, this is the state of the Nation today. May God save the United States.

In that way and that way only can we give security to the farmers and to all our citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe it is necessary for me to take much time to point out the desirability of legislation which will relieve the farm tenancy situation in this country. I only regret it is such a big problem and has so many ramifications it is impossible for us to solve it all by legislation.

There are those this afternoon who have expressed their regret that we are not attacking this problem in a more extensive way, and I share that regret; that is, I wish we might do more than I feel we shall be doing through the passing of this measure. However, I think also there is something to be said on behalf of a careful and cautious approach. Whatever we may want to do, we know we cannot through the expenditure or the lending of Federal funds make every farm tenant a landowner in this country. This is an impossibility. We have 2,800,000 farm tenants. If we were to spend only $5,000 in putting each one of them on a farm, it would mean the expenditure of $14,000,000,000. However, I think we can, through this proposed legislation, meager and inadequate as it may be, demonstrate within the period of a few years whether or not this is the proper method of approach, or one effective angle of approach, to the problem. Therefore, I favor the measure we have before us this afternoon.

As I stated in the beginning, it is generally recognized that this is a grave national problem. It is not a problem of recent origin, however, because beginning back in 1880, when we had our first census figures on farm tenancy, there has been a steady increase in farm tenancy until the last 5-year period, from 1930 to 1935, when the proportion of tenancy underwent a slight decrease.

However, as I have just stated, the problem is not a new one at all, nor is its gravity new, because during the two decades from 1880 until 1900 we had a greater increase in farm tenancy, both in numbers and percentage, than we have had during the 35 years since that time. During that 20-year period we had an increase in the number of farm tenants in this country of 1,000,000, and a percentage increase of approximately 10 percent. This was at a time when our public lands were still open to settlement, and during a period when 300,000,000 acres of new land were brought into the farm acreage of this country. From 1900 to 1935 we had an increase in the number of tenants amounting to 864,000 and an increase in percentage of 6.8 percent. In other words, the percentage increased from 35.3 to 42.1 percent.

From 1900 to 1930 there was a constant increase in the percentage of tenancy, the greatest increase, however, occurring between 1925 and 1930. From 1930 to 1935 the percentage of tenancy decreased from 42.4 per cent to 42.1 percent; yet during that time there was an actual increase of about 200,000 in the number of farm tenants in this country. However, during the same period of time there was an increase of over 300,000 in the number of owner-operators, which accounts for the fact that the percentage has gone down slightly.

This problem is so great and complex that we cannot possibly go into the causes of it in the brief time we shall have this afternoon. The problem varies in different parts of the country. In some sections it is not serious. It is a greater problem in the South than in other parts of the country, yet in the Middle West, particularly in the States of Iowa, Illinois, South Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas, it is a serious problem, because in all these States the percentage of farm tenancy approaches 50 percent. It is 49.6 percent in Iowa, 49.3 per cent in Nebraska, 44.5 percent in Illinois, 48.6 percent in South Dakota, and 44 percent in Kansas. Therefore farm tenancy is a grave problem in those States and somewhat of a problem in at least half the States of the Nation.

The problem varies even in different counties within States. In the State of Mississippi, which has the highest percentage of farm tenancy, there is a large variation between the percentages of farm tenancy in different counties. As I recall the figures, in one county the percentage is only 11.4 percent, far below the national average, while in another county it is about 96.8 percent. In the State of Oklahoma there are wide variations, from a low of 30.6 percent to a high of 78.6 percent, and such variations exist in all the States where farm tenancy is extensive.

There are other approaches to the solution of this problem than the one we are attempting to set up today. The President's Commission on Farm Tenancy made a number of recommendations, of which Government financing of tenants is only one. They put their finger on what I think is one of the great causes of farm tenancy, speculation in farm land. If you go to the States in the northeastern part of the country, in New England and the North Atlantic States, where the percentage of farm tenancy is smallest, you will find that in these States for many years farm-land values have been stable. If you go out into Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, the Dakotas, and other States in that area, you will find that during the same period of time there have been quite violent fluctuations in the prices of farm land.

You will find, I think, that even today a great deal of the farm land in the Middle West is priced higher than will pay interest upon the investment. Of course, one of the reasons for the great fluctuations in the price of farm lands is the fluctuation in the price of agricultural products. If these prices could be stabilized, this would have a great effect upon reducing this particular cause of farm tenancy, but I have not the time now to go into any further discussion of that phase of the question.

One thing that should be remembered in connection with any discussion of the question of farm tenancy in the South is that there are two classes of tenants there, one the class which the Bureau of the Census classifies as a tenant, and the other a class which is classified as a sharecropper, a group which, in effect, is more nearly composed of farm laborers than anything else, because, while they take a share of the crop that they make, yet they ordinarily have nothing to say about the management of their operations or the crop they will grow, but simply occupy the status of working for someone else, getting their compensation out of the crop rather than in cash.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I think we have to approach the solution of the problem of the sharecropper, perhaps, from a different angle than we do that of the tenant who has had some experience in management, who has his own property in the way of farming implements and livestock, and who has gone a little further up the rung of the agricultural ladder.

The authors of the book The Collapse of Cotton Tenancy, one of whom is Dr. W. W. Alexander, Administrator of the Resettlement Administration, conclude that it is practically impossible for tenants in the South to accumulate property or to become independent. The reasons which are given in support of this conclusion are: First, the agriculture that the tenant knows fits only the old system; second, the banks cannot finance the tenant because they are geared to the needs of the plantations; third, the cost of merchant credit leaves little or nothing for captial accumulation; fourth, the crop-lien credit system has destroyed his independence in marketing his crop. Not only do the reasons given above seem to make the problem in the South more difficult than that of the Nation as a whole but, in addition, as mentioned above, the sharecropper particularly does not at this time have either the education, experience, or background to enable him to graduate into the ranks of landowners. Many students of the problem believe that it will never be possible to make independent landowners out of this group and that whatever attempts are made for the relief of this situation should be directed, at least for the time being, to improving their status as sharecroppers and tenants.

The bill which we have before us today is based upon the idea that while we cannot help all of those who are deserving of assistance in becoming farm owners, we ought to do what we can to help the most deserving, those who are more nearly ready to undertake the obligations and the burdens of farm ownership.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question just at that point?

Mr. HOPE. For a very brief question; yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Since the Government, manifestly, is unable to help all, would it not prevent discrimination if there were some qualifications so as to enable the aid to be extended to the most deserving and thereby give all the same opportunity to qualify?

Mr. HOPE. I think that is true, and this bill does provide some qualifications which will enable the local committees to choose the most deserving.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I be more specific by saying that the qualifications should be that a man is able to furnish at least a part of the purchase price or is better qualified by experience to operate a farm?

Mr. HOPE. Of course, that is an element that the local committee should carefully consider. I think the success or failure of this approach to the problem is going to depend very largely upon the local committees. If we have local committees the members of which are conscientious and will give their time and their effort to a job at which they are going to be very poorly paid, and who will exercise proper judgment and discretion in the selection of the tenants, the plan has a much better chance of being successful. Local committees can also be of great assistance in the selection of desirable farms and in seeing they are secured at fair prices.

In conclusion let me say that I think it is particularly important that we recognize this bill as an attempt to solve the many-sided tenant problem from only one angle. There are many other things which need to be done not only by the Federal, State, and local governments, but by individual and community efforts as well. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, first, I want to express my appreciation to the Members who have spoken preceding me on the presentation of this important question, which we have up for consideration this afternoon. This is, after all, a gigantic problem and the measure we are considering now, of course, admittedly is an experiment at best.

We are considering the matter of expending some $10,000,000 which, when divided among the various divisions of the United States, gets pretty small, being approximately $3,000 for each county in the United States, if you please. So it naturally resolves itself into an experiment which, after all, is well worth trying. When we appreciate the fact that the condition with reference to farm tenancy is continually growing worse, we realize it is high time for us as individuals and as Members of Congress to take hold of this problem and try to help bring about its solution to some extent at least.

The general intention of the bill before us today is to reduce to some extent the number of farm owners who are becoming tenants in this country. Our attention has just been called to the fact that some 50 years ago 24 percent of our farmers were tenant farmers, but that now half of them are tenant farmers. In Mississippi we are told that 60 percent are tenants, in South Carolina 62 percent, in Alabama 64 percent, and Georgia 65 percent. Between 35,000 and 40,000 farmers are becoming tenant farmers every year. So we have approximately some 2,865,000 tenant farmers and 3,800,000 farm owners.

I want, however, to call your attention this afternoon to a measure pending before Congress that I deem is of considerable importance to the country at large, and especially to those who are interested in agricultural pursuits. It is with reference to H. R. 6763, which passed this House on June 7, and is now pending before the Senate.

This bill provides for the extension for 1 additional year of the 3½-percent interest rate on Federal land-bank loans and for a 4-percent rate for the following year on land-bank loans and land-bank commissioner loans. The present extension expires on July 1 this year. Unless this extension is granted, the farmers holding Federal land-bank loans will go back to the payment of the old rate of interest as it existed 2 years ago. In other words, in just 3 days the present extension expires, and the farmers who owe these loans will be charged with an additional interest rate of from 1 percent to 2 percent.

The thing that causes me to call your particular attention to this bill is the text of the President's letter, dated June 7, directed to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House and to certain Members of the Senate, wherein he opposes the reduction in interest rates on Farm Credit Administration loans. He states in the letter that he is "disturbed by the provisions of this bill" and believes the Members of Congress should be advised of the situation which will be created by the passage of that measure. He says, among other things, that any reduction below the rates of interest that were formerly provided by the Federal land bank would create a gift to the farmer from the Federal Treasury, and he also states that the borrowers from the Federal land bank, under this bill, "are given an annual grant or gift by legalizing an abnormally low rate of interest."

He further states that the reduction in the interest rates to the farmers by the Federal land bank and the Land Bank Commissioner, as provided by the terms of this bill, will cost the United States Government more than $40,000,000 per year, and that the passage of this bill was not contemplated in the preparation of the Budget for the fiscal year of 1938. He says he is definitely seeking the balancing of the Budget, and that the Budget must not be thrown out of balance through extra appropriations or obligations.

First, I should like to give due credit to the administration for having given this problem the consideration to which he believes it is entitled. I am also in favor of balancing the Budget, just as soon as it possibly can be done, and do not want that bill to create a further deficit in the United States Treasury.

I propose first to show that I do not believe there should or will be a deficit that will require the need of an appropriation from the Treasury, by reason of the extension of the present interest rates by the Federal land bank, or the Federal Land Bank Commissioner, for a period of 1 more year. I do not believe this measure is going to cause a raid on the United States Treasury by the farmers of this country, in any sense of the word. However, let me suggest that even if the passage of this bill should result in the creation of a small subsidy on the part of the Treasury—that the administration is inconsistent in opposing it.

I realize we should not grant subsidies to one group of persons just because we have granted them to other groups of persons or concerns—but we should take into account at least, that subsidies have been granted by the hundreds of millions of dollars to municipalities and private corporations, as well as individuals, during the past few years.

In the discussion of this bill, I do not want to go into a discussion of those expenditures, except to call your attention to the fact that during the 6 months Congress has been in session, it has exceeded its estimated appropriations by millions of dollars. This seems not to have disturbed the administration or its leaders. The House has already appropriated about $600,000,000 for the Navy, and $425,000,000 for the Army. You will recall that amendments have been made to the various appropriation bills, increasing the liberal recommendations of the Appropriations Committee of the House, in many instances, amounting in all to many millions of dollars.

I do not want to take too much of your time at this point. You will, however, recall that, without much opposition, during this session this House has agreed to spend a vast amount of funds from the Federal Treasury that were not originally contemplated by the committee having the measures in charge. For instance, only a few days ago this House agreed to spend $7,000,000 for a tract of timberland in California that is to be added to a national park. I am informed that this tract is 15 miles away from the park. This House agreed to spend without the matching of State funds, $5,000,000 to complete or extend the building of a national highway in North Carolina and two or three Southern States. There are so many instances where we have exceeded the committee recommendations.

I mention these items to show that, generally speaking, the administration does not seem to be so much "disturbed" about the expenditure of a large amount of funds from the Federal Treasury, even in many instances beyond the amounts suggested by our committees.

During the past 4 years, according to statistics furnished by the Department of Agriculture, 27 out of every 1,000 farm owners in this country lost their farms for the reason that they were not able to pay their interest and their taxes. And I believe that you will agree with me that with comparatively few exceptions this failure came about by circumstances over which they had no control. Thousands of farmers in the last 4 years have lost their homes. They have either become tenant farmers or have in many cases gone on the relief rolls.

We have here a serious situation. I cite these figures to you to show that the farmer's condition is far from being solved and that he is going to need some further assistance, for a while at least, if he is expected to live on his own farm.

Now, I should like to call your attention to the fact that there are 639,800 land-bank and land-bank-commissioner borrowers in the United States which, I am informed, includes about 37 percent of the farm loans in this country. About 77 percent of these borrowers had paid their interest at the end of the year 1936. According to Federal land-bank figures, there were 95,300 farmers who were unable to take care of their interest items and the taxes which became due at the end of last year. This by reason of crop failures and adverse conditions. These farmers could not meet their obligations. These farms involve an investment of approximately $428,800 worth of land. This number would have been greater had it not been for the reduction of interest heretofore granted by this Congress.

We are dealing with a stupendous problem this afternoon. It seems to me that if we are going to save the farms for the farmers, that the least thing we can do is to maintain the present rate of interest on Federal land-bank and commissioner loans for another year, and the reason I call your attention to it now is because the bill is in the hands of a committee in the Senate, and, with the administration apparently opposed to it, I believe the situation can be most important.

One of the things we have been discussing during this session of Congress is trying to keep people from the relief rolls. We have talked about the farmers who are on relief rolls, and yet we find between 35,000 and 40,000 farmers, on an average, are losing their farms each year. If you want to keep men off the relief rolls—if at this particular time you want to help the farmer to help himself—let us see that the present rate of interest is maintained, and let us assist materially some 685,000 farmers who will be benefited thereby and without, in my opinion, any expense to the Federal Government.

A good deal has been said about the low rate of interest granted to farmers by the Federal agencies during the present emergency. I grant you that it is a comparatively low rate, but not as compared with the rates granted to railroad companies and corporations which have been assisted by the use of Government funds. Furthermore, when these loans were first made the interest rate was 4½ and 5 percent. The interest rate that is now being paid for the use of this money is approximately 3 percent. And let us not forget that the farmer, when he makes his loan, buys stock for an amount equivalent to 5 percent of the amount of his loan; and since we have some $2,000,000,000 in farm loans, we have approximately $100,000,000 of the farmers' money paid to the Federal land banks that helps to guarantee the payment of these obligations. Also, when the farmer made his loan, he paid the secretary of the local organization a fee on a percentage basis on his loan for services in securing the loan for him.

Furthermore, if you will examine the statement of the Federal land bank for the year 1936, and the first quarter of 1937, it will show a net profit of some $22,000,000, with sufficient reserves that have been set up to protect the bank against losses of shrinkage on account of judgments, foreclosures, and real estate owned, and so forth.

It is my contention that with the $22,000,000 of profits already shown by the Federal land bank, and the profits that should accrue during the next year, by the careful management on the part of those in charge of Federal farm mortgage organizations that there will be more than enough profit to offset the slight reduction in interest rates, and at the same time maintain a sound financial situation so far as the land bank is concerned.

If the farmers of this country can raise a good crop this year and have a fair price for it—the delinquencies in the payment of interest and taxes will be at a minimum in a year from now. If you want to help the farmer to help himself, here is a chance where you can assist a great number of representative persons who are engaged in the business of agriculture in this country. They are not asking for alms in any sense of the word. All they are asking for is an even break. Let's help provide it to them if we can.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as a result of legislation enacted during the past 4 years by the Democratic Party, increased income has come to the farmers of America and with it, a revival in all business. Restored purchasing power has resulted in improved business conditions in the cities. The wheels of factories, mills, mines, and railroads are again turning, and all this gained in the face of unusual natural disaster—the droughts and floods of recent years. But the consequences of these unusual natural conditions have not been as severe as the man-made disaster from 1929 to 1933, when bankruptcy and ruin overtook the American farmer and his earnings were swept from under him. Because of the legislation passed by the Roosevelt administration, national recovery has been realized and the progress made by agriculture has been of tremendous assistance to the entire Nation in recovery from the depths of depression. The Agricultural Adjustment Act was the keystone in the arch of the Nation's recovery. At present, we have the Soil Conservation program, supplemented by marketing agreements, surplus crop removal, commodity loans, flood- and drought-relief measures.

We have laid the foundation for an economically sound national farm policy. The Committee on Agriculture, of which I am honored to be a member, is now working with the farmers and the farm organizations on a permanent legislative program to safeguard food supplies and farm income. We hope to draft a bill that will make possible legislation to store up reserves of farm crops from surplus years for use in lean years. To preserve and build up the fertility of the soil, to stabilize the supply and prices of farm products, and to increase the farmer's income. This proposed legislation we hope to soon have ready for consideration by the House.

Today we deal with the farm-tenant bill. We provide for loans to be made available to sharecroppers, laborers, and tenants. Fifty years ago one out of every four farmers was a tenant. Today two out of every five are tenants. Statistics tells us that for the past 10 years there has been an annual yearly increase of tenants of about 40,000 farmers. This must not continue in the future. Sound legislation must be provided by which unfortunate people may be able to secure land or credit with which to make a crop and purchase a home. By so doing, a large measure of poverty, social unrest, and economic insecurity will be eliminated. The farm-tenant bill, now under consideration, proposes to remedy this condition and provide money for distressed farm tenants. It will prevent the tendency of landowners to become tenants, and tenants to become laborers, and laborers to become objects of charity. The bill authorizes loans to be made at an interest rate of 3 percent per annum for a period of 30 years, with which to buy farm lands. The appropriation made available in the bill is $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and $25,000,000 for the year 1939, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for the year 1940.

Only farm owners, farm tenants, farm laborers, and sharecroppers are eligible for this loan. To my mind it is a most meritorious bill. I have been greatly interested in helping to secure legislation of this kind before our committee. We have held extensive hearings, which are now in the hands of the Members of the House. My regret and disappointment is only because of the small appropriation carried in the bill, which has been made necessary because of the economy drive. I hope by next year it will be possible to increase the appropriation and to amend the bill from year to year that more money will be made available for those in need of this assistance and to prevent the further losing of farm homes and lands by their owners.

There is provided in the measure a local county committee of three members to be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture to supervise the loans provided for in the bill. This will guarantee proper appraisal on the part of the borrowers and a fair basis upon which the Government can carry out the provisions of this act.

The future of America is inseparably bound with our farms and farmers. The farmer employs more laborers than all the railroads, mills, mines, and factories combined. He has more invested in capital than do all other lines of business. The successful management of this great investment and basic industry affects the future welfare of our country. It is a national problem and should be treated as such. The successful management of the farm is essential to the existence of all other business. The farmer feeds and clothes the world. He produces new wealth from the soil he cultivates each year. He is the foundation of all national prosperity. If he does not have buying power, the wheels of industry stop. What would happen if the farmers in the United States should go on a sit-down strike as we witness today in many of our factories? Who would feed and clothe the city dweller and the factory worker? The answer is, He would go naked and hungry, seeking relief, with none to be had; yet the farmer works longer hours and more days per week than any mill or factory.

Not only does the farmer do this, but all the members of his family have their long hours, from early morn until late in the night, they each go about their daily task. If the drought, or the flood, overtakes him, he must continue his efforts. The tax gatherer and the banker levy their tribute just the same, whether the season is good or bad, whether the prices of farm products are high or low. No delays or stay of judgment is tolerated by the interest collector, nor can the payment of taxes be deferred. The one basic industry that must carry on is agriculture. America must be fed. Happy homes are the only guaranty that liberty and freedom possess. Without them anarchy and communism overtake us.

On the Union Railway Station building here in Washington are inscribed these prophetic words: "The farm, the best home for the family, the main source of national wealth, the foundation of society." How true are these words. Farming is the most satisfying life of our people. Here contentment and happiness are most often found. It is where the young men and young women are to receive their first and best training for future citizenship. The security of our Nation and of our people is wrapped up in the farm life. Liberty and freedom had their birth in the open spaces and in the country life. The love of home and the farm is the basis for the love and devotion we feel for our State and Nation. It is around the fireside and in the family circle that patriotism has its beginning. The city environment cannot, and does not produce the serenity of soul, and the clarity of vision, and the steadfastness of purpose, as does the farm and country life. This fact was well-known by our forefathers when they settled America. It was their purpose that every man should own his home and farm. Westward they went and settled the fertile acres between the Atlantic and the Pacific. They fought for more acres to have more farm homes. Today, amidst all the friction and strife that obtains in the industrial and manufacturing centers and cities in our country, the farm home stands as a beacon light to calm and still the waves of discord and discontent.

If the farmer can have equal opportunity with industry and receive parity prices for his crops, and if he can receive his share of Government credit and protection, that is all he asks. He does not seek a dole. He seeks only equality in commodity prices, in interest rates, and in taxes. No farm home in this country should be required to pay a tax where the farm is valued at $2,500 or less. The people of America should be encouraged to become home owners. Too many in the cities and towns all ready. Many of them could, and would become self-sustaining on the farm. Their families would be better off in health, in happiness, and in all the things worth while in life, if they would experience the dignity of honest toil on the farm. The city life weakens, rather than makes strong. It is mechanical and machine like. Every day like the preceding one. No diversity of employment, no change of surroundings, no independence of action or freedom of initiative, no broadening of the vision, no communion with nature, no inspiration from the hills.

The 30,000,000 farmers in America should continue to organize for their own protection and security, the same as has industry. They are entitled to a fair and stable income, the same as the laborer in the mill or the factory. They are entitled to the same convenience to satisfy home needs, as others—cheaper electricity, cheaper farm machinery, cheaper fertilizer, and cheaper interest rates.

They are entitled to a foreign policy that will encourage peace with other nations and a greater market abroad for their farm products.

They are entitled to a soil conservation program. Lands unsuited for cultivation or land that is unprofitable should be taken out of active cultivation.

Better opportunities for the farmer to own his land and his home must be afforded him. This, the bill under consideration seeks to do. Greater security for tenants and sharecroppers and greater incentive to laborers to become home owners is provided for in this measure. The bill is a step in the right direction.

Much better and more far-reaching is the measure than the resettlement and homestead programs. They have been, and will continue to be, an expensive experiment. To my mind, the so-called homesteads will result, and have already done so, in great waste of the taxpayers' money and a still greater disappointment in the future to the homesteaders themselves. Too much waste and extravagance, too many inexperienced, so-called experts and blueprint farmers and builders have been put in control and permitted to experiment with the taxpayers' money. It will be a disappointment throughout the years and will not succeed unless and until men are put in charge to superintend these projects who are actual farmers by experience and who have made a success on their own farms, and who, above all, must know the value of a dollar, and who himself is a taxpayer. No so-called "brain truster" or theorist can successfully carry on a development of this kind, as they have tried to do in the past, with any other result than a waste of the people's money.

The farmer may and does profit by advice and expert assistance, but at last he must be an individualist and work out his own salvation and be the author of his own destiny, if he is to succeed. Individual effort and personal planning has builded a great civilization in America in the past 150 years. It will likewise be responsible for our development in the future. Every farmer and businessman must be the captain of his own soul and pilot his own ship, if he is to succeed. The Government can stand by and aid the farmer and business, as it should do, but at last the farmer and businessman must be responsible for results. This alone encourages him to carry on. Thrift, economy, fair dealing, and the good-neighbor policy will make him sovereign. It will lead to success. Service and honest toil bring their own reward in the great stretch of years ahead, when the shadows fall in the evening across the western slopes.

It is not easy to bring about, by legislation, protection against the drought, flood, frost, or plague, but cooperation and teamwork upon the part of the farmers themselves will largely make this possible. The Congress can substantially aid by proper legislation and the pending bill, in its provisions, will afford great assistance to many deserving borrowers and new home owners.

A higher standard of living will be gradually experienced by the less fortunate by legislation of this kind. I regret that the appropriation provided in the bill is not sufficient to do what we would like to for all the tenant farmers and the home owners in America, but it is a step in the right direction. It is a milestone in the march of progress. Much has been done to aid agriculture in the past few years, and much more remains to be done in the future. The home owners and the farmers are the last great hope in America. I confidently believe, if we are to be saved from communism, socialism, and the Reds, it will be because of the stabilizing influence of the farmers in the United States. They will be the defenders and preservers of our liberty and our institutions in the future as in the past. It is to them that industry owes its life and existence. Business could not exist, nor the professional man live, except the farmer who feeds and clothes him, and provides a market for his merchandise, and pays to it and to him his bills from the earnings of the good earth. Let the Congress continue to concern itself with the farmers' problems. The present administration has been most helpful and, while the farmer has a friend in court, let him demand and receive equal rights and equal opportunities with the manufacturer, and all other industry. The industrialist has been subsidized and protected throughout the years. Let us give the American farmer a legislative program that will afford him economic security and equality of opportunity.

As was so well said by President Roosevelt in his recent message to Congress:

When fully half the total farm population of the United States no longer can feel secure, when millions of our people have lost their roots in the soil, action to provide security is imperative and will be generally approved.

This is certainly true. The Federal Government cannot alone accomplish the end desired. We must have the cooperative effort of local and State institutions. We must make possible farm ownership to tenants who have ability and experience, but who cannot become owners without assistance. Loans must be made by the Federal Government to those who are about to lose their farms and who need credit extensions. The passage of this bill will aid the tenants, sharecroppers, and farm laborers to become home owners. This is certainly to be desired by all of us.

We must endeavor in every possible way to increase the income of the farmers of America. They must be protected in what they sell because of the price they are required to pay when they buy. We must also endeavor to have land values become more stable. Too much fluctuation in the price of real estate has existed in the past. We must make it possible for our farmers to receive their share of the national income. This is a national problem. The public welfare demands it. We must provide the normal requirements of the people for food and sufficient reserves must be maintained to protect the people against the hazards of weather, drought, flood, pests, and disease, and also against the dangers of international crises. We must continue with added interest our soil erosion and soil conservation program to protect our land resources. We must also provide for the retirement of submarginal lands of the country from cultivation as provided for in this bill. Soil fertility of the farmlands must, at all times, be maintained and increased. A proper and effective national adjustment of production in line with the demands of consumption is essential. The Government must assist in aiding the farmer to control the movement of his crops to market after they have been produced in order that the prices he is to receive will be stabilized at such levels as to always insure parity income to farmers and fair prices to the producers.

National prosperity and security exist only when the buying power of the farmer is made secure and certain. The consuming public is entitled to have the normal granary and the food reservoir sufficient to meet its demands.

AGRICULTURE MUST NOT BE THE FORGOTTEN INDUSTRY IN AMERICA

The farmer needs to organize for his own protection, as has industry. His production of farm goods must be adjusted to adequate home needs and to foreign demand. Foreign policies to encourage peace with other countries and an increased market abroad for our farm products is demanded. We must afford better opportunities for the man with the hoe to own his land and increased security for tenants and owner-operator. Industrial policies to insure abundance to the wage earners and farmers alike, is needed. Within the past few years and during the Roosevelt administration, more beneficial legislation has been passed than under any previous administration in the history of our country. Let us continue this policy of making more secure the farmers, who feed and clothe us.

Let the farmer continue his fight for equality of opportunity. He deserves to win. He has had many long, lean years. He is the owner of the greatest industry in America. His success means your success. Let us pass the pending bill. I am proud I was born and raised on a farm. I am proud of this heritage. My father was a farmer. My people have all been farmers before me. I have always engaged in farming myself. I am honored to represent the people of the Fourth District of Tennessee and farming is the principle business of my people. It is a great agricultural district and contributes much in food supplies, livestock, and general farm resources. Let us undertake, for the first time in the history of the Nation, this constructive and helpful piece of legislation. We are making worthwhile history for the future in the passage of this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN].

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of our Committee on Agriculture, Mr. JONES, stated a very certain fact when he said that he had considerable difficulty in the committee in arriving at some conclusion on the farm-tenant bill now before this Committee. The hearings which are available covering H. R. 8 are not the hearings on the bill now before the Committee, because the policies outlined in our committee in H. R. 8 are totally different from the principles involved in the bill now under consideration. H. R. 8 provided that the Government should go into the land business and buy farms and distribute those farms to individuals selected by the Secretary of Agriculture, through the county committees, while the bill before us today provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall make loans to farmers who desire to purchase farms and who receive the approval of county committees and the Secretary of Agriculture. The farmers in this instance will immediately get title to the land they purchase, while under H. R. 8, which was not reported by the committee, they would not have received title until they had operated the land from 20 to 40 years.

I do not believe the bill now under consideration—and I feel sure it will pass the House—will remain in its present form when it gets to the United States Senate. I am satisfied that the bill will be amended and that the old Bankhead bill will be substituted. In other words, they will put in the farm-tenancy legislation, the original bill, which was rejected by the Committee on Agriculture after 11 weeks of debate in the committee.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman tell us the difference in the two bills specifically?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I have just stated that the bill which was before the committee, which was rejected by the Committee on Agriculture, sets the Government up in the land business, so that the Government would go out and buy land and select future owners to occupy it, and that they would be from 20 to 40 years in paying for it, while in this instance the tenant may exercise his own judgment, may go out and pick out a farm, go to the county committee and make application for a loan, and if it is approved by the county committee and the committee thinks the farm is all right and the value is all right, then he can get a loan up to the entire purchase price of the farm if the value fixed by the county committee is the same as the purchase price.

Mr. HOOK. In other words, the committee decided to write its own legislation?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The gentleman is correct. We tried for 11 weeks to write this bill. The chairman of the committee tried his best to get a majority of the members to write the kind of a bill he wanted, but after all these weeks of debate, the committee finally wrote the bill which the committee decided it wanted. That is the bill that is before us.

This bill has been termed "an experiment." That is not exactly correct, because the Resettlement Administration under the Department of Agriculture, has been conducting a similar experiment for the last 2½ or 3 years. They have purchased thousands of farms throughout the United States in all sections. They have selected tenants or individuals to occupy those farms. Many of you know something about the experience of the Resettlement Administration and the unsatisfactory results. I know of an instance in my own congressional district where they completed a resettlement homestead project 2 years ago, and to this date the 52 tenants, or purchasers, do not know how much they are going to pay for those homes which they have purchased from the Government.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Minnesota 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. In just a moment I will yield.

I have tried for the last 9 months to have the Resettlement Administrator tell me how much each of his subsistence homesteaders will have to pay for his home. They all want to know. Still he fails or refuses or is unable to give the information. As a consequence, a great many of those homesteaders have become disgusted and have moved off of the premises, because they do not know whether they have title or ever will get title, or how much they will have to pay for it in the end.

Possibly some of the things that the Resettlement Administration did are subject to criticism. In this particular project in my own congressional district, which I have in mind, the tenants were led to believe that they would pay around $2,500 for each homestead. The construction was so poor and there were so many idealistic things that the Resettlement Administration thought homesteaders should have, such as a new $10,000 community house and a great many other things that raised the cost, that now when we divide the total number of homesteads by the total cost of the project, instead of the individual paying $2,500, the cost has mounted up to over $5,200 for each homestead. So throughout the United States where these individuals who were to be helped, thought they were going to pay a medium price for the new homes, they will find that the cost will run up to five, seven, ten, or twelve, or, in some instances, $15,000 for a little home and a few acres of land.

The same group which has handled the Resettlement Administration will undoubtedly handle the administration of this act. I hope it will succeed. I am for the bill because it is the best bill we could get out of the committee. The tenant problem is a serious problem, not so much in our section of the country as in some of the other States.

When I heard the distinguished Speaker of the House today picture the condition of the tenants down in his section of the country, I realized the truth of many of the facts that he pointed out. I have visited a good many tenants and sharecroppers down in that section, and I say to you honestly that we in Minnesota and the northern parts of the central West would not let our hogs live in the houses that the tenants and sharecroppers live in in that part of the country. It is a shame; it is a reflection on someone; whether it is the United States Government, the individual, or the landowner, I do not know, but whoever has the responsibility in connection with the present status of this large class of people in the Southern States should assume the responsibility and not blame us in other parts of the country, for we are trying to fulfill our duty by giving them the proper kind of help to make them contented American citizens.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman spoke about delay in payment. I am wondering whether this bill, providing, as it does in subparagraph 5 of title IV, power for the Secretary to make payments prior to audit and settlement by the General Accounting Office, will correct it and whether it is a good correction.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. No; I do not say it will correct it, and I do not think that we will get away from governmental red tape and delay in connection with this proposition.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I think that this program will fail, although I hope that it will not. The reason I say that it will fail is because of governmental red tape. Let us take the case of a tenant sharecropper who wants to buy a farm. He goes over and looks at John Doe's farm. They agree on a price and he tells John that he will buy the farm if he can get a loan from this new set-up of the Government. They sign a contract. Then the sharecropper has to go to the county committee and place his problem before the committee and make his application. They will look at the farm, and if they feel that the purchase price is all right and that the man is all right, they will recommend him for a loan. They recommend him to the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture will get it after 3 or 4 months. Then he will have to have his legal experts look up the title, and this takes anywhere from 6 months to 2 years. The sharecropper gets the action or approval in anywhere from several months to 2½ years. By that time the man who was going to sell the farm has lost his sale, but in the meantime he has had all of his land tied up. I think it will be difficult to get any individual who has land to sell to enter into an agreement to sell his farm contingent upon the purchaser getting a loan from the Secretary of Agriculture under this bill. It will take too long. We cannot do much about it except try to put through a piece of legislation that we believe will be helpful to some of the tenant farmers and others who desire to own farms in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

(Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks.)

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, the generosity of the House in unanimously granting this time is deeply appreciated.

The kindliness and the friendliness shown by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], in promptly, when his attention was called to the fact, withdrawing the erroneous statement which he inadvertently made and which intimated that I was advocating unnecessary violence, is acknowledged. His action was characteristic and explains, if explanation was needed, the reason for the esteem in which he, as dean of the House, is held by its membership. Again I thank you, gentlemen.

He, who by word or deed when strife is abroad in the land, has sought to stir up class hatred, dissension, or strife, serves not the cause of patriotism. If his act be thoughtless, he deserves the reproval of his associates. If his act be deliberate, he deserves their censor, and that in no uncertain terms.

Time was sought to correct an error made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], not because of any feeling of personal hurt or chagrin, but for the reason that today throughout the country there are two schools of thought held by two groups of people who are swiftly and steadily traveling toward a destination which, when reached, if the objectives now sought are not changed, can but lead to bloody civil strife. These are not the words of an alarmist. The fact is known to all.

For that reason there should be no misinterpretation of the signs along these pathways, there should be no misunderstanding of the purposes of those who advocate their use, no regret after our choice has been made. Let us look, therefore, at the facts as they exist. On June 22, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page 6162, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], speaking in the House, among other things said:

> Mr. Speaker, referring to the behavior of judges, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] turned to me and said that I had gone into the State of Michigan and had made a speech for the C. I. O., stating that I hoped the C. I. O. would be organized in the South. That is not wholly correct. I want labor organized in the South and everywhere, and the citizens can choose what organization they please. I am frank to say that I hope the C. I. O. is organized in mass industries.

The statement by me, as referred to by the gentleman from Texas, will not be found in the printed RECORD, as under permission given me to revise my remarks, it was stricken. In fairness to the gentleman from Texas, I have obtained from the stenographer a transcript of what was said on the floor. It was this:

> Mr. HOFFMAN. I will try hard to abide by the ruling of the Chair. The point of order is raised by the gentleman from Texas who went into Michigan and told people up there he was going to help the C. I. O. organize the South as well as the North to free the slaves of Ford. [Laughter.]

My basis for that statement was taken from the remarks and a speech which he caused to be inserted in the Appendix of the RECORD, from pages 1517 to 1519, and which I ask you gentlemen, if you are interested, to read as it is a notable contribution to present-day knowledge. The address was delivered on June 5 before the United Automobile Workers of America, at Baby Creek Park, Detroit, Mich.

The gentleman stated to his audience, among other things:

Oh, my friends, I want you to know in the first place that down my way labor is not very well organized; labor is not very well organized anywhere in the South. But let us get organized North, South, East, and West, and let us do it for the purpose of preserving American liberty and the American standard of living.

You know, my friends, I thought it a little significant and that it really meant something, because the very first tune you played was John Brown's Body Lies A 'Moldering in the Grave. That is the same tune they played and the same song they sang when the slaves were freed in the South.

Yes, fellow Americans, that's what we are going to do for the people of the Ford plant. [Applause.] Or, better, in modern parlance, we will cooperate with them in organizing so that they may protect their own rights.

On the subsequent page, he said:

* * * I know and appreciate John L. Lewis. I think he is the greatest labor organizer in America, because he has intelligence and character and because he is honest. [Applause.] * * *. The point is the United Automobile Workers is a fine organization; it is the strongest one in the field; and Lewis is the strongest man in the field; and Homer Martin, your leader, is absolutely O. K. [Applause.]

The accuracy of the author, historian, and statesman from Texas and the nature of his reasoning may perhaps be understood by two quotations from the RECORD.

The eminence of the gentleman from Texas who confers with the President, who, according to the papers, announces the President's will upon his return from the island, makes me hesitate that I should question either his accuracy or his philosophy.

In passing, let me note, that on page 1589 of the Appendix of the RECORD, in the speech delivered by the gentleman, I find this statement:

After the war began there were more and more blunders. Armies went out of their way to meet and destroy each other, and their tactics were brave and courageous, but foolhardy to the extreme.

May I most humbly venture to say to the Speaker and to the Members of the House that there is a somewhat startling statement. Armies went out of their way to meet and destroy each other. The gentleman from Texas added greatly to the historical knowledge of our day by that statement.

Again I find on page 1586 of the Appendix of the RECORD, news for you of the South who so justly glory in the bravery of your soldiers. The gentleman from Texas, referring to the heroism of General Pickett and his men, said:

But I was shown the field where General Pickett charged, and I could see in my imagination the Confederates as their cavalry sabers flashed in the sun, bravely advancing in futile attack.

Again, if memory serves correctly, Pickett's men went forward across the shell-torn fields, advanced up the hill, surmounted the fence, but they were on foot, and it was here, as leaders of this charge, that brave Armistead and Garnett died within the Federal lines and at the muzzles of Cushing's guns. Cushing gave up his life at the same time. But perhaps I am unduly critical in suggesting to the gentleman the facts should not be disregarded and truth ignored, even where the object is the attainment of some worthy end.

The record of John L. Lewis is written so that all men may read it, all men may choose whether they will follow his leadership. It would be presumptuous for me to suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he should follow any man as a leader.

It would not be improper, however, to call his attention to the fact that after a telegram was received at Herrin, Ill., in 1922, 25 unarmed, defenseless men, who had surrendered to Lewis' mine workers, were either beaten, shot, or hanged until all were dead. It should not be forgotten that, while Lewis has collected millions of dollars in dues from workingmen, he has left behind a trail of loss of wages, reduction of production, violence, bloodshed, and death unequaled by that of any other labor leader.

It might be noted in passing that a Department of Labor report shows that during the first 4 months of the year, 10,851,706 days' work were lost, and this by labor while Lewis was carrying on his campaign.

From 1922 through 1926, a period of 4 years, 17,050,000 workdays were lost because of strikes. From 1927 through 1931, another period of 4 years, 5,665,000 days' work were lost because of strikes.

It will be noted that, while Lewis was in the saddle organizing and directing labor, almost twice as many days' work were lost through strikes in a period of 4 months as were lost in the 4 years from 1927 through 1931.

It is the gentleman's right—it may be his pleasure—to turn in on a highway like that and follow it to the end of the road. For myself I seek another destination over a traveled way, perhaps not so easy, not so broad, and at times perhaps more lonesome, but which, along its traveled way, has signboards of equality, justice, law, order, and which in the end has liberty for the individual, prosperity and perpetuity for the Nation.

June 22, in the House, the gentleman said:

I am getting a little bit tired of constantly hearing this ranting and roaring of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]. It is getting very boresome—

May I most humbly apologize to the gentleman from Texas and assure him that I will endeavor to avoid any contest, for I have not the slightest idea of ever at any time, in view of the excellence of his performance in the House, making the slightest effort to compete with him in ranting or roaring.

May I concede to him all the laurels which go to the winner of such a competition. If not presumptous, may I suggest that he might have retired to the cloak room for a few moments and saved himself a bit of weariness.

But, speaking of his getting together an army and marching into a State, if we go back into history and study one of the famous judicial trials of the South, when Mr. John Brown came into the State of Virginia with arms and ammunition he was tried for treason. Suppose Mr. John Lewis would announce, like a Congressman, that he was getting up an army to invade a State, what would happen?

But a Congressman can get up and say that he can invade a State with arms and ammunition, and have his son get ammunition, like John Brown's son did, and that is all right. That is fine; that is wonderful. But if John L. Lewis said that, he would be tried for treason, as John Brown was. He would be called a traitor on this floor; but we permit one of our own Members to do it. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander; and a Congressman has no more right to violate the law of the land than John Lewis or anybody else.

Most assuredly a Congressman has no right to violate the law of the land. He should, and I have always tried to be, extremely careful to obey not only the laws of the Federal Government, of the State, but the ordinances of all communities.

Never but once have I even taken advantage of the privilege of a Congressman to park where others could not, except as I park my car in a space reserved for the purpose alongside buildings. In view of the gentleman's statement about getting together an army and marching into a State, let us consider briefly what was said and the circumstances which brought about that statement. When the facts are clear, it is to be doubted whether any true, patriotic American will disagree with what was said or the purpose intended.

Sunday, June 13, I drove into the city of Monroe, in my own State. Some time before, less than a hundred workers out of a total of over a thousand had called a strike in the Newton Steel plant, and a small group of pickets, which had kept the public highway blockaded and the men from their work, were, by officers duly appointed and deputized, driven from the picket line. In reply to this action, the

C. I. O. had announced that it would invade Monroe. It had threatened to hold a demonstration in that city.

On this Sunday I saw honest, respectable businessmen and workers armed with clubs, knives, pistols, shotguns, tommy guns, standing guard to repel an invasion. That same day, according to the newspapers, some 8,000 men from other parts of the State and outside the State—for Monroe is less than a half hour's drive from Toledo—met in the park just outside the city limits threatening advances on the people of Monroe.

I came on my way, and Monday's papers quoted Bittner, one of the C. I. O. organizers from Chicago who handled that crowd, as saying, "If we wanted violence, we'd go to Monroe today and take it", then added, "but what would we have if we took it? Who ever heard of Monroe until a few days ago? It is a fly spot on the United States." He threatened the C. I. O. would be back, and he said—I quote: "By God, they will pay for what they did at Monroe, and pay well."

Having seen the strained, drawn faces of the men at Monroe; having heard their expressions of anxiety, of fear; having sensed their determination to protect their city and their people; having in mind the invasion of the plant by hundreds of armed workers from outside the State, knowing Murphy stood back of and encouraged lawlessness and violation at Flint, Mich., I sympathized with these men of Monroe.

My heart went out to them in time of stress in their helplessness against the army which the C. I. O. could bring against them. So I wired the mayor of that city and I also at the same time wired my secretary in my home town "to have reliable citizens who are willing to go to Monroe to aid in defending the city from invasion promised by C. I. O. Organizer Bittner leave name, address, telephone number, list of arms, tents, and cots at office." For that action I have no apologies to make. The offer to the mayor of Monroe was made in good faith. It stands.

The fact which the gentleman from Texas and the C. I. O. organizers fail to grasp is that the farmers of America, the small businessmen of our country, the people, women, as well as men, in the smaller communities, will shed their blood, will give their lives, before they will be dominated, driven from their working places, from their towns and cities, by the C. I. O. or any other Communist-controlled group.

Another mistake which the gentleman and the C. I. O. workers make is the assumption that, like the innocent medicine man of old, they are immune from the fatalities which overtake others.

It is the privilege as well as the right of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] to go up and down the countryside assisting the C. I. O. and its affiliates in organizing to fight and march under the banner of Madam Perkins in her effort to force businessmen to acknowledge the supremacy of Lewis. It may be his pleasure to address crowds which boo the mention of the Supreme Court, as was done at Detroit. They will make no impression; he will get little sympathy in his preachment of the doctrine that American citizens should permit their towns, their cities, their industrial plants, to be taken over by those whom he enlists under the banner of the C. I. O. and the Communists.

It may have given the gentleman pleasure to say, as he did at Detroit, "and Homer Martin, your leader, is absolutely O. K."

But I call attention to the fact that it was Homer Martin, acting under the leadership of Lewis, who stilled the wheels of industry; who closed the factories; who destroyed automobiles in the making; who prevented the orderly execution of the lawful processes of the Court; who sent workers by the thousand from their jobs; who deprived women and children of the means of livelihood; who brought anarchy to Detroit.

It was members of an organization which acknowledges the leadership of Homer Martin, who turned off the power in the Saginaw Valley, depriving hundreds of thousands of citizens of the necessities of life and who undoubtedly would have kept the people of that valley plunged in darkness, had not the sheriffs of three counties notified Michigan's Governor that the citizens would take the law into their own hands, if power was not restored.

We have come to the parting of the ways. For the moment the broad and the easy road, politically, may be the one pointed out by the gentleman from Texas. Along that road under the banner of a fighting leader with almost unlimited funds at his command, with an organization the like of which has never been seen in this country, march hundreds of thousands of grim, determined men who have been led to believe, who are told frequently, that they are the slaves of industry, of men who would deprive them of their just rights.

Small wonder then that they are earnest, that their actions are vigorous, that they are willing to sacrifice. But hundreds of thousands of men have suffered and have died because of erroneous belief, because of false leadership. Lewis is hailed as the greatest labor leader of the century, and it is true that he has gathered millions under his banner, but he has gathered them by the holding out of false hopes, promises impossible of performance, and by intimidation and violence.

And where has he led them and what has he accomplished? Examine thoroughly, painstakingly, the history of the recent strike in General Motors. Compute for yourself from reliable sources the increase in wages and against it set the total pay-check loss of the workers, and to that loss add the amount which Lewis' organizations collected for initiation and dues. Then balance your books and note the result. Ascertain the working conditions and the hours which prevailed before Lewis entered the field, examine subsequent conditions, and determine what, if anything, has been gained. Apply the same methods to the other industries which have felt his blighting touch, and you will have a fair and true picture of what has happened.

That the C. I. O. does not always represent the workers has been convincingly and spectacularly demonstrated at Youngstown and also at Johnstown, where, when the workers were assured of protection, they went back to their tasks, the mills were opened, and the pay checks are ready.

But that is not the whole story. Lewis raises a man of straw, a false issue, and makes the declaration that his fight is between the workers and the employers. All know that this is not true. His fight is not only against the employer, but into that battle he has thrown his workers against the unorganized and the organized workers who do not belong to his organization. From the beginning he has constantly attempted to drive every toiler into his organization to sign on the dotted line. About this there is no dispute, so that under whatever banner the fight may be waged, under whatever slogan the battle carried on, the truth is that the C. I. O. is fighting not only the employers but all other industrial workers.

Even this does not complete the story, for aside from the workers in the industries where Lewis' efforts are concentrated, the New York Times in an editorial of yesterday tells us:

> • • • that all the workers in all the coal mines in the country, in all the iron, copper, gold, silver, lead, and zinc mines, in all the quarries, oil wells and gas wells, in all the iron and steel mills, in all the automobile factories and repair shops, car and railroad shops, agricultural implement factories, ship and boat works, and in all the metal-working industries together, constitute, according to the census of 1930, less than 10 percent of the total number of gainfully occupied persons.

And upon the remaining 90 percent Lewis would throw the larger part of the immeasurable cost of his industrial warfare. While the gentleman from Texas marches shoulder to shoulder with Lewis he should not forget that with Lewis and with him march Homer Martin, Frankensteen, the Reuther boys, Browder, and a host of Communists who sneer at the Supreme Court, scoff at law and order, and boast of the aid of State and Federal officials in their enterprise.

The issue cannot be confused. Letters pouring in from all parts of the country, from the uneducated and the educated, from the man who dictates his letter to the man or woman who writes on tablet paper or a post card, from the editorial writers of the great national dailies to the most obscure weeklies, bring the word, the thought, that the right to work is not only a right guaranteed by law but it is a right demanded by necessity.

I cannot more accurately, clearly, and concisely state the issue than to quote Governor Davey, of Ohio, who said: "The right to work is sacred; the right to strike is equally valid."

He lays down the doctrine that those workers who wish to remain on strike "certainly are entitled to do so, and to continue any and all lawful protests", and that in equal fairness, he said, "those who want to work should enjoy that privilege without being molested."

Speaking of government, he said: "It must not abdicate its sovereign powers to any who challenge its existence."

Here is a declaration of principle which breeds justice for all, and which, if announced by either the President of the United States or the Governor of Michigan in December of 1936 when these sit-down strikes began in the General Motors plants, would have avoided controversy, violence, and bloodshed. It is the application of this principle as followed by Governor Davey, as followed by Governor Townsend, of Indiana; Governor Horner, of Illinois; Governor Cross, of Connecticut; Governor Hurley, of Massachusetts, Democrats all, which must be adhered to if peace is to return.

Another thing which must come before we will have lasting peace in industry is the repeal or the drastic amendment of the Wagner Act. That piece of legislation, no matter what its purpose may have been, has proven to be the entering wedge which has driven apart organized and unorganized labor, employer and employee.

The unfairness of that act, as enforced by the National Labor Relations Board, the arbitrariness of it as applied by the decisions of that Board, the encouragement which it gives to ambitious, self-seeking racketeers, have demonstrated beyond all question that it adds to, rather than diminishes, strife. Could those who passed it have foreseen the interpretation which would be given it, and the purpose for which it would be enforced, and the disaster which has followed in its wake, it is more than probable that it never would have reached the statute books.

We have the National Labor Relations Board telling us that it is the duty and the obligation of employers to sign a contract with the C. I. O. and its affiliates in various interests. We have the President of the United States making the bald declaration that employers should sign with the C. I. O. in the steel strike now on. But listen to the argument, to the promises which were made when the bill was before the Senate. The Senate committee in reporting it favorably, among other things, said:

The committee wishes to dispel any possible false impression that this bill is designed to compel the making of agreements or to permit governmental supervision of their terms. It must be stressed that the duty to bargain collectively does not carry with it the duty to reach an agreement, because the essence of collective bargaining is that either party shall be free to decide whether proposals made to it are satisfactory.

Senator WAGNER himself wrote on November 2, 1935, that there was nothing in the law to compel an employer to sign. He held further and said Congress had no authority to impose such a requirement. Getting Saturday's papers, we find the reputed author of the bill particularly criticizing the mill operators because they will not sign a contract which he formerly said the law did not require them to sign, which Congress had no authority to demand that they sign, and which the committee said was not designed to compel the making of a contract or permit governmental supervision of its terms.

Aside from the use of Pennsylvania's armed forces by the Governor to drive men from their work, perhaps the most outrageous demand ever put forth was that Governor Davey said was made upon him by Madam Perkins, who, he says, asked him to call in Tom Girdler, of Republic Steel Corporation, and Frank Purnell, of Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., and "keep them there until they sign an agreement" with their steel workers.

The Governor characterized Secretary Perkins' suggestion as the "exercise of the most autocratic and dictatorial powers ever attempted" and "in private life it would be kidnaping." Let us pause here, use a little common sense, and consider. Just assume for the moment that the Governor had the authority and could and would call in Girdler and Purnell, and suppose he called in Lewis and his chief lieutenant, and he announced his intention of holding them until they agreed. Just what agreement could he force them to make?

I am now waiving all questions of law, all questions of right. Here they sit around the council table. Lewis says you must sign. Girdler and Purnell say we will not sign. The Governor says sign; they sign; sign what? An agreement to bargain collectively. Well and good. Now, what is the bargain? Lewis has so many thousand men. He says he will work under certain conditions and for so much per hour. Girdler and Purnell say, we cannot pay it; we will not pay it. Shall the Government say, you shall pay it, regardless of whether the industry can stand the charge? Regardless of the fact that the demand may break the industry and drive it into bankruptcy? Assume Girdler and Purnell say that they cannot meet the union demand for a dollar and can pay but 50 cents per hour. Lewis says, "We will not accept it." Shall the Government say, "You must work for 50 cents an hour?"

These are extreme illustrations. Nevertheless, the constantly increasing demands of labor for a larger share of the gross sales price, the ever-present desire of the manufacturer to reap a profit, are in continuous conflict and if Government, as pointed out by Donald Richberg, assumes control, labor may in the end find itself begging for the right to sell its services to the highest bidder, rather than in a Government-controlled market.

Labor cannot be employed without industry, and industry cannot make a profit without labor, and if the two are left alone without Government compulsion to bargain collectively, and meet in a spirit of reasonableness, they will in the future, as they have in the past, find a common ground where labor will have employment at a steady wage, and industry will be able to make a profit which will enable it to exist.

Denunciation—criticism without the suggestion of a remedy—is futile. January 14, on the floor of the House, I pointed out that "by failure to act, the Governor of Michigan and the President are permitting, if not sanctioning, mob rule." From that day to the date when Governor Davey, of Ohio, announced his policy of protecting the man who wants to work, guaranteeing his right to a job; lawlessness has continued to increase, and the battle front has been rapidly widening.

The gentleman from Texas said he was getting a little bit tired of constantly hearing this ranting and roaring. May I call his attention to page 6213 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of June 23, where the Democratic whip in the Senate said:

There is not a State in our Union which just now is not threatened with what may be called a form of riotous confusion. * * * Shall we overlook at this time and forget that it was in like manner that Italy yielded, bring in a condition which has finally resulted in a tyranny and a form of despotism we shrink to mention? * * * Here within ourselves we are nearer to insurrection and apparently, sir, confronting an army of revolt in the largest numbers, whether from the employers or the employees becomes secondary.

Turn to page 6284 of the RECORD of June 24 and note there the statement on present conditions by a distinguished Democrat whose loyalty is unquestioned, whose vision is clear:

We have got no government in Washington, and we have got no government in some of the States, because government has surrendered to mob rule.

It was with the thought of doing something to remedy the situation that, on April 15, I offered H. R. 6456. This bill provided, among other things, for the registration of labor organizations, for the enforcement by such organizations of discipline upon their members; prohibited sit-down strikes; made labor organizations responsible for the acts of their officers and their members.

That bill has remained with the committee ever since, while conditions have steadily grown worse.

It was on June 21 that I offered H. R. 7598, making it a felony to transport in interstate or foreign commerce persons who are engaged in going from one State to another to close factories.

Each of these bills, if enacted into law, would go a long way toward aiding in the solution of some of our industrial troubles and there is nothing in either that would be unfair to labor, or that would in any way prevent the growth of unions. In fact, if the same result followed which followed the enactment of the British labor law—and there is no reason to believe that it would not—the enactment of these two measures would strengthen labor unions, aid in driving out racketeers and create new confidence between employer and union organizations.

These two bills were followed, on the 22d day of June, by a resolution respectfully calling upon the President to declare that no citizen of the United States should be deprived of the opportunity to engage in his usual and customary task, and further requesting that where the civil or military authorities of a State or of a subdivision failed, for a period of 2 days, to give protection to any person desiring to work, that right should be secured to him by the action of the armed forces of the United States.

That such a resolution was necessary to dispel the idea that lawlessness was approved by the national administration is a matter of common knowledge. Such a declaration would undoubtedly, in almost all instances, protect, without bloodshed, the right of men to work.

That this is evident is shown by the circumstances following the declaration of courageous Governor Davey, of Ohio. There, immediately upon being assured of protection, the men returned to their work, demonstrating, as I have said before, that they do not wish to strike; that they are driven into strikes by the lawless violence of a small minority.

May I not appeal to the Democratic Members of this House to consider the situation as it exists today? And when I say Democratic Members I mean Democratic Members; I do not mean New Dealers.

Many of you sat here in the last session. You heard that most eloquent Member of the House from Alabama, Mr. Huddleston, make his remarkable plea for what he believed to be right and just, and you remember how, because he dared to oppose these fanatics who were advising the President, he went down to defeat after years of courageous, patriotic service here.

Now, make no mistake and do not deceive yourselves. You gentlemen who have the courage to express your convictions are marked for political slaughter. Jim Farley and the vote-buying boys will get you if you do not watch out.

You may have thought in the past that you were a part of the national administration. Nothing is further from the truth. You have been the tools, the errand boys, for the national administration. Of all the laws which have been enacted since the President was elected, probably not a hundredth part of the thought expressed is your thought.

The gentleman from Texas told how Pickett's men made their glorious charge on the hill at Gettysburg, and, in truth and in fact, history records no instance of greater patriotism, greater courage, greater loyalty to a leader, more self-sacrificing devotion.

But in another way you gentlemen of the South have, during the past 4 years, shown a loyalty to your leader equal to that of Pickett's men. You have submerged your individual opinions. You have followed blindly, unhesitatingly, and unwaveringly the commands, the suggestions, of the President.

You have watched with doubt and apprehension many of the moves which he has made. In your minds you have questioned not only the legality but the soundness of the policies which he advocated.

Nevertheless, you yielded obedience; you made the fight; you upheld his hands.

You have been sitting here watching, waiting, hoping, and I know many of you praying, that he would cease in those efforts which at last you realize will overthrow the Government which you love.

Today you know, you understand, as you have never understood before, the road which he is following, the destination toward which he is traveling.

With amazement and almost unbelief, you saw his attack against the Supreme Court unfold. You received his reorganization bill and you sensed its purpose. You were given the hour and wage law and you realized its import.

You saw going in and out of the White House John L. Lewis, who publicly demanded that the President of the United States pay a political debt.

You have observed the President of the United States sitting silent and, by his silence, giving approval to the acts of Lewis and his organizers in wrecking industry throughout the land, in depriving men of their right to work.

You have heard the statement of a great Democratic Governor of the great State of Ohio that the President's Secretary of Labor called upon him to kidnap the heads of industry and hold them until they yielded.

And, whatever may be the controversy between the great Governor of that State and Mme. Perkins, you know that the President has not interfered when industries have been kidnaped and held to ransom.

Oh, I appeal to you Democrats of the South and true Democrats of the North, to act before it is too late.

Do not believe that the loyalty and self-sacrificing service which you have given to the President will save you. You will follow in the wake of that long, long list of patriotic Democrats who have been kicked out of the party organization.

Have you forgotten what happened to the Democrats of Minnesota in the last campaign? Have you forgotten other loyal Democratic candidates who were sacrified by the President where his organization thought it politically expedient?

Already the signs point to a new Democratic leadership in the Senate and House.

Sucked dry like an orange, having no more to yield, you will be carelessly but deliberately tossed aside into the political gutter.

Jonah's shipmates tossed him overboard with no more disregard of consequences than will the Administration heave you gentlemen out to sink or swim—only you will find that, instead of a rescuing whale, Jim Farley and his political machine will be on your neck.

Why not from this day on make the fight, not only for the principles of true democracy, but for your own political salvation? After all, in 1938, the voters will be the ones who pass upon your fate and they will have in mind the President's assault upon the Supreme Court, upon our form of government, his approval of the sit-down strikes and of lawlessness.

The people of the United States will not quietly submit to the wrecking of their Constitution; to the assault upon the integrity of the Supreme Court; to the destruction of their form of government.

Let the President, John L. Lewis, and the C. I. O. continue on the course which they have marked out, and you will have civil strife throughout the Union.

The President has gone from an open and willful disregard of all of his campaign promises to a repudiation of his oath of office and his obligations to uphold the law, and this he has done in order to obtain his objective, which now stands disclosed as the domination of all industry and commerce and the centralization of all functions of government in the executive department.

Writers like Lawrence, Sullivan, Thompson, and Walter Lippmann, and a host of editorial writers from the great dailies of the cities to the country weeklies, have long been pointing out the end to which his course will lead, and long have they been saying that they did not believe the President was aware of the inevitable results of his actions.

This attitude was charitable, but it was inaccurate and implied that the President was a man of small intellectual attainment, that he was deceived and misled by those who advised him.

Nothing but a lack of the knowledge of the abiding principles of justice, of equality, of a square deal for every man, or a failure to apply that knowledge, can account for the failure of the President to declare for law and order when these strikes first came about.

I ask you to read the article of Lippmann in Saturday's issue of the dailies and note how he, always a friend and an admirer of the President, has at last arrived at the conclusion that the President is seeking to establish a dictatorship.

All this welter of violence and of bloodshed which confronts us, which, beyond question, will come to us, can be avoided, if you men who believe in the principles of the great Democratic Party here and now insist upon the application of those principles to the present situation.

The time has come to repudiate men like Governors Earle, of Pennsylvania; Murphy, of Michigan; and to follow men like Governors Townsend, of Indiana; Cross, of Connecticut; Horner, of Illinois; and last and most unflinching of all, Governor Davey, of Ohio.

Get back of him, declare for law and order, pass the resolution which I introduced and see this threatened trouble fade like mist before the morning sun.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, in considering this bill it is well to bear clearly in mind the purpose of the legislation and not to lose sight of that. The purpose of this legislation is to make owner-operators out of people who have heretofore not been owner-operators, or who, having been owner-operators, have failed in that capacity.

I expect to offer the following amendments which are calculated to promote the purpose of this bill:

(7) Be in such form, and contain such provisions, conditions, and limitations as may be necessary to assure that the borrower will conform to such farming practices and methods as the Secretary may prescribe in order that, during the first 5 years the loan is in effect, the borrower's farming operations may be sufficiently profitable to enable him to carry out successfully the responsibilities of ownership and his undertakings under the loan agreement.

Page 4, strike out lines 24 and 25, and on page 5 strike out lines 1 to 3, inclusive, and insert:

"(6) Provide that the borrower shall not voluntarily assign, sell, or otherwise transfer the farm, or any interest therein, without the consent of the Secretary, and provide that upon involuntary transfer or sale the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable.

"(8) Provide that upon satisfaction of the borrower's obligation, but not less than 20 years after the making of the loan, he shall be entitled to the farm free of any estate or property interest retained by the Secretary to secure the satisfaction of the obligation."

Page 5, line 5, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "except that the final payment of any sum due shall not be accepted if the effect of such acceptance would be to make ineffective the 20-year limitation provided in paragraph (8) of subsection (b) of this section."

The first of these amendments provides that for the first 5 years after the arrangement has been made with the beneficiary of the act he shall be given the advice of the Department and also a certain amount of supervision by the Department in order that he may not only conduct his farm in a farmerlike manner but that he shall conduct it in a businesslike manner.

I heard or read a statement many years ago which I have had occasion to see proved again and again: That if a man were in the position of an employee until 40 years of age and then were to become an employer that the chances are against his making a success. It does not foreclose his success, but it makes the chances of success against him. The beneficiaries of this act will be of two classes: Tenants who never owned a farm, or former owners who for one cause or another lost their farms. I submit to the committee that the chances are against these people paying a 100-percent loan unless they have the most careful supervision and advice. This amendment provides that during the first 5 years of this relationship they shall have the benefit of sound advice and wise supervision.

My second amendment provides that the beneficiary of the act cannot alienate this farm; that is, he cannot sell it during the first 20 years of this relationship.

He cannot pay off his obligation completely for at least 20 years.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. As I understand the gentleman's amendment, he cannot pay it off in less than 20 years?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Why is that?

Mr. BIERMANN. I am going to go into that.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Would that be mandatory? Would he have to carry out the advice of the Department? In other words, would it be mandatory?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think that is something the Secretary ought to work out, but I believe to a large extent it ought to be mandatory.

We are not entering into a strictly business relationship. We are entering into a sort of paternal relationship. Of course, it is not sound business policy to lend 100 percent of the value of property. It is not businesslike to lend money at 3 percent, because that will not pay the cost. If we enter into such a relationship, I contend it is proper for the lending agency to exercise some supervision over the borrower.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Does the gentleman's amendment make it mandatory?

Mr. BIERMANN. I think it does. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS. Has the gentleman considered the possibility in connection with this advice and counsel, which I feel is most important, of allowing the tenant certain credits against the indebtedness if that advice is followed?

Mr. BIERMANN. No; I have not considered that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That would be lending more than 100 percent of the value.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. My colleague is a member of the committee and I know he is anxious to serve the farmers. I do not understand the gentleman has in mind he would actually keep the man from alienating or selling this farm for a period of 20 years?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; exactly.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. Would not that discourage the idea of taking advantage of a Government loan?

Mr. BIERMANN. No; I do not think so.

Mr. MITCHELL of Tennessee. I think it would.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I would prefer not to yield any more, as my remaining time is short.

It has been pointed out here again and again this afternoon that this legislation is going to reach only a small fraction of the potential beneficiaries, at least for a few years. We can hand pick them. I would like to hand pick the kind of people who seriously want to make these farms their long-time homes, and not to enter into speculation. There are two things that have been of great damage to the farming business of the United States; at least, these are two of the biggest items. One is the ups and downs in the prices of the products of the farms. The other, which has been nearly, if not quite, as damaging, has been the ups and downs of the price of the land itself. If we leave this bill as it is, a man may buy a farm today for $50 an acre and if in 6 months he can get $60 or $75 an acre for the farm, under the bill as it is presently written he may sell the farm and, of course, he will. Instead of getting a long-time owner operator of the farm who looks upon this farm as his home and as his dwelling we have a speculator.

We want to recall if we pass this bill and make it law we are going to get the Government into the business of financing the purchase of farms. The Government, in effect, becomes another land buyer and each added buyer tends to raise land prices. That is a bad thing. My amendment will, as far as the beneficiaries of the act are concerned, take the land the Government finances out of the speculative class for 20 years at least. It will make this a bill for the benefit of permanent home owners, and that should be the main purpose of the bill.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. If we take this man out of the speculative class, we would permit his neighbors to speculate on their farms and deprive him of any profit they might make on theirs?

Mr. BIERMANN. Under this bill we are considering just one type of farm and I would rather confine my discussion to that one type.

Mr. LUCAS. Would not the gentleman consider a windfall tax, whereby we would take the profits on all farms rather than take the profits on a single farm?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes. I would be in favor of any kind of practical legislation that would prevent or lessen speculation in farm land.

May I say further that the amendments I propose are precisely in line with the findings of the Farm Tenancy Committee which the President of the United States appointed to investigate this problem, not only in this country but in foreign countries. They have written a report in which they suggest what we should do in regard to this problem of farm tenancy, and among the things they proposed are these two ideas which I have embodied in the two amendments.

Mr. THOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. THOM. I am in sympathy with the general object sought to be attained by the gentleman from Iowa, but let us suppose this instance: Here is a family who locates on a farm and the husband suddenly becomes an invalid and cannot continue the operation of the farm.

Mr. BIERMANN. The bill covers a situation of that kind in another section. My amendment would not preclude that. If a man becomes an invalid or if he dies or if some unforseen thing happens, there is a remedy provided.

Mr. THOM. You would have to have some discretion in the Farm Board.

Mr. BIERMANN. The following is a simple illustration of what may happen in thousands of cases if the credit and mortgage program as now proposed in H. R. 7562 is put into effect and the purchasers are allowed to pay their debts to the Government and sell the land at any time they desire. Let us assume that the reasonable appraised value of the farm is $3,000, and that the Secretary secures the loan by a first mortgage on the property which is to be amortized within 30 years, at 3-percent interest. Under such circumstances the annual payment would be $153, a part of which would be used to reduce the amount of the loan. Within 3 years the tenant purchaser would have repaid the Government approximately $195 on the principal of the $3,000 loan.

Suppose now that land values have risen and a local real-estate operator knows that he can sell this particular farm for $4,000. Obviously, he can make a profit if he can buy the farm for $3,500. Since the tenant purchaser agreed to pay the Government $3,000 for the farm, and has actually paid only $195 on the principal, it is obvious that he also has a chance to make a profit by selling for $3,500. If he accepts the offer made by the real-estate dealer, he can pay the Government the balance of $2,805 and have left $695 in cash, of which $500 is clear profit.

Both the speculator and the farmer have made a $500 profit each on the double transaction. But what has happened to the Government's program of aiding the tenant farmer in becoming an owner? Obviously, it has failed. The tenant purchaser whom the Government started toward home ownership no longer has a farm. The man who now owns the farm may be another speculator or an absentee owner. He may, of course, be an operating farmer, but even so, he has paid $4,000 for a farm at speculative levels which, according to normal appraised value, is worth only $3,000.

Unless there is some kind of restriction in the mortgage or loan contract, which will prevent such a situation from occuring, a Government program of this type will aid in bringing about an increase in land values. Its greatest adverse effect will be at times when speculation is rife, and hence the program will be a direct impetus to speculative booms.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, title I of this bill provides authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to loan $10,000,000 for the first year, $25,000,000 the second year, and $50,000,000 the third year to farm tenants, farm laborers, and sharecroppers to purchase farms. While this is a large amount of money, it will be only a drop in the bucket in comparison to the amount that would be required to make farm owners out of all the farm tenants in this country. At present there are 2,860,000 tenants. There are 40,000 people being added to this class annually. Assuming that the average cost of a self-sustaining farm would be $5,000—and it runs much more than this in the North—only 2,000 tenants in the United States could be financed the first year, 5,000 the second year, and 10,000 the third year, with $50,000,000 appropriated. In other words, the $50,000,000 would only take care of about one-fourth of those dropping into the tenant class every year, and it would provide a farm for only one of every 286 tenants and sharecroppers in the United States. The $10,000,000 will provide loans to purchase only 1 farm for every 1,430 tenants and sharecroppers.

With 2,907 counties in the United States having 300 or more farms each and regarded by the Agriculture Department as agricultural counties, it is evident that it would require approximately $15,000,000 to finance only one tenant in each of these agricultural counties in the United States. It is clearly evident that only a very small percentage of the tenants can be benefited under this legislation and that the vast majority, who might be led to believe that a generous Federal Government will loan them money to purchase a farm, will be disappointed. If you are going to treat them all alike, it would require over $14,000,000,000 to finance the purchase of farms for all the tenants and sharecroppers in the United States. Obviously this cannot be done.

Under the bill as it stands, the Secretary is authorized to loan 100 percent of the purchase price. Such an unsound loaning policy by the Federal Government, in my judgment, cannot be justified.

The serious question involved is, Should the Federal Government embark on an unsound program that will in future years bring demands on Congress to appropriate billions of dollars for this purpose, or should we approach this problem with a more practical loaning policy that would in itself limit the number who might apply for the benefits of this act?

I propose to offer an amendment at the appropriate time to section 3 (a) of title I, to provide that these loans shall not be in excess of 90 percent of the value of the farm. I do not contend that this will make all the loans sound, but it will be a great improvement over the present provision authorizing 100-percent loans. It is a mistake to encourage tenants to assume the burden of ownership before they are financially able to do so. A great many farmers are in a far more favorable position as tenants than they would be as farm owners.

By requiring the tenant who is to be financed to make a down payment of 10 percent, the Government will be saved millions of dollars in possible future losses and the future success of this program will be greatly enhanced. It will encourage thrift to make loans available only to those tenants who are better able to purchase and assume the burden of financial responsibility of operating their own farms. And furthermore, by requiring the 10 percent payment, the prospects are greater for the purchaser to eventually pay off the indebtedness due the Federal Government.

This bill will not solve the farm-tenant problem which is a result, rather than cause, of an economic maladjustment. If we could make farming profitable, the farm-tenant problem would solve itself.

I have 32 counties in my district, which is entirely of an agricultural nature. The State of Nebraska depends solely upon agriculture as it has no natural resources other than fertile soil and water. Of the farmers in my district, 49.3 percent are tenants. I do not believe there is a better class or a more worthy class of farm tenants in the United States than you will find in Nebraska. They are not expecting, neither are they asking, the Federal Government to finance the full purchase price of a farm for them. They realize that some limitation must be placed on Federal expenditures and that they will be called upon as taxpayers to repay their share of the 36 billion dollars of bonds the Federal Government now owes, not to mention any further increases that may be incurred. They realize the Federal Government cannot maintain its stability in continuing indefinitely to spend more than its revenues. They are more interested in legislation that will maintain fair prices on agricultural commodities.

Nebraska last year suffered a loss of $288,000,000 due to the drought. This is more than one-half of the total loss sustained by all of the States in the recently flooded area of the Ohio River. In 1934 we suffered a drought equally as severe, and the 2 years were the worst droughts in over 40 years. In spite of all this, Nebraska as a State has maintained its credit and is one of the few States in the Union that has no bonded indebtedness. It has no State income tax nor State sales tax. Nebraska balances its budget. When we do not have the money we do not spend it. I commend Nebraska's record to you in charting the future financial policy of the Federal Government.

Because of the great distress in the drought area, rehabilitation loans, as provided for in title II of this bill, have been of great assistance in rehabilitating many worthy tenants. In many cases a loan of a few hundred dollars has made it possible for these rehabilitation clients to become self-sustaining on rented farms at less expense to the Federal Government than would have resulted had they been left on the relief rolls and to work on W. P. A. projects.

Under title III funds are authorized for the purchase by the Government of submarginal land. This would be a continuation of the present program and in many States additional purchases are necessary to block together the purchases already made. The objective is to retire this submarginal land from unprofitable crop production and to turn it back to grass and into grazing and forest areas. In purchasing this land the Government will have something to show for the money spent. It will help to relieve crop surpluses, especially in wheat, since in good years this submarginal land helps to swell the price-depressing surplus. Twenty-five percent of the net revenue received by the Secretary from the use of the land will be paid to the respective counties for school and road purposes. This is quite essential inasmuch as a great deal of the taxable property in some counties has been or will be purchased by the Government under this program.

I am supporting titles II, III, and IV of this bill, and I urge that title I be amended to limit the loans to 90 percent of the value of the farm in order that we may approach the farm-tenant problem on a sounder basis. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, although I am speaking on a related subject, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE FORGOTTEN MAN—THE AMERICAN DAIRYMAN

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] last week made reference to the sad plight of the dairymen in the North and Northeast. This picture he painted was not too pessimistic. The American dairyman, be it said, is making a more important contribution to the health and welfare of the American people than any other type of farmer. He is making an essential contribution to the physical growth and development of American childhood and youth. It is important to remember in these days when we are spending hundreds of millions of dollars on soil conservation that his is the only type of farming that conserves soil fertility. Nor is his any seasonal job. He works from dawn to dark 365 days of the year. The assessments on his property require him to pay $90,000,000 annually in taxes. The dairymen of the North and East have spent $250,000,000 in perfecting their herds and in insuring the sanitary production and marketing of milk. He educates his worth-while child and from this group is recruited the American leadership in professions, science, art, and politics. Despite all this record of service to the Nation, he is today threatened with social and economic extinction. If present conditions continue he and his will be scattered to the four winds, and the professionals, exploiters, and economic parasites will be "in the saddle."

THE FORGOTTEN DAIRYMAN

The condition of the corn, cotton, and wheat farmers has, so far as the Government can do it, been aided and promoted. But on the head of the dairyman has fallen in these troublesome times all the evils of an arrogant and stupid bureaucracy. The original A. A. A. included dairy products as one of the basic commodities. Under the urge of the late Rex Tugwell, now gone to sweeter camping grounds, Secretary Wallace's initial object was to hamper the dairyman by destroying the solidarity gained through cooperative organizations. This procedure failed, but it left the dairyman exhausted and with no governmental remedies applied to his desperate condition.

No sooner was the program out of the way than the dairyman was placed on the altar of foreign trade by the present scheme of trade agreements. In these agreements he was sold over the Lakes and across the seas by the foreign trade policy of the administration. Year by year this foreign encroachment on the market of the dairyman, both from this continent and Europe, has been increasing in volume. Last year the shipment of dairy products to the United States from sources where sanitary production is entirely unknown, amounted to $16,102,954. The foregoing facts are now history, and I merely review them so that the House may have a picture of these recent years.

UNDERPAID AND EXPLOITED

The economic vise in which the dairyman finds himself is due to the fact that he has been unable to obtain a living price for his product. This has not been due to overproduction, although at times the production of dairy products just about balances the national demand. The fact is that this marketing of dairy products is in the grip of an unrestrained savage monopoly which reaches into practically every part of continental America. This monopoly is composed of the National Dairy Products Corporation, which corporation, acting in collaboration with the Borden Co. and the Plymouth Cheese Board, of Plymouth, Wis., fix with inflexible certainty the amount that the dairy producer shall get for his product. These outfits hold the dairyman in the hollow of their hand, and, while these great corporations are paying high dividends on their very much watered stock and millions to their officers and lobbyists in salaries, they give the dairyman starvation prices for his products. I again make bold to say that the dairyman, under the manipulations of these professionals, will soon cease to be an economic and social factor in America.

A CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY

The first phase of this criminal monopoly to which I wish to call your attention is the price-fixing performance which for many years has been going on at Plymouth, Wis., principally through the Plymouth Cheese Exchange. I call the attention of the House to the report of the Federal Trade Commission made April 30, 1928, and printed as Public Document No. 95. It appears that this Plymouth Exchange meets weekly and is made up entirely of dealers and processors. The dominating influences on the board are the National Dairy Products Corporation, the Borden Co., and the "packer kings", Swift & Co., and Armour & Co. The satellites of these outfits meet before the alleged market day and agree on a price of cheese for the following week. The next day a meeting of the board is held and the fiction of bids with no deliveries is gone through with. The price of cheese is thus fixed for the following week by these criminal monopolists and the 140,000 dairy farmers who are delivering milk to cheese factories throughout the United States receive a price for their milk at the cheese factory based on the weekly price of cheese fixed as I have stated.

There are 160,000 farmers delivering milk to evaporated milk plants in the United States, and the price they receive is fixed on a formula in which the price of cheese at Plymouth, Wis., is a large factor.

In the Chicago milkshed at least 20,000 dairy farmers are delivering milk for fluid purposes in the city of Chicago, and they are paid for their milk on a formula which takes into consideration the price of cheese at Plymouth, Wis., fixed by the "packer kings" and their associates. In the Nation generally there are 2,500,000 additional dairymen whose economic life is threatened by this brazen procedure.

The price of milk products is interdependent. When the price of either butter, cheese, or fluid milk is beaten down, it affects the whole price structure in every part of the country. It affects the well-being and security of every dairyman in the Nation. And so I charge today that there exists at Plymouth, Wis., a criminal conspiracy against the well-being of a great mass of our people, which is, in fact, holding this great army of dairy producers in a state of almost complete serfdom. The Federal Trade Commission has made repeated findings on this question, and yet the executive branch of our Government and those officials in charge of enforcing the Antitrust Act do not function. They permit this economic homicide to go on without hindrance.

THE ROBBER BARONS

I refer the Members of the House to the report of the Federal Trade Commission, made in September 1936, where it reiterates former findings, and states that the price of twins cheese, which is also the basis of determining the price of fluid milk to dairymen, was fixed by the sales offers made on the Plymouth, Wis., Cheese Exchange by a subsidiary of Swift & Co., a subsidiary of the National Dairy Products Corporation, a subsidiary of the Borden Co., and a subsidiary of the Armour Co. If the Federal Trade Commission does not have jurisdiction over this question, the query naturally arises as to whether or not they called it to the attention of the Attorney General's office. Three times this Commission has gone to the well on this and made findings, and yet on March 2, this year, the Commission sent out a new press release, which only promised further investigation. I make bold to call upon the Federal Trade Commission to pursue this inquiry to its logical conclusion and to call into play the full power of law enforcement against the "packer kings" and the other robber barons, who are, in fact, destroying one of the most essential and worth-while farm groups.

THE DUTY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

I likewise call upon the Attorney General, whose record in the field of criminal-law enforcement is greatly commended and admired by me, to turn loose the G-men of his Antitrust Division against these greedy monopolists who are robbing the American dairyman blind. I suggest to the Federal Trade Commission and the Attorney General that they stand not upon the order of their going, but go at once and land some of these criminal parasites behind the bars of Leavenworth prison, or some other convenient Federal domicile.

My remarks on this question would be inconclusive if I did not enumerate more in detail the outfits which are destroying the dairyman. Let me briefly call the roll on some of these participants in this criminal conspiracy.

First, there are the so-called "packer kings", Swift and Armour, and others of their ilk. They toil not, neither do they spin, but even during the lean years of the depression they showed profits well up into the hundred millions. Just now they are engaged in a frontal attack on the butter market by exploiting the manufacture and sale of synthetic oleomargarine in place of life-giving butter. You have all had their propaganda on your desks and know whereof I speak.

THE MONOPOLY CALLED THE NATIONAL DAIRY PRODUCTS CORPORATION

Perhaps the most colossal outfit in this field is the National Dairy Products Corporation, which was born in 1923, and is now in control of, and has acquired by purchase, 238 organizations which have to do with the marketing of dairy products. They reach into every nook and corner of the land, and for good measure, so they may give the American dairyman foreign competition, they have plants in eight foreign countries. The report of the Federal Trade Commission, filed with the Speaker of the House on September 30, 1936, shows that during 1935 48 officers and executives of the National Dairy Products Corporation received in excess of $15,000 each, and that the total salaries of this group amounted to $1,129,000. The average salary of these men came to more than $25,000 annually. The president of this company received an annual salary of $108,000; J. L. Kraft, an officer, received $75,000 annually, and L. A. Von Bomel, of the Sheffield Farms, a subsidiary of the National Dairy Products Corporation, received an annual salary of $60,000. These were the salaries which appeared on paper, but doubtless the amount they received in bonuses and from other sources amounted to as much more. It is safe to say that they disburse annually for lobbyists and entertainment in various State capitals and for political lawyers as high as $5,000,000. All through the years and through the depression they paid liberal dividends on their preferred and common stock, this at a time when the dairyman was going over the hill to the poorhouse. This quasi criminal outfit has a stranglehold on the milksheds of the country.

I charge that the National Dairy Products Corporation is in direct collusion with Borden, the "packer kings", and other distributors in fixing the price paid to the producer.

THE FUNCTION OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

I have been carefully through the findings of the Federal Trade Commission in the various milksheds as to the activities of this outfit. May I say that I have always had a high regard for the Federal Trade Commission as a fact-finding body? I have been inclined to class them with the United States engineers in their loyalty and devotion to the public service. But I confess a feeling of disappointment in reading their report. In some respects it is haphazard, and its conclusions are often mere surface findings. It does not live up to the high traditions of the Federal Trade Commission. Reading between the lines it is apparent to me that monopoly exists in most of the milksheds of the country, and the National Dairy Products Corporation and the Bordens are in command.

It appears, too, from the corespondence set forth in the report that these outfits have divided up the various milksheds like captive provinces and have thus regulated the price the dairyman gets for his product. This question is, of course, infinitely more important than any partisan consideration, but the story is rife, and will not down, that Field Marshal Farley has placed his hand on the staff of the Commission. We all know the firm of Davies, Busick & Richardson, lawyers, are the attorneys for the National Dairy Products Corporation. Joseph B. Davies, of this firm, is now Ambassador to Russia and Donald Richberg, who was the last potentate of the defunct N. R. A., is likewise a member of this firm. Mr. Richberg is said to be the Presidential choice for the Supreme Court vacancy and is now said to occupy the position of chief adviser and "brain truster" extraordinary to the distinguished occupant of the White House. I am curious to know how much the National Dairy Products Corporation pays this firm of lawyers and for what.

The fact is the National Dairy Products Corporation has gone into 300 communities and by oppressive methods, which were characteristic of the lush days of the Standard Oil Co., broke down the price structure to the dairymen and so holds him eternally in a vise. This inference of mine would be made by any jury, and the statement that the National Dairy Products Corporation only use such a percentage of national production, as appears from this report, would seem to come from the lips of the political lawyers who represent this outfit.

THE BORDEN GROUP

Hand and hand with the National Dairy Products Corporation goes the Borden Co., which now controls 200 companies in every branch of the dairy industry. There are 19 States, as well as Canada, England, and Sweden, in which this company is active. I call attention again to the foreign affiliates of this company. They are used, of course, to stimulate foreign imports and to break down the price structure to the dairyman. The surface salaries of this outfit amount to more than a million dollars a year. The president, Arthur W. Milburn, receives $95,000 a year. This company is especially concentrated in the metropolitan areas, where the spread between what the producer gets and the farmer gets is little short of murderous. The correspondence printed by the Federal Trade Commission established conclusively that this company is acting in violation of the antitrust act continually. The methods of this company are notoriously corrupt and oppressive. They maintain lavish suites at the various capitals and you can always have the Borden lobbyist pointed out to you. He usually sticks up like a sore thumb. Last year the Borden profits were the best in its history.

The foregoing is true of the National Dairy Products Corporation. Last year their income was higher than ever before. Their net profit, after charges and dividends on preferred stock had been deducted, amounted to $13,000,282.38.

I have great confidence in the integrity and high ability of Messrs. Davis and Ayers, of the Federal Trade Commission. They were former Members of the House. I was delighted when the President appointed them to the Federal Trade Commission, for I knew they would carry the banner for real law enforcement in the interests of the people. I have not lost my confidence in these men. But I am calling to the attention of the country and the Commission the foregoing facts and hope that investigations of milksheds where the National Dairy Products Corporation is concerned will no longer be perfunctory or casual. In doing that I speak for the dairymen of my district and of the country. Not long since the president of the Dairyman's League in New York State, Mr. Fred A. Sexauer, called the attention of the dairymen of New York State to the fact that dealers expect, through coercion, threats and propaganda to force farmers to protect dealers' interests. Mr. Sexauer knew whereof he spoke. There is a new milk law in New York State, born of agitation and distrust, and obviously it is the intention of these monopolistic outfits like the National Dairy Products Corporation and Bordens to endeavor to take the law in their own hands. I particularly invite that situation to the attention of the Federal Trade Commission and ask that they go into action on it.

A CHALLENGE TO ORGANIZED SOCIETY

In conclusion let me state the conditions I have described are a challenge to organized government. They concern public health and a vast number of dairyman who have their backs to the wall by reason of this monopolistic performance. The legal machinery is adequate for disciplining these exploiters and the time is now ripe when they must be shown that organized government and the law dominates this Nation. The Congress and the country will watch with interest and concern the performance of the Attorney General and the Federal Trade Commission in this situation. [Applause.]

FARM-TENANCY BILL

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Chairman, my congratulations to our colleague from New York [Mr. CULKIN.] He has put his finger on the difficulty and explained why we have farm tenancy.

We have heard eloquent speeches from the Chairman of this Committee, from the Speaker of this House, and from the always eloquent gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. The real reason for farm tenancy was correctly stated by Mr. CULKIN.

I hope you are all familiar with Charles Beard's history which he calls the Rise of American Civilization. In opening his chapter on agriculture, he says:

> In every age and in every clime where civilization has passed its most primitive form, there has always appeared a small group of men devoted to finance, commerce, and industry, and this group of men has always borne down with terrific oppression upon the group that derives its sustenance from agriculture.

When our Speaker this afternoon so eloquently told us of the conditions in Alabama and described the condition of those people who are the descendants of the Huguenots and the Cavaliers, the best blood of America, I could not help but wonder why they had lost their heritage. It is a well known fact that following the Revolutionary War the finest strip of land on earth was from the Alleghenies west to the Mississippi River and from the Lakes to the Gulf, afterward increased by the Louisiana Purchase and extended later by the acquisition of Texas and the great Northwest. Why did the descendants of these Cavaliers and Huguenots lose their lands? For the very reason that Beard so graphically described—on account of the group devoted to finance, commerce, and industry who, today, have borne down upon the group that lives on the farm as described so eloquently by the gentleman from New York.

Farm tenancy is a symptom, it is not the disease. A few weeks ago I had an acute pain in my side. The physician looked me over. He did not give me medicine to kill that pain, he put me on a table, cut me open, found out the cause, removed it, and this is what we should do with respect to farm tenancy. What has caused it? The very thing that our colleague from New York has so graphically described.

It surely is not necessary to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole House to the fact that this bill under consideration is no cure for the farm problem. It will not even scratch the surface. This farm bill is a mere gesture. The farm problem is a serious one which has been more than a century and a half in the making. Soon it must be met and solved by some substantial and far-reaching action quite unlike our emergency legislation. The American farmer must really be put on a parity with industry or he will sink to peasantry. By "parity", I mean income for labor and investment and resultant products equivalent to that which is the reward in industry and commerce. Farm tenantry is not even one of the major problems confronting the men and women who are producing the food and fiber upon which America is living, and upon which industry thrives. Millions upon millions of acres of land were given by the Government, practically without cost, to the ancestors of many of the present tenants. Conditions that made tenants of them, instead of landowners, are still here. These conditions are not corrected by this bill, nor can they be changed by any similar bill. Tenancy conditions are very different in sections of our country. In my section, good farmers prefer to rent lands because they make more money and have full use of earnings, avoiding taxes and interest. It is now hard to find a good farm for rent. In some sections tenancy seems to be a form of peonage. The same legislation cannot be curative in all situations. The Committee on Agriculture of the House spent over 12 weeks, sitting almost every day, considering practically nothing but farm tenancy. It was the longest discussion of one phase of the farm situation that has occurred in that committee since I have been a member of it.

THE FIRST TENANT BILL

While I do not consider the problem a major one, nevertheless, since farm tenancy increases year by year, it is a matter of concern and should be studied. It will continue, in spite of all the bills of this class we may pass. Major problems facing agriculture should first be correctly solved. There are two theories advanced for corrective legislation on the farm-tenant problem, and each was forcefully presented by its proponents who appeared before the Committee on Agriculture. The one pressed hardest was the plan by which the Government would buy tracts of land in tenant sections and resell farms to selected tenants. The original idea was to invest $100,000,000 a year for 10 years, or a total of $1,000,000,000 to be provided by the Government for the solution of this minor problem. This parallels the Russian system, making the Government a superlandlord. It would have been a great help to those who have found themselves in possession of enormous holdings of land of little value. I doubt if it would have helped the small farmer. This plan contemplated the supervision of the tenants from the fountain of all wisdom on agriculture, namely, Washington, D. C. Had regulations been adopted similar to those used in Resettlement, the tenant would have been obliged to secure approval from the National Capital for every improvement planned and for each building that he wished to construct. These plans were based on the assumption that Government would supply, as leaders or preceptors, men of perfect judgment and wide practical knowledge. My observation leads me to suggest that men and women engaged in advising others should first qualify themselves by successfully operating under similar conditions.

One idea discussed at great length, incorporated in some of the prints of the bill, was that the tenant should not be allowed to sell the land once he entered the "service" and made payments thereon, until many years had passed. Those who proposed this kind of treatment acted upon the theory that tenantry had been brought about by the carelessness of the tenants; that they had not kept their land, had wasted it and what it had produced. The facts are that tenantry has grown, and will continue to grow, from causes that cannot be corrected by the tenant.

THE PRESENT TENANT BILL

A substitute bill was offered providing for a Government loan fund for those who wanted to buy land and become landlords. This bill, now pending before this House, is a compromise bill and provides that $10,000,000 for the first year may be loaned under certain conditions to tenants selected by the Department of Agriculture which is given the unrestricted right to acquire the lands for the experiment. The second year $25,000,000 to be devoted to such expenditures, and the third year fifty millions. There are about 3,200 counties in the United States; it is safe to say that portions of this money will be desired by nearly 3,000 counties. This would provide one farm of $3,000 in value for some one lucky tenant who wants to become a landowner in each of the 3,000 counties, provided the money is equitably distributed. It is like trying to dip up the ocean with a bucket; it will not make even an impression. It will be difficult to administer such an act impartially and to the satisfaction of the poor farmers. Next year there will be $25,000,000 to spend, that will be two and one-half farms in each county, and the third year it will be five farms to a county at a valuation of $3,000. The facts of the case are, that in most of the Pacific Northwest and much of the North, not very much of a farm can be purchased for $3,000. Still I believe that it is best to pass the bill and stop the clamor for this type of legislation.

OBJECTIONS TO THE BILLS

I am free to admit that I opposed the first bills for the Government's purchasing tracts of land, and then trying to fit the tenants into the picture. I think that was the height of folly, especially for the West. I have no accusations to make and no time to state the fears expressed to me, but how easy it would be for certain people or companies owning tracts of land to make the proper showing to certain officials, and to secure from them the sale of their lands to the Government. How easily the worn-out, valueless, heavily eroded land could be sold to the Government for real money and then unloaded on a poor tenant compelled to assume the burden for repaying his "paternal" Government. The poor fellow might be bilked by the very Government that was pretending to help him. There might have been very great danger of fraud or charges and suspicion contaminating every movement of such a plan for solving the tenant problem. I am glad that system was not adopted.

I dreaded such results more than I feared the situation pictured by our colleague from Iowa, and others, that the farm tenant, after buying a place with Government help, would sell the land when he could make a few dollars. We ought not to prevent the tenant, who has struggled through years without any margin of profit, from realizing a little profit of his own. I, for one, would not blame him when he can have $1,000 in the clear, or whatever he may think sufficient, if he should sell his farm to another. I see no harm in allowing the farmer to be a free agent.

FARM PRICES MUST BE STABILIZED

The real difficulty of the whole agricultural situation will not be even remotely affected by the passage and enforcement of this bill. Among the farmers' serious problems I would list first the uncertainty of price for his products. When he plants a field of corn or an acre of wheat the farmer has to take all chances on weather conditions that may ruin the crop at any time from planting to harvest; and then, when the product is ready for the markets, he is obliged to sell it in competition with the same product from all the leading countries of the world. Especially is this true of wheat. Somebody has said the farmer is a gambler; indeed, I know of no one who takes bigger chances than the wheat farmer, with smaller opportunity to make a winning. I can see no solution for the future except some sort of fixed and guaranteed price. I do not know that the country is ready for it; I do not know that it could be enforced even if we enacted it into law; but certainly from ocean to ocean and in every meeting of groups where farmers' problems are discussed, the question of a reasonable price for leading agricultural products should be under discussion. The 12 weeks spent on the farm-tenant bill, I think, could have been better devoted to consideration of the problem of prices on leading farm products than so many hours spent attempting to get the Government into the real-estate business by purchasing large tracts for the purpose of settling tenants thereon.

SPECULATION IS THE MAJOR FARM PROBLEM

The ever-normal granary is not an idle dream; it is a suggestion worthy of the most careful study. There should be held in this country, at all times, sufficient products, like wheat, to carry us over any reasonable period of crop failure. Wheat, corn, rice, and other products of this nature lend themselves easily to storage and can be carried over from year to year for a reasonable length of time. The plan would aid materially in wiping out the agricultural depressions and levelling down the high spots. When the farmers of the Pacific Northwest harvested their crop in the fall of 1936, all creditors immediately commenced to push hard for their money. Wheat at that time was about 60 cents a bushel at local stations. Many of the farmers, perhaps most of them, were obliged to sell. Wheat later in the fall and early winter went up above the dollar mark at the local stations. That rise of 40 to 50 cents did many of the producers no good—it was money made by the speculators, the warehouse men, who had been able to buy of the distressed farmer and hold for the higher prices. For several weeks, now, in the leading markets of the United States, the price has ranged around $1.10 to $1.30 a bushel, bringing to the farmer something like 85 cents to a dollar. Should the full crop mature, as we now have in prospect, again there will be a depression in prices, unless some unforeseen event occurs.

Many of the farmers will be obliged to market their crop at 75 or 80 cents a bushel, which will leave very small margin of profit, if any. That leads me to the conclusion that there must be some legislation wiping out the speculation in grains. During the years of the World War I was a large producer of wheat in Oregon. We had a set, firm market in Chicago at that time, for the gamblers were not buying or selling. They were not allowed to operate under the law. I took chances when I planted my wheat on the quantity of the crop, but I knew the price I was going to get for it when it was ready for the market. Those were the 3 most happy years of my life in the farming industry. The Government had fixed the price at cost with a reasonable margin of profit. Ever since I have wondered why if such laws can be passed and enforced in times of war they will not serve in times of peace? Speculation in farm products is the first and major farm problem.

TAXES THE SECOND PROBLEM

Another problem, and one that seems to grow worse with the years, is that of taxes, which are just the same whether the farmer has a good year or a bad one, whether prices are high or low. The farmer's possessions out in plain sight are tangible and the assessor has no difficulty in finding them. He can see livestock and land and all the machinery that the farmer has. The assessor fixes the value, and the farmer pays on a higher percentage of value than any other taxpayer. All government activities grow more expensive year by year. The merchant must ask a little more for his goods that the farmer has to buy because he, too, pays more taxes. Farmers' mowers, reapers, or binders cost more because that merchant has to pay the extra charges. In other words, the extra high taxes in city, county, State and Nation are passed on to the man who cannot pass them on—the farmer. He goes ahead and does not and cannot question the price of anything, neither that which he buys nor what he sells. An investigation of the trusts which make farm machinery has been too long delayed. Why does Government permit these prices to soar?

Recently I made a study of the cost of electricity to consumers, comparing Portland and Tacoma. I ascertained that the city of Portland pays about $5,000,000 a year more than it would pay if it had a publicly owned plant operated like that in Tacoma. Those $5,000,000 are paid by the citizens and businessmen of Portland. The merchants of Portland collect them from their customers, some of whom are the farmers, who pay much of that $5,000,000 in increased costs of what they buy, and lowered prices of what they sell.

Several years ago, when Governor of the State, I started a campaign to remove all State taxes from real estate by substituting income and other taxes; I met with many difficulties. I am delighted to note that now, some 15 years later, the goal toward which I struggled in the years gone by has been reached and Oregon levies no taxes upon real property for the maintenance of State government. Real property should pay a reasonable tax, but much of the expense of city and county governments should come from sources other than real estate.

INTEREST RATES ANOTHER PROBLEM

Another ever-present problem on a farm is interest. I have spoken so often in the last 5 years on the floor of this House on the subject of interest rates, that probably there is nothing new to be added. I do desire again to emphasize my belief that interest, unconscionably high interest, is largely the cause of our difficulties today. Our capitalistic system, which has developed such a useful, valuable, pleasant civilization, is based on interest higher than the increase of wealth. It is such a cancerous, deep-seated growth that the only way the present capitalistic civilization can survive is occasional periods of depression in which large amounts of capitalization are wiped out by repudiation and compositions. Business starts up again and goes on until interest has once more brought its evil results, and another depression follows. In other words, the depression cycle seems to be a part of the economic system, for when obligations draw interest beyond the increase of wealth it is only a question of time until those obligations become so oppressive and the annual contribution for interest each year is so large that it cannot be paid. The farmer, being the ultimate consumer and in a business requiring borrowed money, is in a position to bear the brunt. He takes the heavy load resulting from these interest charges above and beyond the increase of wealth. No interest beyond the increase of wealth should be charged or collected on long-time obligations. The one who contributes only his money and demands 100-percent security and takes none of the risks of the business should justly receive only the amount that would approximate the increase of wealth which is usually calculated at about 2 percent a year.

I deeply regret the refusal of this administration to assist in holding the reduction of interest in the Federal land bank to 3½ percent for another year. I realize the fact that the Federal land bank has several millions in outstanding bonds which are drawing 4 percent and more interest, and most of these bonds are not yet callable. The farmers of today ought not to pay for the governmental mistakes of yesterday.

I cannot see now, and never could see, any justification in requiring the borrower to invest 5 percent of the amount of his loan in stock in the loaning association. The same exaction is made from the producer who is obliged to borrow through the Crop Production Association. I never have been able to obtain figures from the Farm Credit Administration as to what portion of that 5 percent exacted from borrowers is lost through bad loans, but my observation is that the loss of this stock is 100 percent to many borrowers. This is not the fault of the farmer but of the method. The result is that many who borrow money on land from the Federal Government at 4 percent pay more than 5 percent for that money. Those who object to the reduced interest rate never mention the 5-percent forced investment.

I know the Farm Credit Administration constantly issues newspaper releases showing the large amounts of money loaned farmers through various governmental agencies. I have no way of comparing these figures with the amounts lent by all agencies prior to 1929. I daresay, if figures could be secured, it would be found that the amount lent through the Production Credit Corporation and the Farm Credit Administration is only a small percentage of the amounts loaned to farmers by banks, insurance companies, and private individuals prior to the catastrophe of 1929. The Government, through its lending agencies, has made rules so stringent, and the demand for securities so severe, that many who would like to secure farm loans have been unable to do so. Many a farmer who would like to negotiate a loan through the Crop Production Association is unable to get it because he cannot meet the severe conditions exacted by the Government. I believe the Government should use every force and power available to keep farm interest rates down, and there are plenty of powers available if they were used. So I name that as another real farm problem which is not even seriously considered at this time, and through this bill.

TRANSPORTATION COSTS A PROBLEM

Transportation is another ever-present problem to the average farmer. The wheat regions of the West are subject to an excessively high toll from transportation lines which move the wheat from local warehouses to mills and water terminals. When the World War was on, freight rates were on an average of about 50 percent less than they are today. Formerly, before the war, I could ship a bushel of wheat from my ranch to tidewater for 9 cents. Those rates have been advanced at different times until today it costs over 15 cents a bushel.

The Interstate Commerce Commission is supposed equitably to adjust transportation rates. They seem to be convinced that their chief duty is to recognize a rate schedule sufficiently high to earn money to pay interest and dividends upon inflated valuations. It has been estimated that if the water could be squeezed out of the stock and bonds of the transportation lines, freight rates could be reduced by one-third.

REAL FARM LEGISLATION NEEDED

I have set forth briefly what seem to me to be the real farm problems. I have done this to explain why I think the pending bill will be of very little value. Those few who receive the preferential benefits will have to struggle along under the same handicaps now making farming difficult and hazardous.

I sincerely hope some farm legislation of real value and widespread benefit can be offered this body. When this bill passes and becomes a law, I hope that the result will be beneficial. I would be sorry indeed to learn that this is offered and pressed for passage to still the demand for real farm legislation. This act cannot justly be called the "Farm Security Act of 1937." That is a misnomer. The act covers only a very small portion of a broad field. Farm security legislation has not yet come before this session. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KINZER].

Mr. KINZER. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe much argument is needed to impress the membership not only with the desirability but the necessity for making some approach to the problem here presented.

I am in entire agreement with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE] when he expressed his judgment with respect to the provision of the bill providing for the lending of Government money up to the full value of the land purchased by the tenant farmer, who is the man sought to be benefited. I have always thought that when you lent the full price, it was not a loan any more, but a sale, and if we are to follow the suggestion laid down by the Speaker, as well as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], we must realize there is an element of thrift, as well as one of ability, to be considered by the local committee, and I do not think it is wise for us to incorporate in the bill a provision to lend up to the full value, although the local committee may approve a loan for less than the value. If the desirable tenants have a will to accomplish something and to purchase a farm, they should have some part of the fund which is intended to be used, and, following the example of Denmark, 90 percent would be the limit of the loan.

As I have said, I am in entire accord with the suggestion of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], and I think an amendment limiting such a loan to 90 percent of the purchase price is a good one.

I believe it is absolutely necessary for the Government to make a start and to grant some assistance, although with the amount of $10,000,000, when divided and spread over the entire Nation, will be very small for the first year. However, a beginning can be made, and, while this amount may not buy many farms throughout the country, it will be a start and provide an experiment which will be helpful in approaching a wise solution of the farm-tenant problem. [Applause.]

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, on September 21, 1936, the President addressed a letter to Senator BANKHEAD, of Alabama, suggesting preparation of plans to meet the farm-tenant problem, and in the letter stated:

> Thoughtful people everywhere have been gravely concerned with the steady increase in farm tenancy from 1880 to 1935. Since the earliest days of their history it has been an ideal of the American people that every American should have an ownership interest in land or in some other means of production.
> Despite this fundamental objective, we have seen farm tenancy increase relative to farm ownership decade by decade. An enduring agricultural civilization must be built on the firm foundation of home and farm ownership.
> Any long-time improvement of the welfare of the Nation and of farm people involves improvement of the tenancy situation.
> The tenancy problem in the United States cannot be solved overnight. But through Government financing of land purchased by tenants, other countries, notably Ireland and Denmark, have substantially increased farmer ownership of farm land.
> I think we need some such approach. It should give tenants who have demonstrated their ability to manage land an opportunity to buy farms on long-time terms at moderate interest rates.

On October 10, 1936, the President, in a speech delivered in Omaha, Nebr., said:

> It is a further part of our long-time farm policy to attack the evil of farm tenancy. In this we have already made a good beginning with lower interest rates and better prices. We are preparing legislation, in cooperation with farm leaders, to submit to the Congress in January to help solve this problem. We cannot, as a Nation, be content until we have reached the ultimate objective of every farm family owning its own land.

After the election, on January 6, 1937, the President delivered before a joint session of the two Houses of Congress his annual message, in which he stated:

> There are far-reaching problems still with us for which democracy must find solutions if it is to consider itself successful.

And further said:

> For example, many millions of Americans still live in habitations which not only fail to provide the physical benefits of modern civilization but breed disease and impair the health of future generations. The menace exists not only in the slum areas of the very large cities, but in many smaller cities as well. It exists on tens of thousands of farms, in varying degrees, in every part of the country.
> Another example is the prevalence of an un-American type of tenant farming. I do not suggest that every farm family has the capacity to earn a satisfactory living on its own farm. But many thousands of tenant farmers—indeed most of them—with some financial assistance and with some advice and training, can be made self-supporting on land which can eventually belong to them. The Nation would be wise to offer them that chance instead of permitting them to go along as they do now, year after year, with neither future security as tenants nor hope of ownership of their homes nor expectation of bettering the lot of their children.

The figures in the 1935 census of agriculture show that there are approximately 2,865,000 tenant farmers in the United States. These are farmers who rent all of the land they operate. They represent more than 42 percent of all the farmers in the country. In addition to these 2,865,000 tenants, we have about 689,000 part owners. These part owners are farmers who own part of the land they operate and rent part of it. They represent 10 percent of all our farmers. Hence, we are faced with the fact that 52 percent—more than half—of all the farmers in the United States rent all or part of the land they farm. An additional 1 percent of our farmers are hired managers. Consequently, only 47 percent of the 6,812,000 farmers, enumerated by the census of 1935, own all of their land.

Realizing the magnitude of the problem, the President appointed a special committee headed by the Secretary of Agriculture and composed of farm leaders, experts, and other distinguished citizens, and directed the committee to make a careful study of the problem to the end that certain recommendations for action might be made. Upon completing its investigation and study the committee filed its report and recommended the enactment of legislation at the present session of Congress. Early in this session H. R. 8 was introduced by the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture and was referred to and received the attention of that committee. Extensive hearings were held and many officials, experts, farm leaders, interested citizens, and groups of citizens were heard, and the committee had the benefit of the findings of the committee appointed by the President. Several members of the committee appeared and gave us the benefit of their opinion as to the kind of measure which should be enacted.

In the Seventy-fourth Congress the House Committee on Agriculture held hearings on two bills, H. R. 7018 and S. 2367, but no action was taken at that time. The bill now under consideration is the outgrowth of these long and extensive hearings. I am sure, therefore, that the members of the Committee on Agriculture who have sat through these extensive hearings and protracted executive sessions are impressed with the profound importance of the basic and fundamental problem involved and of the absolute necessity for its ultimate solution.

This bill seeks to deal with a grave social and vitally important economic problem which is national in its scope. I am not afraid that the membership of this House will underrate the importance of the problem with which we are now dealing. I am not afraid that we will forget those in the rural areas of our country who are not able to scratch out even a bare existence on small and infertile farms and in areas which have been devastated by floods and drought and erosion; those on the hillsides and on the ragged edge of swamp lands far from the stream of commerce and the eyes of the world. I am not afraid that amid the conflicts and bewilderments of the world in which we live that the Democratic Party and its leadership will forget the destitution and poverty of those who are helpless to help themselves in the rural sections of this great country, but, on the other hand, I believe that it will reach out the strong arm of this Government to lift them from their submerged insecurity and dire destitution and take them from submarginal lands and aid them in reaching the goal of every true American farmer—that of obtaining and owning a farm home upon which he and his family may earn a livelihood and enjoy some of the blessings of modern life. This administration possesses the power and the capacity for sensible decision and quick action. While we may not hope for an immediate solution of the problem with which we are now dealing, at least, we must take this step to bring help and hope to those who have in the past been forgotten.

While the amount herein authorized to be appropriated is wholly inadequate, it will at least eliminate in some degree the poverty and economic insecurity of a vital part of our population.

I am sure that no one would suggest that this is a solution of the problem which today faces these destitute rural people, yet at the same time it is an important part of a well-rounded program for agriculture. It will do much through the years to retard the growth of tenancy and to relieve a situation which has been accentuated by an economic collapse. I realize that even a gift of fertile farm land will not in itself mean security. We must in addition stabilize farm income and protect our farmers from wild speculations and extreme fluctuations in commodity prices and land values if we are to find an adequate answer to this pressing problem. The evils of farm tenancy are a national disgrace and land speculation and price fluctuation are the greatest foes of farm ownership. We have in the past few years had at least some degree of stability in commodity prices and land values and now in a modest way we are seeking to lessen the evils of farm tenancy and to improve our system of land tenure.

As a remedy for the present ills this bill is, of course, wholly inadequate and insufficient. For this reason I preferred certain provisions which were stricken from the original bill but as most legislation is the result of compromise I shall gladly support the measure as reported by the committee in the hope that some progress may be made and some security may be brought to those who will receive the benefits of the provisions of this measure. Even though we may not help many, we will at least give a ray of hope to those who are now helpless.

In order to impress upon you the importance of the problem, may I call attention to the fact that 2,865,155 farms were operated by tenants in 1935, and to the fact that between 1925 and 1935 tenancy has increased 40,255 annually, and during the years of 1930–35 increase has been at the rate of 40,158 annually? To further impress upon you the magnitude of the problem, if we assume that $4,000 per tenant farmer is to be invested, it would require, at the rate of increase during the past 5 years, an appropriation of $160,632,000 per year merely to take care of the increased number of tenants, to say nothing of the 2,865,155 other tenants in the country. Even if we could stop the increase and appropriate the sum of $50,000,000 annually to reduce the number of tenant farmers already in existence, spending $4,000 on each tenant farmer, it would require 230 years to eliminate tenancy in the United States. It is, therefore, plain to see that this is a problem of stupendous proportion and is one which will not be solved in this generation, yet all fair-minded men will agree that we should do something to help those who are most worthy in this great group of our citizens. We should adopt a long-time program, a practical program, which will make the tenants' climb to ownership easier and their security more certain.

Many of these tenants have once known and enjoyed the pride of ownership but, due to no fault of their own, were forced to fall back into tenancy. If our system is improved and agriculture is made profitable, these men and women will again take their proper places in American life. We must, therefore, improve and perfect the system under which they are to labor and give them another chance to prove their real worth. We must expand our foreign trade and develop our domestic markets, and give to those who labor in the field a degree of security yet unknown. This must be done if we are to check the growth of tenancy and save those who are now fighting to hold onto their farm homes. Many of our landlords are now only tenants, mortgagors in possession, working for those who hold encumbrances upon their farms. The plight of the American farmer is a challenge to our statesmanship. When our great President pointed out that one-third of our population is ill-clothed, ill-fed, and ill-housed, surely he had in mind that large group of our citizens who are poverty-stricken upon the farms of our Nation. In May 1935 approximately 1,000,000 rural families were on relief. If we assume that there are 5 in the average family, we have the spectacle of 5,000,000 people from the farms of America forced to accept public charity.

Even if we go back to 1929 there were about 398,000 farm families in this country which had a total gross income of less than $250 for a year. This included the products which they sold, traded, and consumed, their meat and bread, fruit and vegetables, and all that they had to eat. If we assume that the average size of the family was 5 people, we had 1,990,000 people, each one of whom had a gross income for the year of $50, or less than 8 cents a day. Of course, many of these farm families are twice as large as the figure used and, therefore, the income of many individuals would be less.

Census figures show 916,000 farm families with a total gross income of less than $400. Assuming that they are families of 5 people, this means $80 annually for each person in the family, or $40 annually for members of families of 10, and this is not unusual in many sections of the South.

Even in 1929 about 47 percent of all our farmers had an annual gross income, including the value of products grown and consumed on the farm, of less than $1,000. These figures include both landlords and tenants. Is this the true picture of real American life? Is it the American standard of living? But, you say, this bill will not bring about the stabilization of an adequate farm income or remedy the ills of which I complain. No, but it is an important step which must be taken without delay.

I realize that there are some who will say that this is a continuation of the Resettlement Administration. I know that some will say that the Resettlement Administration has spent huge sums of money, much of which has been wasted. While I hold no brief for the Resettlement Administration, its extravagance and its waste, I am unwilling to condemn its high objectives merely because those who first embarked upon the program were ill-advised and are guilty of faults and failures and follies upon which I am not willing to place my stamp of approval. The Resettlement Administration undertook many foolish, unsound, and extravagant projects, but even so I am unwilling to repudiate it or the man who issued the Executive order which brought it into existence. I am willing, therefore, and anxious to vote for this bill which authorizes the completion of the Resettlement projects which have been undertaken, to the end that that which has been invested may not be totally lost.

I know that there are those present who would like to see this bill defeated so that they could go to the country next spring with the cry that this Congress had repudiated the emergency program set up by the President for the rehabilitation of agriculture and the resettlement of some of our poverty-stricken farm people. I cannot, in the brief space of time allotted, discuss that which has been done by the rural-rehabilitation section of the Resettlement Administration in bringing relief to poverty-stricken farmers, nor can I discuss the fine service which its Land Utilization Division has rendered in reclaiming submarginal land and correcting maladjustments in land use and in making farming more profitable. Even though the Resettlement Administration has made many mistakes, let us not burn down the house to get rid of the rats, but rather let us profit by the mistakes which have been made and go forward with a broadside attack upon the problem of rural slum clearance.

The bill which we are now considering, H. R. 7562, is a bill to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes. The bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to establish in the Department of Agriculture a Farm Security Administration to assist him in the exercise of the powers and duties conferred by this act. The act authorizes an appropriation of not to exceed $10,000,000 for the first fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, not to exceed $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, to be administered by the Secretary through the Farm Security Administration in making loans to farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain or who recently obtained the major portion of their income from farming operations for the purpose of purchasing efficient farm management units sufficient to enable a diligent farm family to carry on successful farming which the Secretary deems can be successfully carried on in the locality in which the farm is situated.

Realizing the wisdom of decentralizing the functions of Federal agencies, the bill provides further for the establishment of county committees which shall be charged with the duty and responsibility of receiving applications of persons desiring to finance the acquisition of farms by means of a loan from the Secretary under the provisions of this bill and with the duty and responsibility of examining and appraising the farm or farms which are to be purchased, and in general to pass upon the eligibility of the applicant, the character of the farm to be purchased, and the amount which the committee finds is a reasonable value of the property to be bought.

The Secretary is authorized to loan the full, fair, and reasonable value of the farm for an agreed period of not more than 30 years at a loan rate of 3 percent per annum and to make certain other provisions for the protection of the security which will require insurance, maintenance, and repair and prevent waste and exhaustion of the farm property and its fertility. The amount so appropriated shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy.

REHABILITATION LOANS

Under title II of the bill the Secretary is authorized to make loans to eligible individuals for the purchase of livestock, farming equipment, supplies, and other farm needs, and for the refinancing of indebtedness and family subsistence. These loans are to be made at the rate of 3 percent per annum and shall have maturities not in excess of 5 years and shall be secured by a chattel mortgage, crop liens, and the assignment of proceeds from the sale of agricultural products.

No definite amount is authorized to be appropriated for this purpose other than unexpended balances available to the Secretary for loans and relief to farmers and such other sums as the President is authorized to allot to the Secretary out of appropriations for relief or work relief.

The Secretary is further authorized to assist in the voluntary adjustment of indebtedness between farm debtors and their creditors. Under the farm debt adjustment program which has been undertaken by this administration the farmers of the Nation have been saved millions of dollars.

RETIREMENT OF SUBMARGINAL LAND

Title III authorizes and directs the Secretary to develop a program of land conservation and land utilization including the retirement of lands which are submarginal or not primarily suitable for cultivation and charges him with the responsibility of improving, developing, and administering the property so acquired and authorizes him to sell, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of any such property upon such terms and conditions as he deems will best accomplish the purpose of the title.

Title III further directs the Secretary to pay to the county in which the land is held by the Secretary under this title, 25 percent of the net revenues received by the Secretary from the land during such year. This is a payment in lieu of taxes. The payment so made shall be made upon the condition that it is used for school or road purposes.

For the purposes mentioned in title III there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and not to exceed $20,000,000 for each two fiscal years thereafter.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

Title IV provides for the establishment of the Farm Security Administration, the appointment of personnel, and general provisions with reference to the administration of the act, including local committees to be composed of three farmers residing in the county.

Title IV further authorizes the Secretary to continue the activities of the Resettlement Administration to the extent that may be necessary only for the completion and the administration of those resettlement projects, rural-rehabilitation projects for resettlement purposes and land development, and land utilization projects for which funds have been allotted by the President.

I desire to remind our Republican brethren of the fact that the Republican platform adopted in 1936 has this to say with reference to agriculture and with reference to the farm problem now under consideration:

> The farm problem is an economic and social, not a partisan, problem, and we propose to treat it accordingly.

Again I quote from the Republican platform:

> We propose—
> A national land-use program, including the acquisition of abandoned and nonproductive farm land by voluntary sale or lease, subject to approval of the legislative and executive branches of the States concerned, and the devotion of such land to appropriate public use, such as watershed protection and flood prevention, reforestation, recreation and conservation of wildlife.
> To provide for ample farm credit at rates as low as those enjoyed by other industries, including commodity and livestock loans, and preference in land loans to the farmer acquiring or refinancing a farm as a home.

In this connection I desire also to call attention to the Democratic platform of 1936 in which we find this language:

> We recognize the gravity of the evils of farm tenancy, and we pledge the full cooperation of the Government in the refinancing of farm indebtedness at the lowest possible rates of interest and over a long term of years.

Our hills and valleys and fertile lands are ladened with gifts quite beyond the comprehension of man. While it is true we have extended our geographical frontiers until now the stream of commerce flows into even the remotest sections of our great and common country, yet we are now face to face with a problem of further extending the social and economic frontiers of modern American life. Here is a problem and here is a field of human endeavor wherein the tingling thrill and all the tremor and throb of eager and earnest emotions can be used to the greatest and grandest advantage. While it is true that America stands out today as the greatest force in world progress, when we think of the problem of farm tenancy we must be conscious of a great lack of full and complete accomplishment. In passing this bill we are embracing a fundamental problem of first magnitude and stupendous proportions, yet it is a problem which Americans will and must some day solve.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, regardless of how much money might be appropriated by the Federal Government for the purpose of curing the evil of farm tenancy, I undertake to say that under present economic conditions that such would be an impossible task. Until there is a stability of price of the basic commodities and until the farmer's dollar has a purchasing power on a parity with all other industry, we are attempting to do something which may aggravate rather than clarify the issue, as I see it. Nevertheless I am for this farm tenancy bill as it stands at the present time, and I sincerely hope that the membership of this House will stand firm and pass this bill as reported by the Committee on Agriculture. I trust that under no circumstances will we submit to the terms and conditions of a bill which is proposed at the other end of the Capitol. Our committee studied the provisions of H. R. 8 for many weeks, which is in substance what is reported out by the Senate at the present time. Extensive hearings were held upon that bill, the result being that a majority of the committee favored the principles endorsed in the legislation before you. There are many problems in the Senate bill which are difficult of administration and should not be embodied in any bill which is designed in the first instance as an experiment to meet a national condition. I call attention to what seems to me glaring defects and not in keeping with the spirit of American institutions.

First. The restriction of alienation is unknown in America. It is common in European countries where dictators and monarchies prevail. I undertake to say that any time a man has the money to pay for his farm he ought to be able to get a deed for that farm and not wait for a period of 20 or 40 years, as originally proposed. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] seeks to enforce this restriction and bases his argument on the fact that speculation in land will be restrained. If you want to keep the question of speculation out of the picture, why penalize the owner of one of these Government-loaned farms and permit the man next door who owns land to make a profit when there is a speculative boom in the country?

Pass the windfall tax which affects all land alike, as was suggested by the President's committee, reporting to the House Committee on Agriculture when we held our hearings.

Second. If you pass the Senate bill the Government will control the lease of every farm in every community in America. In other words, the remaining tenants in that community are going to compel the landlords to go along with Uncle Sam, who will be the greatest landlord in America in time to come. Every lease in the county will be centered around the leases which are being promulgated by the Government. If a landlord cannot compete with Uncle Sam he will be forced as a matter of self preservation to sell his land, and the Government will be the ultimate purchaser.

Third. On the question of taxes, the Senate bill provides among other things the following:

"Real property, other than real property to which subsection (a) applies, acquired, held, or leased by the corporation under this title shall be exempt from taxation by any State, Territory, or political subdivision."

Mr. NELSON. From what bill is the gentleman reading?

Mr. LUCAS. I am reading from the Senate bill that has been reported out. In other words, if the Government acquires a farm it is exempt from taxation so long as the title remains in the Federal Government. Think of such a provision being incorporated in a bill. Think of the bitterness and the rancor that will be engendered in every community as a result of this unfair discrimination. If that bill comes here upon a conference report, and our conferees permit the Senate Members to have their way, gentlemen who vote for it may have their political future somewhat jeopardized, especially if the United States Government is permitted to have its lands exempted, and the farmer down the road is compelled to pay the regular tax assessed by the assessor in that community.

Fourth. Death of the purchaser: Here we find plenty of problems from the standpoint of law, when one of these tenants dies, if the Senate bill becomes the law of the land. One of the best lawyers who came before our committee said he could not tell where the Federal jurisdiction started and where the State jurisdiction ended, or where the State jurisdiction began and the Federal jurisdiction ended. In that statement I concur. Whether the contract for a deed would be personal property or would be considered under the doctrine of equitable conversion is not clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Illinois 2 additional minutes.

Mr. LUCAS. Another matter of importance in the Senate bill involves the question of double jeopardy. In other words, if the tenant be charged with arson for burning the barn on Government property, he not only can be prosecuted in a Federal court but he can also be prosecuted in the State court. If he is acquitted in the Federal court, they can bring him to the county where the barn is located and prosecute him again for the same offense, just like they used to do in the prohibition days.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I boldly assert that any tenant in this country who is frugal, industrious, and thrifty, the type of tenant that the Government seeks to keep in the farm-tenancy program, will never go in partnership with Uncle Sam if he thoroughly understands the bill that has been reported out of the United States Senate today, providing it should be enacted into law. I undertake to say that if I had the opportunity of explaining that bill to the type of tenant worth while he never would sign a contract with Uncle Sam.

It is only the man whom we call the cove in the mountain, or the irresponsible tenant who never was worth anything to himself or to his community or to anyone else, who will take hold of a contract of that kind and attempt to carry on in behalf of himself and the Government.

Mr. Chairman, the buying of land by the Government and the resale thereof to tenants is the beginning of a dangerous philosophy of Government ownership of land. It is estimated that within 40 years the Government would have under their control or jurisdiction a million tenants. The next step will be to take them all in as they do under the powers of a dictatorship. I trust the time may never come when such may happen, but if the Senate bill should be agreed to, I can see the beginning of the end of independent and free ownership of lands in this Republic.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the bill, H. R. 7562, I ask unanimous consent to include a letter from the Secretary of the Interior to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES] together with some tables showing purchases made by Puerto Rico from the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

HON. MARVIN JONES,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. JONES: My attention has been called to the fact that H. R. 7562, a bill for the Farm Security Act of 1937, introduced in the House on June 17, 1937, as a substitute for H. R. 6240, was reported out on June 18, 1937, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House; and that this bill, in its present form, does not extend to Puerto Rico, although it does extend to Hawaii and Alaska, and although the Senate bill, S. 106, the companion bill to the original bill, H. R. 8, for which 6240 was substituted, as reported to the Senate and now pending there, does extend to Puerto Rico.

Puerto Rico with a population now estimated at 1,800,000 is, in population, by far the greatest of the organized Territories whose people are citizens of the United States. It is greatest in amount of purchases from the mainland as well as in population. It purchased $86,352,000 worth of goods from the mainland in 1936, largely farm products. Its purchases were greater than those of any other area in the Western Hemisphere except Canada, and were greater than those of any country in the world, outside of Canada, except Great Britain, France, Germany, and Japan. Since 1931 Puerto Rico has risen from the tenth among world customers of the mainland United States to sixth place, increasing her purchases during that period from $60,637,000 in 1931 to $86,352,000 in 1936. She buys from the mainland nearly everything she consumes.

Puerto Rico is almost wholly agricultural, and because of her dense population it is peculiarly necessary that her land be utilized as fully and advantageously as possible. With a total acreage of about 2,240,000 acres, it is estimated that only about 1,220,000 acres are now under cultivation, which gives only about seven-tenths of an acre per person for the total 1,800,000 people in the island. Perhaps 500,000 acres more can be made available. After the disastrous hurricanes of 1928 and 1932 many small farmers, particularly coffee farmers on the hillsides, abandoned their lands and drifted to San Juan and the others of the larger cities of the island, accentuating slum conditions there and adding to the social problems. Their former lands rapidly go back to jungle or are exposed to erosion. It is imperatively necessary that aid be extended to such small farmers, to reinstate them on the land, to save the lands, and to ameliorate social conditions in the island's cities. The loans and credits contemplated by titles I and II of H. R. 7562 could well be utilized and would be of great help for these purposes. There are also some submarginal lands which should be utilized and developed under a program such as that contemplated in title III of this bill. Tropical products, such as vanilla beans, quinine, bamboo, and other tropical plants, as well as coffee, can be grown on these lands, products of a kind well designed to check erosion on the hillsides, and not to compete with mainland agricultural products.

Because of its dense population every social and governmental problem is accentuated in Puerto Rico. Here is a farm community with the density of a city suburban population. If Iowa were as densely populated as Puerto Rico it would have some 28,000,000 people. Texas would have around 130,000,000. This places a definite responsibility on the administration for the welfare of these American citizen farmers. Puerto Rico has not received more than its fair share of Government benefits during the period of the depression, in spite of the needs arising from this heavy population. Rather, it has received less, on a per-capita basis, indeed, less than one-half the average share of the States and Territories, as appears from the brief tabular statement hereto appended. Detailed figures are before your committee in the hearings on the sugar bill. (Hearings on H. R. 5326, present session, before special subcommittee, Mar. 15–22, 1937, serial B, pp 88–93 and 116.)

As was said in Secretary Ickes' letter to you of May 7, 1937: "Since the great fundamental principle of American democracy is the equal treatment of all citizens, there is no need to dwell upon the moral or practical necessity of avoiding economic discriminations against the citizens of the United States who may be residing in insular parts of our country."

It is earnestly requested, therefore, that a committee amendment to this bill, H. R. 7562, be accepted that will extend its provisions to Puerto Rico. That purpose could be accomplished by the following changes in the present bill:

In section 1 (a), in line 1 on page 2, strike out the word "and", the first word of the line, and insert a comma in lieu thereof, and insert in the same line after the word "Hawaii" the words "and Puerto Rico."

In section 50, in line 14 on page 17, strike out the word "and", following "Alaska" and insert a comma in lieu thereof, and strike out the period at the end of the line after the word "Hawaii" and insert "and Puerto Rico."

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) CHARLES WEST,
Acting Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN].

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Chairman, I really had not expected to get any time on this bill, but I am very, very much interested in the problem. All my life I have operated a farm, and I am still operating it—at least, my family is operating it during my absence. That is the only way I had to make a living until I came to Congress, and now I spend the money I make here on the farm to pay for losses incurred. I am very much interested in this attempt to make a start at farm ownership. In Wisconsin a few years ago we had about 12 percent renters, and now it has crept up to nearly 40 percent. Certainly it was not through the fault of the majority of the farmers in that State. A majority of the farmers are either German or Scandinavian extraction, the type that certainly did not squander their money or who are shiftless farmers. They are the conservative, hard-working, up-to-date farmers, who have tried their best to make a living and who, through no fault of their own, have drifted into a condition where they are losing their farms by the thousands yearly that were operated for three or four generations by their people.

While this bill does not go nearly far enough, and the committee admits it does not go far enough, it is a step in the right direction.

We already have the Resettlement Administration with an office and personnel in every county looking after rehabilitation loans or grants. These local people in my State are for the most part very well acquainted with all the farmers that are in distress. They could pick out those worthy of consideration when applications are received, and drop those not worthy, without creating the expense of investigating each applicant. I believe that the Secretary of Agriculture should use the Resettlement county set-up.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] certainly hit the nail on the head when he said that the price-fixing monopolies have driven the farmers of the country, especially the dairy farmers, to their present plight. I know that this is true in other lines as well. The packers control the price of the animals they buy as well as the price of their finished products. The gentleman from New York stated that in the case of the dairy industry the price of cheese for the whole United States is fixed at Plymouth, Wis. This is true. It has gone to such an extent, the monopoly is so great, that in 1931 the Department of Agriculture, with the consent of the Governor, appointed a special committee consisting of three producers chosen by the farmers and the cheese producers, three men selected by the processors, the packers, and the large cheese buyers, and the State appointed the seventh member to represent the State as a whole. I happened to be the unfortunate victim that had to act as umpire between the producer that wanted all he could get and the buyer that wanted it as cheaply as possible. We met at Plymouth every Friday, that being the day on which the price of cheese is fixed—every Friday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon there is a sham auction, and the highest bidder sets the price of cheese for the United States. But there is very seldom more than one bid for a certain type of cheese. A few of the big buyers get together around a table for lunch and agree on who is going to bid on the cheese that is to be auctioned off to the highest bidder at 2 o'clock. There never was any competition unless they happened to have a batch of cheese they wanted to unload on some little fellow who was foolish enough to overbid them; but they have taught the little fellows a few lessons, so that very seldom anybody dares to bid.

The State of Wisconsin tried to break up that ring with the fair-price committee mentioned, but it was impossible. The committee studied the situation for 9 months. We found it was a problem for the Federal Government, not the States. In spite of the fact that Wisconsin at that time produced 74 percent of the cheese in the United States, we found we could not solve it, for they said they would simply move their offices over into another State if we tried to interfere with them or molest them at all. So I say that the gentleman from New York has put his finger on the pulse of the evil: The monopolies fix the price both to the producer and the consumer. I blame the farmers, of course, for not organizing, so as to control their own commodity, their investment, and their labor.

No other industry in the world today allows the price of the product, their money, their investment, their brains, their toil, to be fixed by others. Agriculture is the only industry that seems willing to produce, and then take whatever price somebody will offer for their goods. The farmers, because of lack of foresight to organize and control their own production, allow a monopoly such as the National Dairy Co., which is a holding company and controls every major dairy distributing agency in the United States, to fix the prices of their products.

The United States Attorney and the Federal Trades Commission should have taken steps long ago to dissolve this gigantic dairy trust that holds a strangle hold on the price of dairy products.

But the farmers should become better organized so that they may some day say, "It costs me so much to produce these products, and unless you pay me that price, you cannot have it." Yes, producer and consumer must eliminate these unnecessary middle men for the benefit of all concerned. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, some of the provisions of the pending bill may be good, but there are many with which I do not agree. I believe, with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KINZER], that the purchaser of a farm should have some financial interest in it and should provide some portion of the purchase money.

To my mind, we need more to purchase small tracts of 5 or 10 acres for the tenants. Many of them cannot operate a large farm but could a small one.

What I am most interested in and what I want to talk about in the brief time allotted to me is submarginal land that in volume of thousands and thousands of acres are being taken from the tax rolls of this country. Most of this land in my district is timber land. Twenty-five percent of the profit derived from these lands is returned to the counties where located, for highways and for schools, but there will be no income. The net result will be that the withdrawal of this land from the tax rolls will add just that much more to the burden of the farmers in the districts throughout my State, New York, and what applies in New York applies to all States. The State of New York buys land for reforesting at a cost of $4 an acre. It is assessed for what it costs and pays the local rate of school and highway taxes; and I believe this bill should carry a similar provision, for just as soon as you take land out of taxation, take it off of the tax rolls, it adds a great deal more to the tax burden the remaining land must bear.

It is my intention to offer an amendment to correct this situation, and I hope it may have the support of this House. Some of this land the Government is buying costs as much as $20 an acre. In some instances where there are woodworking factories, acid factories, and so forth, they are dismantling the factories, and tearing down dwellings, and this all goes off the tax rolls. It is planned to keep this land for years, I suppose, and let the timber continue to grow, but during all this time it will be out of taxation. It seems to me this creates an unfair situation, and I ask your support of the amendment I shall offer at the proper time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in using this brief allotment of time is to endeavor to call to the attention of the House three amendments which I intend to offer when this bill is reached for consideration under the 5-minute rule, and which I intend to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks. It is manifestly impossible to discuss any of these amendments in the brief time I have at my disposal.

Two of my amendments, construed together, have for their objective the removal of a condition provided in this bill which I think you will agree with me ought to be corrected: This bill as it is drawn and as I construe it would subject the equity of the borrower who might secure money for the purpose of purchasing a farm to levy and sale under civil process for the payment of debts. The amendments to which I have made reference undertake to provide that for a period of 5 years the equity or interest which the borrower may have in the land purchased shall not be subject to levy and sale under civil process without the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture. There are other objectives sought to be achieved by the amendments, but that is the principal one.

I think you will agree with me where a man has become overburdened with debt, perhaps, and is given a new chance by reason of the extension of the benefits provided by this legislation, and enters upon a farm purchased for him by the Government of the United States and manages to make some payments thereon, as a result of which he acquires an equity in the farm, we should not permit him to be sold out within a year or two after his equitable interest may have been acquired under processes in favor of creditors whose debts may have been existing at the time when the farm was purchased for him by the Government. We ought to give him at least 5 years in which to straighten out his affairs and we should provide that during the 5 years any interest or equity he may acquire in the land shall not be subject to levy or sale under civil process.

I understand it is insisted by some members of the committee that that matter would be taken care of by the homestead laws of the various States. That unfortunately is not true so far as my own State is concerned and I am satisfied it is not true with regard to many of the States of the Union. In my State a debtor may waive his homestead rights by written instrument executed for that purpose, except as to $300 worth of household and kitchen furniture, wearing apparel, and provisions; therefore, under the terms of this bill and under the laws of my State a sharecropper or tenant, perhaps heavily involved, who might be given the opportunity provided by this bill and allowed to purchase a farm, could be sold out as far as his interest or equity in the farm is concerned at any time after it may have been acquired to satisfy the claim of any creditor holding an obligation of that kind which he may have reduced to judgment. It would be true, of course, that if the instrument taken by the Government were a trust deed, the amount of the Government's debt would first have to be tendered or paid by the creditor, but the farm could nevertheless be sold out from under a borrower who might be in good faith meeting all of his obligations to the Government.

The amendment also prohibits the assignment of the interest of the sharecropper or tenant not for a period of 20 years, but for a period of 5 years after his acquisition of the property, except by consent of the Secretary of Agriculture. It does not go as far as the amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN]. It does, however, afford to the sharecropper or tenant who may have been accorded the opportunity to buy a farm at least 5 years' protection from land sharks or speculators who possibly might inveigle him into parting with the interest which he may have acquired.

Mr. Chairman, I invite the membership of the House to read the language of the amendments which I have not discussed in detail, as they will appear in today's RECORD. I sincerely trust that after you have done so and have given to the subject matter the consideration which I feel it deserves you may feel justified in supporting them.

The amendments which I have referred to are, as follows:

Line 16, page 3, after the word "committee", insert "or any person related to such member within the fourth degree of consanguinity or affinity."

Page 4, line 1, after the words "shall be secured by", strike out the remainder of line 1 and line 2 and insert "instruments vesting the legal title to the farm in the Secretary of Agriculture for the use and benefit of the United States as its interests may appear, and the acquisition of title to such farm or of rights and interest therein by the borrower shall be strictly in accordance with the terms of the instruments executed in connection with such loan."

"Provided, That the borrower shall not for a period of 5 years after the loan is granted, nor at any time until 25 percent of the loan has been repaid, have an assignable interest in the farm, unless the Secretary agrees that such an interest shall vest in him, nor shall he have any equitable or other interest subject to levy and sale under process in favor of creditors under the laws of any State for such period of 5 years."

No Member of this House is more deeply interested in this proposed legislation than I am, or will work more consistently for its passage, whether my amendments are adopted or not. I shall simply offer them because I feel that they will improve the bill. My first amendment relates to the provision in section 2 (c) that no county committee shall certify for purchase and sale to a tenant any farm in which any member of the committee has any property interest. My amendment broadens this so as to exclude from consideration farms owned by close relatives of the committeemen, and without it a committeeman might have the Government take over for sale to a tenant or sharecropper a farm owned by the committeeman's wife, brother, father, or other near relative. The propriety of so amplifying this restriction is clearly apparent. No committeeman should be allowed to profiteer for himself or family in carrying out his duties under this program.

The two amendments—one in line 1, page 4, and the other in line 3, page 5—are necessary if any restriction is to be imposed upon the alienation of the sharecropper's or tenant's equity in the farm bought for him, either by his voluntary act or by sale under civil process. Under the bill as drawn, the title to the land is to vest in the borrower, who may secure his loan by executing a mortgage "or" deed of trust. If he executes only a mortgage, there can be no question of the right of judgment creditors to sell his equity for the satisfaction of their debts. If he executes a deed of trust, under the laws of my State, such creditors could have levy made upon the land after first paying or tendering the amount due the Government. With either instrument it does not appear possible for the Government to prevent voluntary sale by the borrower of his equity, and the only restriction sought to be applied to such procedure is the right of the Secretary in such an event to declare the balance of the loan immediately due and payable. This would not interfere with a transaction in which the purchaser of the borrower's equity might be able and willing to pay the balance due the Government, and thus secure complete title. The temptation of a borrower who had been hard pressed all of his life if he found himself in possession of a farm which had increased in value since the Government's loan was made to him, or in which by his own payments he had acquired a substantial equity, to sell out, take a few hundred dollars profit, and rejoin the tenant class, might be overwhelming in many instances. Since the purpose of this bill is to seek to bring about the eradication of tenancy, and have the men who work the farms own the farms, it certainly seems to me that provision ought to be made for at least 5 years against alienation of the borrower's equity, either voluntarily or involuntarily. This I do not understand that we can do unless the title is placed in the Government when the Government furnishes the money to buy the farm. If that is done, then the Government may fix by contract with the borrower such restrictions as to the character of interest which may vest in him, and when it may grow to be of a type subject to alienation, as it feels are proper. The amendment on page 5 will therefore not be offered unless the amendment on page 4, providing for the acquisition of title by the Government, is agreed to. If that amendment is agreed to, there can be no doubt as to the validity of the restrictions sought to be imposed by the amendment on page 5.

It will be noted that the amendment on page 5 does not preclude alienation, either voluntary or involuntary, if the consent of the Secretary can be secured. That will insure proper consideration of cases where under unusual circumstances it might be proper to permit such alienation.

I have long been interested in the problem of the tenant farmer. I have heretofore been heard many times in his behalf on this floor, in connection with farm legislation of various types. In my judgment, he usually gets the hot end of the poker in legislation proposed for farm relief. I do not think this bill will solve his problem. It is, however, a bona-fide, conscientious effort to start toward solving it, and so far as I am concerned, I shall support such a step, although it may go only a little way. The solution of that problem is essential to the welfare of our entire country.

Statistics have been placed in the record showing the growth of farm tenancy and share cropping to a point where 52 percent of the farmers of the United States are farming lands which in whole or in part are owned by others. This condition cannot continue and the agricultural population of the country remain, as it has always been, the backbone of American citizenship. Nowhere is the problem of greater importance than in my own State and in my own congressional district.

The importance of tenancy in the Seventh Congressional District in Georgia varies considerably from county to county, but it is relatively important throughout the area. Only about one-third of the farmers are tenants in Dade County while almost three-fourths of them are tenants in Bartow and Polk Counties.

The following table indicates the importance of tenancy in the Seventh Congressional District in Georgia. It shows the number of owners and tenants and the percentage of tenancy by counties for 1935.

Counties	All farmers	Owners	Tenants	Percentage of tenancy
Bartow	2,373	710	1,655	69.7
Catoosa	1,182	571	610	51.6
Chattooga	1,450	512	930	64.1
Cobb	3,292	1,388	1,902	57.8
Dade	555	355	199	35.8
Douglas	1,423	539	884	62.1
Floyd	2,835	1,032	1,795	63.3
Gordon	2,632	966	1,693	64.3
Haralson	1,962	831	1,148	57.9
Murray	1,581	664	916	57.9
Paulding	2,088	860	1,227	58.8
Polk	1,933	590	1,338	69.2
Walker	2,616	1,402	1,203	46.0
Whitfield	2,031	984	1,044	51.4
Total	27,973	11,374	16,544	59.1

Year	Percentage of tenancy	Year	Percentage of tenancy
1890	53.5	1930	68.2
1910	65.6

The increase in my State from 44.9 percent in 1880 to 65.6 percent in 1935 of farm tenancy should alarm every citizen who is really interested in agricultural welfare. It is with a grateful heart that I support the efforts now being made by this administration to at least make a start toward the solution of this problem.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, we have under consideration H. R. 7562, which purports to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes, and for other purposes. I have enjoyed and feel that I have been greatly benefited by the speeches I have heard on this bill. Splendid speeches have been made by Mr. JONES, chairman of the Agriculture Committee; Mr. HOPE, the ranking Republican member; Mr. BANKHEAD, the Speaker of the House; Mr. WADSWORTH, of New York; Mr. LEMPKE, and others. All of these speeches have been free of partisan appeal and have been very informing.

The policy declared for in this bill—to make farm owners out of tenant farmers—is most appealing. Inasmuch as I was brought up as the son of a tenant farmer, it will be seen at once how deeply interested and how sympathetic is my attitude toward this legislation.

The declared purpose is to aid the unfortunate and the meek and lowly. There are many wonderful men and women who, because the breaks were against them, have been forced to drag their lives out in poverty as tenant farmers. To my way of thinking, there is nothing that can add so much to create and maintain a fine, patriotic citizenship as for the citizens to own their own farms and homes.

According to the census reports, the total number of farms in the United States is 6,812,350. The average size of the farms is 154 acres, and the average value is a little less than $5,000. There are 2,865,000 tenant farmers. It can be seen at once that almost half of the farms of the United States are being operated by tenant farmers or sharecroppers. The total farm population is approximately 32,000,000. Nearly 16,000,000 of these are made up of the tenant farmers and their families. It can be seen at once the bigness of the tenant-farm problem.

The platform of the Republican Party last year expressly declared in favor of farm-tenancy legislation, and the Democrats made similar promises. I am supporting this measure because of the principle involved and the policy declared.

LESS THAN A GESTURE

The thing that worries me, however, is the meager sum authorized to be appropriated. This bill carries no appropriation at all—it merely authorizes Congress in the future to appropriate $10,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937, $25,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1938, and $50,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1939. It authorizes the appropriation in all for the next 3 years of only $85,000,000.

On first thought this appears to be a considerable sum, but if you should divide $85,000,000 among 16,000,000 people it would allow to each one of them less than $5.50, not taking anything out for overhead and the administration of the fund; or if you should divide it among a little less than 3,000,000 farm-tenant families it would give to each family less than $30 over a period of 3 years, or an average of less than $10 per year. It can be seen at once, so far as taking care of this big problem is concerned, this measure is less than a gesture.

There are approximately 3,300 counties in the United States. If we should divide the $10,000,000 authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937, and ending June 30, 1938, it would give in the neighborhood of $3,000 of farm tenancy relief to each county in the United States. Of course, this bill sets up a new set of officeholders here in Washington and a committee consisting of three members in each county in the United States. It will add several thousand officeholders to the already overburdened taxpayers of the country, and if this group of officeholders handle these funds as other funds have been handled for the last few years, there will not be much left of the $10,000,000 for the coming fiscal year with which to loan tenant farmers to buy farms.

It is assumed that on an average each farm will cost not less than $3,000. If it costs as much as $3,000, there could not be one farm bought on an average for one tenant farmer in each county, and therefore not more than one tenant farmer in each county, during the coming fiscal year, would have a chance to get one of these farms financed by the Government. That would mean one tenant farmer out of approximately 1,500 would have a chance to borrow part of this money and buy and equip a farm with it the first year, and the second year there would be on an average less than three farmers in each county that would have a chance to buy and equip a farm, and the third year there would not be over five farmers on an average to each county that would be able to borrow of this fund and buy and equip a farm; and for the 3 years there would be less than nine farmers on an average in each county in the United States that would be able to borrow of this fund to buy and equip a farm; or, in other words, if none of this money was eaten up by an army of officeholders in the 3 years, these funds authorized in this bill would furnish $3,000 to approximately 20,000 farm tenants and sharecroppers of the United States to buy and equip farms.

We must bear in mind, however, there are now 2,865,000 of such tenant farmers and sharecroppers. In other words, in this year, under this bill, if all the money was turned over for the purpose of loaning to tenant farmers and sharecroppers not less than $3,000 each, it would only aid 1 out of every 143 tenant farmers and sharecroppers of the United States.

The Democrats promised the tenant farmers and sharecroppers that they were going to do something substantial for them. This bill, like other promises made by this administration during their campaign, proves that their platforms and campaign promises are made to run on.

Now let us see how this matter works out. Let us assume in Clay County, Ky., several hundred farm tenants make application for a loan under this bill. They must first find some fellow who is willing to sell his farm and get a title bond or some other written obligation from the owner of the land expressing the price to be paid. There will be a committee appointed by the authorities here in Washington for that county and every other county. The tenant farmers take their title bonds and turn them over to this county committee, and then this county committee goes out and examines these various tracts of land, and from all this number they could not select more than one for the coming fiscal year, and if they then approve one of the applications, this is sent to the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, and he investigates the recommendation of the committee, and if he approves it, he will order an abstract of the title.

This whole procedure generally requires from 6 months to 2 years. It can be seen at once that perhaps not one tenant farmer, and it can be said without fear of successful contradiction, there will not be 200 tenant farmers in the Uinted States in the next fiscal year that will have completed the transaction and be in possession of farms under this bill.

Yes; this bill is less than a gesture. It will be a great disappointment to the tenant farmers and sharecroppers of the Nation. I am supporting it because this is the only bill the administration has permitted to come up. I want my constituents and the country to know that I favor the policy of help to the worthy tenant farmers and sharecroppers who desire to improve their condition.

The Department of Agriculture will administer this bill. They have administered the resettlement law. They spent $35,000,000 to resettle 3,500 families. This averaged $10,000 per family. If the overhead in administering this measure is as high as in administering that, practically all of these funds will be swallowed up by overhead expenses.

To those who are sincerely interested in this problem this measure is a very grievous disappointment.

HIGH TAXES MAKING TENANT FARMERS

We have pointed out how few farm owners this legislation in its present form will make. The H. O. L. C. has been in operation for a comparatively short time. The Government has already foreclosed on 99,937 homes through loans made by that Corporation. More than 26 farms out of every thousand in this country changed hands in 1936 through foreclosures, bankruptcy, and delinquent tax sales. In other words, the owners of 178,483 farms, involving nearly 25,000,000 acres and with a value of more than $860,000,000, changed hands in the year of 1936 on account of foreclosures, tax, and bankruptcy sales. It can be seen at once how inadequate the measure before us is. Under this bill we could not make more than 3,300 farm owners in the coming fiscal year, when, as a matter of fact, there will likely be sold through foreclosures, bankruptcy, and tax sales, more than 175,000 farms. It seems to me that we are saving at the spigot and losing at the bunghole.

I have before me a number of the weekly county newspapers of counties in my district. Page after page is filled with tax-sale advertisements of farms and homes for State, county, city, and school taxes, several hundred in each county. And one of the editors comments on the fact that not a single owner was present to bid in his or her farm or home.

Of course, many of these are widows. People are becoming discouraged on account of the constant increase in taxes. The press announces that the State of Kentucky for State purposes will collect $10,000,000 more this year than it ever collected in any other one year in its history. The Federal Government, the States, the counties, the cities, and the towns and other taxing districts continue to increase their taxes.

I pointed out the other day in a speech that approximately one-third of the income of the American people on the average was taken in taxes. I would not have any unit of the Government to neglect those things that are essential and necessary for the welfare of the people, but all units of the Government should avoid squandering and wasting the peoples' tax money.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Not just now. We now have about 100,000 foreclosures of Government loans by the H. O. L. C., and I understand that before another year there will be, perhaps, 160,000 farm foreclosures by the Federal land banks and other credit agencies of the Government. We are making many times as many tenant farmers and tenant home owners as we can possibly make of farm and home owners under this bill. I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The argument the gentleman just made would indicate that in many instances tenants are better off than the men owning farms. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The tax burden is being increased. Taxes are increasing more and more, and perhaps the farm owners and home owners are becoming discouraged in their efforts to hold their farms and their homes. Let us help to make farm owners out of tenant farmers, but at the same time let us help those who have farms to hold their farms and keep them from becoming tenant farmers. [Applause.]

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN].

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, at the time the Committee on Agriculture was discussing the subject of tenancy I submitted a statement that was included in the hearings. Later, I addressed the House at some length concerning pending legislation in that field. I have also discussed the question under various circumstances in many parts of the country. I make this statement in explanation of my interest in the matter for a long time past.

There is no question that the country is expecting this Congress to pass tenancy legislation of some sort. As I have stated before, I prefer to call it land purchase and resale legislation rather than tenancy legislation. I believe the psychological effect of the term is better.

Tomorrow at the appropriate time when the bill is being read under the 5-minute rule I expect to offer an amendment myself, which will involve a principle I feel is fundamental, and which has been demonstrated as being such in other countries where they have attempted to deal with this problem. My amendment will incorporate in the pending bill a provision whereby the Secretary of Agriculture shall receive the land now owned by the Federal land banks and shall resell such property to tenant purchasers on a long-term-contract basis. The amendment will not be long, nor will it be complicated. It can be printed on one typewritten page. It has been before this House for a long time, because I have written the various Members upon at least two different occasions on the subject, and have discussed it before the House upon at least one occasion. The principle thereof is incorporated in my bill H. R. 5239.

I simply take this opportunity of calling the attention of the membership to the fact that at the appropriate time the amendment will be placed before the House and I will attempt to discuss it as extensively as time will permit under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEARIN. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the Federal land bank has in the past year sold two or three thousand farms to tenants in this country and has financed them?

Mr. WEARIN. I am fully aware of the fact the Federal land bank has sold a large number of farms to land purchasers who were financially able to buy them and to make down payments. However, I want to aid the tenants who are unable to qualify to that extent financially. They are the people who constitute the tenancy problem that we are trying to solve. [Applause.]

The amendment I propose to offer is as follows:

AMENDMENT TO TITLE IV, SECTION 41 (E)

(7) Acquire all real property in the United States that the Federal land banks now own outright without any redemption rights outstanding in former owners, which the said Federal land banks are hereby authorized and directed to transfer and convey to the Secretary of the Treasury, for which the said Federal land banks shall accept from the Secretary of the Treasury in exchange therefor Federal land bank stock of equal value. In the same manner the Secretary of Agriculture shall acquire within 6 months real property against which the Federal land banks at the time of the adoption of this act hold sheriff's certificates or judgments. For the purposes of such exchanges, the value of such real property shall be the "carrying value" as it appears on the books of the said Federal land banks on the last day of the month next preceding the adoption of this act; and the Federal land bank stock shall be valued at par. The Secretary of Agriculture shall acquire forthwith all real property so acquired by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the conveyance of such real property may be made under any procedure adopted by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Agriculture direct from the Federal land banks to the said Secretary of Agriculture without any intermediate transfer through the Secretary of the Treasury. The provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes as amended relating to restrictions on the acquisition of land by the United States shall not apply to such transfers and conveyances. The Secretary of Agriculture shall administer and dispose of such real property as hereinafter prescribed in this act.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time on this side to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, for the first time since becoming a Member of this House I have asked for time to speak. I have done so now because the measure under consideration strikes so near to the heart of the district and section which I have the honor to represent and because it is of such importance to our entire Nation. I believe that no other legislation has had such a widespread demand. During the recent past the press everywhere has been pointing out the need for it. Editors and preachers, students and teachers, farm leaders, industrialists, businessmen—leaders in every walk and profession—sensing the great need have argued for it. The Nation-wide demand for farm-tenant legislation makes it imperative that this Congress enact it.

This great cry for farm-tenant legislation is not unnatural, artificial, or arbitrary. It is the natural outgrowth of land-tenure conditions that are approaching, if not already at, the danger point. I think it requires no argument to back up a statement that home ownership by farmers is highly desirable. Only in that way can we obtain stability of our social order. Widespread farm tenancy is always a threat—it is a cancer that slowly but surely eats into the vitals of a democracy and undermines its very life. It has reached that cancerous stage in the United States.

The farm census of 1935 showed that of the 2,865,000 tenant farmers of this Nation 34.2 percent of them were single year tenants. This means that in the State of Mississippi, which has the highest percentage of farm tenancy—70 percent—every year 24 percent of the people in the farm community move on to other farms. In my own State of Alabama with a 64.5 percent farm tenancy, 22 percent of the farmers change farms every year. And it means that in my own county of Madison—one of the greatest agricultural counties in the Southeast—where 72 percent of the farms are run by tenants, one out of every four families in any farm community, assuming the average to hold, moves every year from farm to farm. The result is inevitable—run-down houses, ramshackle barns, broken-down fences, abused soil—erosion and waste of the worst kind. In this way our Nation is being despoiled of one of its greatest natural resources.

But as bad as are the erosion of the soil and the waste of the improvements, that is not the worst part of it. The worst feature lies in the lack of community consciousness and civic mindedness in the tenant himself. How can he feel any pride in his community—in its schools, its churches, its movements for community betterment? He cannot, nor can the community, hope for any permanence in any worthwhile program or stability in its institutions with one-fourth of its people moving every year and a great part of the others moving every 2 or 3 years.

From the farm census of 1935 we learned that there were 3,899,000 farm owners as compared with 2,865,000 farm tenants in the United States as a whole, or that a little more than 42 percent of our farmers were tenants, and that in the South, where tenancy ran highest, it reached 54 percent average, with the peak in Mississippi at 74 percent. In my own State, with an average of 64.5 percent, 13 counties have 75 percent or more of tenants. The percentage for Alabama, county by county, is shown by the following table:

Mr. Chairman, I am proud of the district which I represent—the rich Tennessee Valley in north Alabama. It is composed of seven counties along the Tennessee River as it crosses Alabama—seven great agricultural counties with fertile soil and high production. But farm tenancy is a problem there as the following table shows:

County	Number farms	Number tenants	Percent tenancy
Colbert	2,726	1,798	66.0
Jackson	5,517	3,250	59.0
Lauderdale	5,170	3,180	61.0
Lawrence	4,855	3,408	70.0
Limestone	6,266	4,521	72.0
Madison	7,034	5,085	72.0
Morgan	4,912	2,996	61.0
Total	36,480	24,238	66.4

I submit, ladies and gentlemen, that such statistics indicate an alarming condition in our social order calling for remedial legislation. And it becomes even more alarming when we consider its growth. In 1880—the earliest date at which we have available information—the tenancy percentage was only 25.6. Today it is 42.1. How it has steadily increased is shown as follows:

Year:	Percent tenancy
1910	37.0
1920	38.1
1925	38.7
1935	42.1

The problem as to the South cannot be explained away by the presence of the Negro, for from 1920 to 1935, while the number of Negro farm tenants in the Southern States decreased by 102,000, the white farm tenants during the same period increased by 148,000.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I may say on that point that less than 2 percent of the people in my district are Negroes and 61 percent of the farmers are tenants, which clearly shows this is not a Negro problem.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

We are all more or less familiar with the land-tenure problem that vexed Ireland for so long a time. We recall how in 1867 it led to an open revolt which, although a failure, forced England to the enactment in 1870 of a land law for Irish farm tenants. At that time 97 percent of the Irish farmers were tenants and only 3 percent were owners. Since the enactment of that farm-tenant measure for Ireland there has been a steady shifting of those figures until today the figures are exactly reversed, with 97 percent land owners and 3 percent tenants.

Many people feel and some of them have said that the present measure outlines a program entirely too modest—that it would be better to postpone its consideration until a more adequate program could be initiated. I for one should have preferred a larger authorization and a wider program. But I am convinced that we must make a start. This measure is a start in the right direction. Farm tenancy is a problem that cannot be worked out in a year or a few years, nor can it be cured or covered by a single law enacted by this Congress. It will call for a program involving experiments, changes, amendments, patience, and years of work. Again turning to Ireland, the one law of 1870 did not work out the problem. As I recall, a new law was passed a few years later—1881—and others followed in 1885, 1888, 1891, 1896, 1903, 1909, and 1935—a long, changing, growing program, but one that has proved effective. I believe that we can expect a similar development in this country. I believe that it is time to start.

Personally, I wish to congratulate the Agriculture Committee of this House for reporting this bill out—for giving us something to start on. It is not all that I should wish.

I should like to see under title I a proving period—a time for testing and selecting the new owners—supervising them to be sure that they might be capable of becoming an owner; also I should like to see a method of assuring protection from land speculators and from the vicissitudes of land booms and depressions. But as I study this bill, aside from the part dealing with submarginal lands, I believe it will do three things that are badly needed:

First. It will check that ever upward swinging curve of farm-tenancy increase.

Second. It will encourage and enable new farm ownership, instilling into such new owners a feeling of pride, a new feeling of ownership in the soil, in the community, in the social order, in the Government.

Third. It will rehabilitate and give security to the tenant, at the same time giving protection to the landlord and to that priceless natural resource—the soil itself. Many a landlord, himself hard pressed to maintain his farm, in an effort to get enough cash from the crops to support himself and his tenants, sees his soil being stripped, powerless to put into effect a program of rotation and soil building crops without turning away his tenants with no means of support. They have both become the victims of an economic condition from which they cannot escape by themselves. Rehabilitation will give relief to the landlord as well as to the tenant whom he is now carrying.

The program is not entirely untried and uncharted. The Resettlement Administration, during the last 2 years, has bought and placed tenants on nearly a thousand farms—experimenting with this same thing and testing the size and value of the economical farm unit. These experiments have been carried on in 10 Southern States. The table speaks for itself:

State	Number of farms	Average acreage per farm	Average price per farm	Average price per acre
Alabama	97	111.6	$2,439	$21.86
Arkansas	117	61.0	1,985	32.51
Georgia	115	104.8	2,067	19.72
Louisiana	94	62.3	2,311	37.10
Mississippi	143	51.9	2,026	39.01
North Carolina	103	76.7	2,882	37.58
Oklahoma	56	84.6	4,869	57.55
South Carolina	60	111.0	3,144	28.31
Tennessee	78	69.4	2,236	32.20
Texas	121	99.7	4,408	44.23
Total	984	81.4	2,723	33.46

A break-down of these experiments in the 18 counties of my own State where these farms were bought shows the following:

County	Number of farms	Average acreage per farm	Average price per farm	Average price per acre
Autauga	1	120.0	$3,000.00	$25.00
Blount	3	85.3	1,509.54	17.69
Butler	7	136.4	2,628.57	19.26

Chilton	2	137.2	2,812.74	20.50
Coffee	5	100.0	3,300.00	33.00
Covington	6	120.0	2,125.20	17.71
Crenshaw	3	86.7	2,650.00	30.58
Cullman	6	62.6	2,065.25	33.00
Dale	5	89.3	3,572.00	40.00
Dallas	10	86.3	1,378.42	15.97
Lowndes	15	173.3	1,607.47	9.62
Madison	7	76.6	4,284.93	55.96
Morgan	1	60.0	2,175.00	36.25
Pickens	2	57.5	1,725.00	30.00
Tuscaloosa	14	127.1	2,757.33	21.69
Walker	3	116.0	2,914.12	25.12

Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking very briefly concerning the rehabilitation feature, I have seen this program as carried on by the Resettlement Administration at work and can testify as to its effectiveness. I have seen it actually bring new life and new hope to men whom the depression years had left floundering, helpless, and hopeless. I have seen them absolutely down and out, and I have then seen them become again self-respecting, self-supporting citizens of their communities. A carefully planned rehabilitation program can be most effective. In Alabama, as well as elsewhere, the Resettlement Administration has done a great work in this field, and here and now I wish to compliment that agency for it. The following table speaks eloquently and convincingly:

Rural rehabilitation—Alabama

	1935	1936	1937
Case load	13,259	13,451	12,000
Average loan	$225.00	$186.00	$235

Milk cows—do	47.5	63.1	79.1
Hogs—do	61.1	77.5	83.3
Brood sows—do	19.2	22.5	42.1
Hens—do	79.1	90.9	95.6
Total net worth	$40,174.77	$3,043,557.77	$4,344,000

Total increase net worth from 1935 to 1937, $4,303,825.23

I cannot add to the arguments presented by the above figures, but I do wish to call your attention to the increase in net worth of each family from $3.03 to $362 in a period of 2 years, and also to the almost complete reversal of percentage of those using mules and those using steers from 1935 to 1937. In 1935 only 13 percent owned mules with which to make their crops, the other 87 percent using steers. In 1937 we find over 81 percent using mules and less than 19 percent using steers. The number of milk cows increased from less than one to every two families to nearly four to every five families. The number having hogs increased more than a third; the number having brood sows more than doubled, while nearly every family now keeps poultry.

Someone might be interested to know that of the loans in Alabama during 1936 totaling $2,501,955.71, the amount of $1,646,887 has been collected, representing a percentage of 65.82 collected.

Under this program the United States Government has been doing a real rehabilitation work among the farmers. In a way it has been relief, but the cheapest relief that the Government could give. Far better than mere relief, however, has been the rebuilding of human character, initiative, and community interest.

In conclusion I wish to quote from an editorial by Mr. J. L. Meeks, appearing May 27, 1937, in the Tri-Cities Daily of Sheffield, Ala., one of the papers of which he is editor and publisher, as follows:

The rising percentage over a period of years of farm tenancy surely tells us that this is no sudden problem. It has been growing in intensity until today it has become a sore spot on the body politic. We should have started seeking a solution 30 years ago. We did not. Certainly we must do so now * * *. Almost any kind of an initial program will be better than nothing * * *.

A sound, well-administered program to break up the downward trend in farm-home ownership must become one of the principal proposals of the Federal Government in the near future or within a few more years, the present downward spiral continuing, we will become a nation of princes and paupers and a nation of aristocrats and peasants. And none of us want that to happen, what with European experiences fresh in our mind or now before it.

The present measure is a start. I view it as only the beginning. I am happy to speak and vote for it, feeling that as time and experience show its good points and its defects we shall work out and develop an adequate farm-tenant program. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Farm Security Act of 1937."

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. DRIVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State recommending the enactment of legislation for the purposes described therein.

The recommendations of the Secretary of State have my approval, and I request the enactment of legislation for the purposes indicated, in order that the difficulty that has arisen in relation to the jurisdiction of the Special Mexican Claims Committee may be overcome.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 28, 1937.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following further message from the President of the United States which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

The Congress, by a joint resolution approved June 19, 1934, authorized me to accept membership for the Government of the United States in the International Labor Organization. Pursuant to that authorization I accepted such membership on behalf of the Government of the United States.

Representatives of this Government and of American employers and American labor attended the Twentieth Session of the International Labor Conference, held at Geneva June 4 to 24, 1936.

That Conference adopted three draft conventions and two recommendations, to wit:

The Draft Convention (no. 50) concerning the regulation of certain special systems of recruiting workers.

The Recommendation (no. 46) concerning the progressive elimination of recruiting,

The Draft Convention (no. 51) concerning the reduction of hours of work on public works,

The Draft Convention (no. 52) concerning annual holidays with pay,

The Recommendation (no. 47) concerning annual holidays with pay.

In becoming a member of the organization and subscribing to its constitution this Government accepted the following undertaking in regard to such draft conventions and recommendations:

Each of the members undertakes that it will, within the period of 1 year at most from the closing of the session of the conference, or if it is impossible owing to exceptional circumstances to do so within the period of 1 year, then at the earliest practicable moment and in no case later than 18 months from the closing of the session of the conference bring the recommendation or draft convention before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, for the enactment of legislation or other action. (Art. 19 (405), par. 5, Constitution of the International Labor Organization.)

In the case of a federal state, the power of which to enter into conventions on labor matters is subject to limitations, it shall be in the discretion of that government to treat a draft convention to which such limitations apply as a recommendation only, and the provisions of this article with respect to recommendations shall apply in such case. (Art. 19 (405), par. 9, Constitution of the International Labor Organization.)

In accordance with the foregoing undertaking, the above-named three draft conventions and two recommendations are herewith submitted to the Congress with the accompanying report of the Secretary of State and its enclosures, to which the attention of the Congress is invited.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the relief bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the intention of the gentleman to bring up the conference report the first thing in the morning?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my sad privilege and duty to announce the death of a former Member of this House from Virginia. The Honorable John W. Fishburne, of Charlottesville, Va., departed this life on the 25th instant. He was a Member of the Seventy-second Congress and served here with distinction. He is well known to many Members of the Seventy-fifth Congress who served with him in the Seventy-second Congress. He was beloved by them, and I know they will all join with me in mourning his departure.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in an extension of my remarks certain tables referred to therein, and also a very short excerpt from an editorial relating to the pending bill.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks which I made today in discussing the rule on the pending bill and to insert in connection therewith certain amendments which I expect to offer to the bill when it is considered under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF INSECT PESTS

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes in order that I may acquaint the House with an insect-pest emergency existing in the West.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE IN THE WEST

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on April 6, 1937, the President approved a joint resolution authorizing the sum of $2,000,000 to be made available annually for the purpose of control and eradication of insect pests. On April 27, 1937, the President approved a joint resolution, being House Joint Resolution 319, appropriating $1,000,000 for this purpose. This appropriation has been completely exhausted, and now I am advised by agricultural extension agents that the grasshopper situation is getting out of control in the West.

The Senate has added an amendment to the work-relief bill, which included the eradication of insect pests and minor miscellaneous work projects, but that money will be available for labor only and not for poison mix.

To meet this situation, there being no money whatever available now, the $1,000,000 having been expended, as a last resource today I introduced a resolution appropriating another $1,000,000 for this very necessary work, and I sincerely hope that favorable action may immediately be had on the resolution.

In support of the resolution which I have just introduced, I may cite the fact, as stated in the Appropriations Committee report on H. J. Res. 319, that the authorization carried in the resolution of April 6, 1937, was based upon the Budget estimate theretofore submitted to Congress by the President, with his approval, and that the sum of $2,000,000 recommended was solely for the control and eradication of grasshoppers. The joint resolution as passed included Mormon crickets and chinch bugs, but the point I make is that the Budget estimate was for grasshoppers only and it was estimated that $2,000,000 would be required. One million dollars was appropriated. I regret very much indeed that recent developments have borne out the Budget estimate. The exhaustion of the $1,000,000 in 60 days speaks for itself.

The Bureau of Entomology advises me that Arkansas, Oklahoma, Montana, Colorado, South Dakota, and Wyoming are badly infested and that North Dakota, Nebraska, and Kansas and other States are in line for invasion.

The agricultural-extension agent in Colorado wires me that 4,000 square miles in that State are badly infested and in a telegram dated June 26 he said they would take wing in about 10 days. He says, and I quote—

> The situation is getting out of control because of inadequate supplies and is very discouraging to farmers who have fought so vigorously and effectively to date.

He fairly begs for additional mixture and the Bureau of Entomology says there is no money to furnish it. A farmer who is running a mixing station in the infested area graphically describes the situation as follows—

> The 'hoppers are so thick that honestly the whole face of the earth seems to be moving when they are on the move.

And this means that they are only crawling at an estimated rate of 2½ miles per day. When they take wing there is no telling where they will go, so interest in the campaign of extermination is by no means limited to the present infested area, of which there is more than 4,000 square miles in southeastern Colorado, as against 700 square miles in any prior invasion.

The committee report accompanying House Joint Resolution 319 stated that "the campaign contemplates the States affected, the survey indicating possibility of parts of 24 States being involved." This robs the situation of the aspect of a merely local threat.

Mr. Speaker, I have contacted in the last 2 or 3 days every agency of relief with the result that apparently there is no relief except the appropriation of the additional $1,000,000 recommended by the Director of the Budget, an amount which, expended at this time, may save several times that amount in crop losses, not only in the infested areas but in adjacent sections which will shortly be invaded unless these pests are exterminated on the ground. I strongly urge immediate and favorable consideration of my resolution, not on my account, but on account of the distressed farmers and communities which have lost so much through drought the past 4 or 5 years.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made today with respect to H. R. 5860.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made this afternoon on the farm-tenancy bill and to include certain statistical tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein an amendment I expect to offer tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota, on account of illness.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is it contemplated that we go on with this bill at that time or take up a conference report?

Mr. RAYBURN. It had been the thought to take up the conference report, and that is the reason for asking that we meet at that hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, during the course of the general debate on the bill this afternoon in Committee of the Whole, our beloved and distinguished Speaker in the course of his remarks referred to some statistics which he expected to place in the RECORD as a portion of his remarks. During my discussion of the same bill I referred to some statistics. I did not have time to go into the details, but stated that if they were the same statistics to which the Speaker referred I would not ask to have mine made a part of my remarks. The statistics I have in mind are a break-down of the tenancy problem with reference to various States, showing the number of farmers in each State, the number of tenants and owners, and so forth, which are different from those which the Speaker intends to include within his remarks. Therefore I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks certain statistics. I understand the Speaker had in mind statistics in reference to regional matters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

INCLUSION OF CERTAIN POSITIONS WITHIN THE MERIT SYSTEM: SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As in legislative session, the Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 28, 1937.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: In signing the independent offices appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1938, I note that the appropriation for the Social Security Board contains a provision requiring Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation of experts and attorneys receiving compensation of $5,000 or more per annum.

I regret the inclusion of this provision in the bill. Aside from the hampering effect of the prohibition against receipt of compensation by such employees until confirmed by the Senate, particularly during periods when Congress is not in session, the method adopted for the selection of these employees seems to me unfortunate. In lieu of the present procedure for the appointment of these employees without regard to civil-service laws, I think it would have been preferable to bring the positions within the civil-service system. Under the reorganization of the work of the Civil Service Commission, as contemplated by the pending bill, S. 2700, it is expected that there would be developed improved methods for the examination and selection of such employees.

I am writing to express the hope that the Congress may see fit to enact legislation at an early date to place these positions under the merit system. I strongly recommend, as urged in my communication to the Congress of June 2, 1937, that all but policy-forming positions in the executive branch of the Government be included within the merit system.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, without desiring to question the right of the Chair to make appropriate reference of the communication, may I suggest that in view of the creation by the Senate of a select committee to consider the reorganization of the Government departments it might be more appropriate to refer the message of the President to the select committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make the suggestion in the form of a motion?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I concur in the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, except that I think the communication should probably be referred to the joint committee rather than to the select committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I made the suggestion, if the Senator will pardon me, that the communication be referred to the Senate select committee because the communication is addressed to the President of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Then I think it should go to the select committee rather than to the committee indicated by the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the communication from the President of the United States be referred to the Select Committee on Government Organization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the communication is so referred.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask that the action of the House of Representatives with reference to the Interior Department appropriation bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, as in legislative session, laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. NYE, and Mr. STEIWER conferees on the part of the Senate.

TREATY WITH MEXICO TERMINATING ARTICLE VIII OF TREATY OF DECEMBER 30, 1853

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I understand that the first treaty on the calendar is the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is correct.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive J (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty terminating article VIII of the treaty of December 30, 1853, which was read the second time, as follows:

The Governments of the United States of America and the United Mexican States, desirous of manifesting the mutual and enduring respect which they have for their independence; desirous also of eliminating all obstacles that may arise to the good relations which happily exist between them; and deeming that Article VIII of the Boundary Treaty which they concluded in the City of Mexico, December 30, 1853, was agreed upon in the light of a certain state of affairs which has disappeared, have agreed to conclude a treaty in which the said article VIII is declared to be terminated, and for this purpose, have appointed as their Plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Cordell Hull, Secretary of State of the United States of America, and

The President of the United Mexican States, Francisco Castillo Nájera, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United Mexican States to the United States of America.

Who, after having shown to each other their respective Full Powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I

Article VIII of the Boundary Treaty concluded between the United States of America and the United Mexican States in the City of Mexico, December 30, 1853, is hereby terminated.

ARTICLE II

The present Treaty shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in accordance with their constitutional methods, and the ratifications shall be exchanged, as soon as possible, in the city of Washington, D. C.

The Treaty shall go into effect on the day when the ratifications are exchanged.

Done in duplicate, in English and Spanish, in the city of Washington, D. C., on April 13, 1937.

CORDELL HULL [SEAL].
F. CASTILLO NÁJERA [SEAL].

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this treaty is not in the group of eight treaties, known as the Pan American treaties, which were adopted at Buenos Aires. It relates to the Gadsden Treaty of 1853. The object of the treaty is to repeal article VIII of the Gadsden Treaty. Article VIII provided for the construction of a plank road or railroad across the Tehuantepec Peninsula which might be used by citizens of the United States equally with citizens of Mexico. At the present time there is no necessity for that article, and Mexico desires it repealed. The treaty now pending is for the purpose of repealing article VIII of the treaty of 1853.

In the President's message it is stated:

The treaty terminating article VIII of the treaty of December 30, 1853, was signed by the Secretary of State and the Mexican Ambassador at Washington on April 13, 1937, and I transmit it herewith to the Senate.

Article VIII of the treaty of 1853, while of potential value at the time it was negotiated, has never operated and has no present-day use, since the work contemplated in its first paragraph was undertaken and completed by Mexico without the assistance of the United States, and transportation between the eastern and western parts of the United States is now better served by transcontinental means of transportation across the United States or by the Panama Canal than it can be served across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec to which the right was granted by article VIII of the Gadsden Treaty.

I ask the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification of the treaty of April 13, 1937, herewith transmitted.

Then the President said:

The termination of article VIII of the treaty of December 30, 1853, will not affect any other provisions of that treaty, and they will remain in full force and effect.

I think that should be a sufficient statement with regard to the treaty, and I ask for its ratification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive J (75th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty terminating article VIII of the treaty of December 30, 1853, signed by the Secretary of State and the Mexican Ambassador at Washington on April 13, 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is one of the eight treaties which were negotiated and executed at Buenos Aires at the recent convention there. The treaties all deal with the relationship between the Pan American countries and the United States. They deal, however, with different subjects.

In the beginning I may say, as it applies to each of the treaties, that, in my opinion and I believe in the opinion of nearly all the members of the Foreign Relations Committee, the treaties will be of great value in preserving friendship not only between the United States and the Latin American Republics but between those republics themselves. The treaties are excellently drawn. They have avoided any effort whatever at force. The conversations which are provided for will be consultations looking to the settlement of disputes between the parties solely by peaceful methods, by mediation, arbitration, or other judicial process.

All the way through the treaties it will be found, while there is an effort at solidarity, a desire that all the republics shall agree on the peaceful methods to be utilized both in time of peace and in time of war, that the individual independence of action by each Government is retained intact.

The treaties were given very careful study by the Foreign Relations Committee. We had before us the Secretary of State and the Under Secretary of State. All such questions as were deemed proper and advisable were asked. I think it well to read at this time a short statement made by the Secretary of State which applies equally to all the treaties to be considered today. His statement reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 15, 1937.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to transmit herewith the following instruments which were negotiated and signed at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace held at Buenos Aires December 1–23, 1936:

1. Convention for the Maintenance, Preservation, and Reestablishment of Peace.
2. Additional Protocol Relative to Nonintervention.
3. Treaty on the Prevention of Controversies.
4. Inter-American Treaty on Good Offices and Mediation.
5. Convention to Coordinate, Extend, and Assure the Fulfillment of Existing Treaties Between the American States.
6. Convention on the Pan American Highway.
7. Convention for the Promotion of Inter-American Cultural Relations.
8. Convention Concerning Artistic Exhibitions.

These documents were signed by the delegates of the United States of America, subject to ratification, in accordance with the full powers issued by you, and accordingly they are sent to you with a view to their transmission to the Senate for its advice and consent to their ratification, if you approve thereof.

I am transmitting these instruments with separate reports for your convenience, as well as that of the Senate, if you approve of their submission. The separate reports briefly describe and explain these documents.

This conference was convened in pursuance of the proposal made by you on January 30, 1936, to the Presidents of all the American republics that the time was opportune for the countries of this hemisphere at a common council table to consider their joint responsibility for the maintenance of peace. Both the spirit in which the deliberations of the conference were conducted and the achievements themselves, all reached by unanimous agreement, established this conference as one of the most successful international gatherings in recent times.

The delegations of the several countries demonstrated a solidarity of purpose and determination to strengthen the edifice of peace seldom seen at an international conference. That they succeeded is evidenced by the instruments themselves. These reinforce the structure of peace by the reaffirmation of obligations to settle by pacific means all controversies of an international character; by providing the machinery for consultation and cooperation to prevent the outbreak of war, and, should these efforts unhappily fail to prevent the spread or prolongation of hostilities; by declaring inadmissible intervention by one state in the internal or external affairs of another; and by providing measures for the improvement of cultural relations and communications. These instruments are interconnected segments of a structure of permanent peace, so that failure to ratify one will weaken the efficacy of all.

The policy of the good neighbor which you enunciated in your first inaugural message brought into the conduct of our foreign relations a spirit of friendship, tolerance, and good will. The early evidences of what that policy means in practice has dissipated the many apprehensions held among the other American republics concerning our motives and desires. The conference at Buenos Aires was, perhaps, the most important demonstration thus far of our motives and of our willingness to cooperate for the common good. From every point of view it is to be desired that this country do its share in carrying into reality the high hopes aroused by that conference by ratifying the various instruments adopted there.

I therefore recommend these instruments to your favorable consideration, with a view to their submission to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification.

Faithfully yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. President, as these treaties are all interconnected, I wish also to read a declaration.

At that conference there was adopted a declaration which bears very closely upon the interpretation of each and all these eight treaties. I think it well to have in the RECORD that declaration. I will read it.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES OF INTER-AMERICAN SOLIDARITY AND COOPERATION

The Governments of the American republics, having considered:

That they have a common likeness in their democratic form of government, and their common ideals of peace and justice, manifested in the several treaties and conventions which they have signed for the purpose of constituting a purely American system tending toward the preservation of peace, the proscription of war, the harmonious development of their commerce and of their cultural aspirations demonstrated in all of their political, economic, social, scientific, and artistic activities;

That the existence of continental interests obliges them to maintain solidarity of principles as the basis of the life of the relations of each to every other American nation;

That Pan Americanism, as a principle of American international law, by which is understood a moral union of all of the American republics in defense of their common interests based upon the most perfect equality and reciprocal respect for their rights of autonomy, independence, and free development, requires the proclamation of principles of American international law; and

That it is necessary to consecrate the principle of American solidarity in all noncontinental conflicts, especially since those limited to the American Continent, should find a peaceful solution by the means established by the treaties and conventions now in force or in the instruments hereafter to be executed,

The Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace

DECLARES

1. That the American nations, true to their republican institutions, proclaim their absolute juridical liberty, their unrestricted respect for their several sovereignty, and the existence of a common democracy throughout America;

2. That every act susceptible of disturbing the peace of America affects each and every one of them, and justifies the initiation of the procedure of consultation provided for in the Convention for the Maintenance, Preservation, and Reestablishment of Peace, executed at this conference; and

3. That the following principles are accepted by the international American community:

(a) Proscription of territorial conquest, and that, in consequence, no acquisition made through violence shall be recognized;

(b) Intervention by one State in the internal or external affairs of another State is condemned;

(c) Forcible collection of pecuniary debts is illegal; and

(d) Any difference or dispute between the American nations, whatever its nature or origin, shall be settled by the methods of conciliation, or full arbitration, or through operation of international justice.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. There is a treaty pending known as the Argentine Sanitary Treaty. Since this discussion opened two Senators have asked me whether any of these treaties dealt in any way with that subject matter. I have stated that said treaty is not among the treaties now being considered, and no reference to the subject matter is to be found in any of these treaties.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not. The so-called Argentine Treaty has no relation whatever to the matter here, and is still in the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BORAH. And the subject matter is not incorporated in any of these treaties?

Mr. PITTMAN. Not any subject relating to it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator which one of these treaties is the one to which a number of republics attached reservations, and we in turn attached a reservation?

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not this one. It is Executive P, the last one.

I move that the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the treaty is simple enough on its face, but I think it is of very great moment. The treaty provides:

The High Contracting Parties declare inadmissible the intervention of any one of them, directly or indirectly, and for whatever reason, in the internal or external affairs of any other of the Parties.

The violation of the provisions of this Article shall give rise to mutual consultation, with the object of exchanging views and seeking methods of peaceful adjustment.

If that principle can be carried into effect, if this treaty can be made effective, it will inaugurate a new reign of good will and of peace upon the western continent, and especially among our South American brethren.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the additional protocol will be reported to the Senate.

The additional protocol was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive M (75th Cong., 1st sess.), an additional protocol relative to nonintervention, signed at Buenos Aires on December 23, 1936, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and the other 20 American republics represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace held at Buenos Aires in December 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the additional protocol is ratified.

Each Government shall appoint its own representative to the said commission, the meetings of which are to be held, alternately, in the capital city of one and the other Governments represented in each of them. The first meeting shall be held at the seat of the Government which convokes it.

The instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory Governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE 6

The present Treaty will come into effect between the High Contracting Parties in the order in which they deposit their respective ratifications.

ARTICLE 7

The present Treaty shall remain in effect indefinitely but may be denounced by means of one year's notice given to the Pan American Union, which shall transmit it to the other signatory governments. After the expiration of this period the Treaty shall cease in its effects as regards the party which denounces it but shall remain in effect for the remaining High Contracting Parties.

In witness whereof, the above mentioned Plenipotentiaries sign the present Treaty in English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French and hereunto affix their respective seals, at the City of Buenos Aires, Capital of the Argentine Republic, on the twenty-third day of the month of December 1936.

RESERVATION OF THE DELEGATION OF PERU

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, this series of treaties was reached on the calendar last week in executive session. On account of the absence of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] I asked that the treaties go over. The Senator from California is unavoidably absent today. I have a memorandum from him with respect to this treaty which I should like to have placed in the RECORD:

I cannot ask Senator PITTMAN to continue further the consideration of those treaties, but please to register me against—
(1) Treaty between American republics for the maintenance, preservation, and reestablishment of peace. (Executive N.)

That is the treaty now before the Senate for consideration.

(2) Convention between American republics for the maintenance, preservation, and reestablishment of peace. (Executive L.)
(3) Convention between American republics to coordinate, extend, and assure the fulfillment of existing treaties. (Executive P.)
And particularly Executive P.

That is the declaration of the able Senator from California. I desire the RECORD to show his opposition to these three treaties.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to the fact that the Commission provided for in the treaty is to perform no function as a court of arbitration or mediation. It is to be created for the purpose of studying causes which may arouse controversies between the various countries, and to make recommendations with regard to future treaties or amendments to existing treaties.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive N (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a treaty on the prevention of controversies signed at Buenos Aires on December 23, 1936, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and the other 20 American republics represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace, held at Buenos Aires in December 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the treaty is ratified.

ARTICLE I

When a controversy arises between them, that cannot be settled by the usual diplomatic means, the High Contracting Parties may have recourse to the good offices or mediation of an eminent citizen of any of the other American countries, preferably chosen from a general list made up in accordance with the following article.

ARTICLE II

To prepare the aforementioned list, each Government, as soon as the present treaty is ratified, shall name two citizens selected from among the most eminent by reason of their high character and juridical learning.

The designations shall immediately be communicated to the Pan American Union, which shall prepare the list and shall forward copies thereof to the contracting parties.

ARTICLE III

According to the hypothesis set forth in Article I, the countries in controversy shall, by common agreement, select one of the persons named on this list, for the purposes indicated in this treaty.

The person selected shall name the place where, under his chairmanship, one duly authorized representative of each of the parties shall meet in order to seek a peaceful and equitable solution of the difference.

If the parties are unable to agree concerning the selection of the person lending his good offices or mediation, each one shall choose one of those named on the list. The two citizens chosen in this way shall select, from among the names listed, a third person who shall undertake the functions referred to, endeavoring, in so far as possible, to make a choice that shall be acceptable to both parties.

ARTICLE IV

The mediator shall determine a period of time, not to exceed six nor be less than three months for the parties to arrive at some peaceful settlement. Should this period expire before the parties have reached some solution, the controversy shall be submitted to the procedure of conciliation provided for in existing inter-American agreements.

ARTICLE V

During the procedure established in this Treaty each of the interested parties shall provide for its own expense and shall contribute equally to common costs or honoraria.

ARTICLE VI

The present Treaty shall not affect obligations previously entered into by the High Contracting Parties by virtue of international agreements.

ARTICLE VII

The present Treaty shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The original instrument shall be deposited in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic which shall transmit authentic certified copies to the Governments for the aforementioned purpose of ratification. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

Knowing that the general welfare will be greater when there is greater facility for the exchange of the products of said countries;

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the treaty provides for cooperation between the Latin American Republics and the United States in the building of an intercontinental highway, which has been sought for a long time. The contracting parties are to appoint commissioners for the purpose of study and cooperation and coordination of the proposed highway. It is provided that the highway through all the countries shall at all times be open to free travel by the citizens of any of the contracting parties.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, would the commissioners so designated have any authority to bind their respective governments?

Mr. PITTMAN. They would not.

Mr. KING. Or is there any commitment in the treaty as to the adoption of any plan or the amount which is to be expended?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is no such provision in the treaty. The commission is to be made up of representatives of the contracting parties, who will study the plans and procedure and report to their respective governments.

Mr. KING. Would they have the right to adopt a plan for the construction of a highway, for instance, through Mexico or Honduras or some part of the United States?

Mr. PITTMAN. They would have, but it would be subject, of course, to the approval of the countries through which the road was built. The only binding clause is that when the road is constructed it shall be open to free travel by the nationals of all the contracting parties.

Mr. KING. Would they have authority to allocate to the respective governments the amounts which they think the respective governments should appropriate for the construction of the highway?

Mr. PITTMAN. They would have no such authority.

Mr. KING. That is entirely a matter for legislation?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; that is entirely a matter for legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive Q (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention on the Pan American Highway signed at Buenos Aires on December 23, 1936, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and 19 of the other American Republics represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace held at Buenos Aires in December 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to and the convention is ratified.

CONVENTION BETWEEN AMERICAN REPUBLICS FOR PROMOTION OF INTER-AMERICAN CULTUPAL RELATIONS

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive R (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention for the promotion of inter-American cultural relations, which was read the second time, as follows:

The Governments represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace;

Considering that the purpose for which the Conference was called would be advanced by greater mutual knowledge and understanding of the people and institutions of the countries represented and a more consistent educational solidarity on the American continent; and

ARTICLE I

Every year each Government shall award to each of two graduate students or teachers of each other country, selected in accordance with the procedure established in Article II hereof, a fellowship for the ensuing scholastic year. The awards shall be made after an exchange between the two Governments concerned of the panels referred to in Article II hereof. Each fellowship shall provide tuition and subsidiary expenses and maintenance at an institution of higher learning to be designated by the country awarding the fellowship, through such agency as may seem to it appropriate, in cooperation with the recipient so far as may be practicable. Traveling expenses to and from the designated institution and other incidental expenses shall be met by the recipient or the nominating Government. Furthermore, each Government agrees to encourage, by appropriate means, the interchange of students and teachers of institutions within its territory and those of the other contracting countries, during the usual vacation periods.

ARTICLE II

Each Government shall have the privilege of nominating and presenting to each other Government on or before the date fixed at the close of this article a panel of the names of five graduate students or teachers together with such information concerning them as the Government awarding the fellowship shall deem necessary, from which panel the latter Government shall select the names of two persons. The same students shall not be nominated for more than two successive years; and, except under unusual circumstances, for more than one year. There shall be no obligation for any country to give consideration to the panel of any other country not nominated and presented on or before the date fixed at the close of this article, and fellowships for which no panel of names is presented on or before the date specified may be awarded to applicants nominated on the panels of any other country but not receiving fellowships. Unless otherwise agreed upon between the countries concerned, the following dates shall prevail:

Countries of South America, November 30th.

All other countries, March 31st.

ARTICLE III

If for any reason it becomes necessary that a student be repatriated the Government awarding the fellowship may effect the repatriation, at the expense of the nominating Government.

ARTICLE IV

Each High Contracting Party shall communicate to each of the other High Contracting Parties through diplomatic channels, on the first of January of every alternate year, a complete list of the full professors available for exchange service from the outstanding universities, scientific institutions and technical schools of each country. From this list each one of the other High Contracting Parties shall arrange to select a visiting professor who shall either give lectures in various centers, or conduct regular courses of instruction, or pursue special research in some designated institution and who shall in other appropriate ways promote better understanding between the parties cooperating, it being understood, however, that preference shall be given to teaching rather than to research work. The sending Government shall provide the expenses for travel to and from the capital where the exchange professor resides and the maintenance and local travel expenses while carrying out the duties for which the professor was selected. Salaries of the professors shall be paid by the sending country.

ARTICLE V

The High Contracting Parties agree that each Government shall designate or create an appropriate agency or appoint a special officer, charged with the responsibility of carrying out in the most efficient way possible the obligations assumed by such Government in this Convention.

ARTICLE VI

Nothing in this convention shall be construed by the High Contracting Parties as obligating any one of them to interfere with the independence of its institutions of learning or with the freedom of academic teaching and administration therein.

ARTICLE VII

Regulations concerning details for which it shall appear advisable to provide, shall be framed, in each of the contracting countries, by such agency as may seem appropriate to its Government, and copies of such regulations shall be promptly furnished, through the diplomatic channel, to the Governments of the other High Contracting Parties.

ARTICLE VIII

The present Convention shall not affect obligations previously entered into by the High Contracting Parties by virtue of international agreements.

ARTICLE IX

The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The original instrument shall be deposited in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic which shall transmit authentic certified copies to the Governments for the aforementioned purpose of ratification. The instruments of ratification shall be deposited in the archives of the Pan American Union in Washington, which shall notify the signatory Governments of said deposit. Such notification shall be considered as an exchange of ratifications.

ARTICLE X

The present Convention will come into effect between the High Contracting Parties in the order in which they deposit their respective ratifications.

ARTICLE XI

The present Convention shall remain in effect indefinitely but may be denounced by means of one year's notice given to the Pan American Union, which shall transmit it to the other signatory Governments. After the expiration of this period the Convention shall cease in its effects as regards the party which denounces it but shall remain in effect for the remaining High Contracting Parties.

In witness whereof, the above mentioned Plenipotentiaries sign the present Convention in English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French and hereunto affix their respective seals, at the city of Buenos Aires, Capital of the Argentine Republic, on the twenty-third day of the month of December 1936.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the treaty provides for fellowships. Each of the contracting parties is to make out a list of those who may be selected for fellowships. Each country grants a fellowship, through one of its universities, to two of the nationals of each of the other countries.

In addition to that, another provision is that there will be a list of professors available for transfer to the universities in the respective countries. Professors will be selected from these lists by each and all of the countries in exchange of professorships.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, how is it to be determined which university will be selected? Obviously there will be a good deal of competition between the great universities of the United States and some of the other countries for the fellowships.

Mr. PITTMAN. The country designating the professors selects the university from which they come, and pays all expenses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this convention is simply intended to facilitate the sending of exhibits by the various governments, or by those whom they shall have approved as representatives, to exhibitions held in other countries, and provides that, insofar as the statutes of the various countries may permit, those sending such exhibits shall be relieved of import duties.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that would mean, I presume, would it not, that if there be no general law which would relieve the imports from the ordinary tariff duties statutes would have to be enacted by the respective governments?

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true.

Mr. KING. The ratification of the treaty does not ipso facto repeal the tariff laws?

Mr. PITTMAN. It does not. It provides "so far as its legislation may permit."

Mr. ROBINSON. But there is no difficulty in that particular, because we have always granted such consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

CONVENTION BETWEEN AMERICAN REPUBLICS FOR THE MAINTENANCE, PRESERVATION, AND REESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive L (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention for the maintenance, preservation, and reestablishment of peace, which was read the second time, as follows:

The Governments represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace,

Considering:

That according to the statement of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President of the United States, to whose lofty ideals the meeting of this Conference is due, the measures to be adopted by it "would advance the cause of world peace, inasmuch as the agreements which might be reached would supplement and reinforce the efforts of the League of Nations and of all other existing or future peace agencies in seeking to prevent war";

That every war or threat of war affects directly or indirectly all civilized peoples and endangers the great principles of liberty and justice which constitute the American ideal and the standard of American international policy;

That the Treaty of Paris of 1928 (Kellogg-Briand Pact) has been accepted by almost all of the civilized states, whether or not members of other peace organizations, and that the Treaty of Non-Aggression and Conciliation of 1933 (Saavedra Lamas Pact signed at Rio de Janeiro) has the approval of the twenty-one American Republics represented in this Conference,

Have resolved to give contractual form to these purposes by concluding the present Convention, to which end they have appointed the Plenipotentiaries hereafter mentioned:

Argentina: Carlos Saavedra Lamas, Roberto M. Ortiz, Miguel Angel Cárcano, José María Cantilo, Felipe A. Espil, Leopoldo Melo, Isidoro Ruiz Moreno, Daniel Antokoletz, Carlos Brebbia, César Díaz Cisneros.

Paraguay: Miguel Angel Soler, J. Isidro Ramírez.

Who, after having deposited their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

In the event that the peace of the American Republics is menaced, and in order to coordinate efforts to prevent war, any of the Governments of the American Republics signatory to the Treaty of Paris of 1928 or to the Treaty of Non-Aggression and Conciliation of 1933, or to both, whether or not a member of other peace organizations, shall consult with the other Governments of the American Republics, which, in such event, shall consult together for the purpose of finding and adopting methods of peaceful cooperation.

ARTICLE II

In the event of war, or a virtual state of war between American States, the Governments of the American Republics represented at this Conference shall undertake without delay the necessary mutual consultations, in order to exchange views and to seek, within the obligations resulting from the pacts above mentioned and from the standards of international morality, a method of peaceful collaboration; and, in the event of an international war outside America which might menace the peace of the American Republics, such consultation shall also take place to determine the proper time and manner in which the signatory states, if they so desire, may eventually cooperate in some action tending to preserve the peace of the American Continent.

ARTICLE III

It is agreed that any question regarding the interpretation of the present Convention, which it has not been possible to settle through diplomatic channels, shall be submitted to the procedure of conciliation provided by existing agreements, or to arbitration or to judicial settlement.

ARTICLE IV

The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures. The original convention shall be deposited in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic which shall communicate the ratifications to the other signatories. The Convention shall come into effect between the High Contracting Parties in the order in which they have deposited their ratifications.

ARTICLE V

The present Convention shall remain in effect indefinitely but may be denounced by means of one year's notice, after the expiration of which period the Convention shall cease in its effects as regards the party which denounces it but shall remain in effect for the remaining signatory States. Denunciations shall be addressed to the Government of the Argentine Republic, which shall transmit them to the other contracting States.

In witness whereof, the above mentioned Plenipotentiaries sign the present Convention in English, Spanish, Portuguese and French and hereunto affix their respective seals, at the City of Buenos Aires, Capital of the Argentine Republic, on the twenty-third day of the month of December, nineteen hundred and thirty-six.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In the first part of the treaty, and I understand it is an integral part thereof, on page 4, the paragraph occurs which I will read:

That according to the statement of Franklin D. Roosevelt, the President of the United States, to whose lofty ideals the meeting of this conference is due, the measures to be adopted by it "would advance the cause of world peace, inasmuch as the agreements which might be reached would supplement and reinforce the efforts of the League of Nations and of all other existing or future peace agencies in seeking to prevent war."

I should like respectfully to inquire whether that provision in any way commits the United States to the decisions and actions of the League of Nations.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not in the slightest degree; but the Senator will remember, from the report of the conference, that it appears that a number of the republics are members of the League of Nations, and throughout the treaty they have made reservations with respect to their obligations under existing treaties, stating that they are prior and superior to the obligations contained in the treaty under consideration. That is the reason for the inclusion of the language mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator. I should like to ask him one more question. Did the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] concur in the action of the committee in that respect?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Idaho is present and can answer that question for himself.

Mr. LODGE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not see him.

Mr. BORAH. I did concur. I agree with the view expressed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask if there is anything in the treaty now under consideration which would in any way weaken or invalidate the Kellogg-Briand Pact, or restrict the operations of that pact so far as it has been assented to by signatories to this treaty?

Mr. PITTMAN. There is not. In fact, in the Declaration of Principles of Inter-American Solidarity and Cooperation, adopted by the various countries, which I read this morning, it is expressly stated that these various treaties are adopted in pursuance of the efforts of the various countries to carry out the Kellogg-Briand Pact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive L (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention for the maintenance, preservation, and reestablishment of peace signed at Buenos Aires on December 23, 1936, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and the other 20 American republics represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace held at Buenos Aires in December 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

Who, after having deposited their full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed upon the following provisions:

ARTICLE 1

Taking into consideration that, by the Treaty to Avoid and Prevent Conflicts between the American States, signed at Santiago, May 3, 1923 (known as the Gondra Treaty) the High Contracting Parties agree that all controversies which it has been impossible to settle through diplomatic channels or to submit to arbitration in accordance with existing treaties shall be submitted for investigation and report to a Commission of Inquiry;

That by the Treaty for the Renunciation of War, signed at Paris on August 28, 1928 (known as the Kellogg-Briand Pact, or Pact of Paris) the High Contracting Parties solemnly declare in the names of their respective peoples that they condemn recourse to war for the solution of international controversies and renounce it as an instrument of national policy in their relations with one another;

That by the General Convention of Inter-American Conciliation, signed at Washington, January 5, 1929, the High Contracting Parties agree to submit to the procedure of conciliation all controversies between them, which it may not have been possible to settle through diplomatic channels, and to establish a "Commission of Conciliation" to carry out the obligations assumed in the Convention;

That by the General Treaty of Inter-American Arbitration, signed at Washington, January 5, 1929, the High Contracting Parties bind themselves to submit to arbitration, subject to certain exceptions, all differences between them of an international character, which it has not been possible to adjust by diplomacy and which are juridical in their nature by reason of being susceptible of decision by the application of the principles of law, and moreover, to create a procedure of arbitration to be followed; and

That by the Treaty of Non-Aggression and Conciliation, signed at Rio de Janeiro October 10, 1933 (known as the Saavedra Lamas Treaty), the High Contracting Parties solemnly declare that they condemn wars of aggression in their mutual relations or in those with other states and that the settlement of disputes or controversies between them shall be effected only by pacific means which have the sanction of international law, and also declare that as between them territorial questions must not be settled by violence, and that they will not recognize any territorial arrangement not obtained by pacific means nor the validity of the occupation or acquisition of territories brought about by force of arms, and, moreover, in a case of noncompliance with these obligations, the contracting states undertake to adopt, in their character as neutrals, a common and solidary attitude and to exercise the political, juridical, or economic means authorized by international law, and to bring the influence of public opinion to bear, without, however, resorting to intervention, either diplomatic or armed, subject nevertheless to the attitude that may be incumbent upon them by virtue of their collective treaties; and, furthermore, undertake to create a procedure of conciliation;

The High Contracting Parties reaffirm the obligations entered into to settle, by pacific means, controversies of an international character that may arise between them.

ARTICLE 2

The High Contracting Parties, convinced of the necessity for the co-operation and consultation provided for in the Convention for the Maintenance, Preservation and Reestablishment of Peace signed by them on this same day, agree that in all matters which affect peace on the Continent, such consultation and co-operation shall have as their object to assist, through the tender of friendly good offices and of mediation, the fulfillment by the American Republics of existing obligations for pacific settlement, and to take counsel together, with full recognition of their juridical equality, as sovereign and independent states, and of their general right to individual liberty of action, when an emergency arises which affects their common interest in the maintenance of peace.

ARTICLE 3

In case of threat of war, the High Contracting Parties shall apply the provisions contained in Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention for the Maintenance, Preservation, and Reestablishment of Peace, above referred to, it being understood that, while such consultation is in progress and for a period of not more than six months, the parties in dispute will not have recourse to hostilities or take any military action whatever.

ARTICLE 4

The High Contracting Parties further agree that, in the event of a dispute between two or more of them, they will seek to settle it in a spirit of mutual regard for their respective rights, having recourse for this purpose to direct diplomatic negotiation or to the alternative procedures of mediation, commissions of inquiry, commissions of conciliation, tribunals of arbitration, and courts of justice, as provided in the treaties to which they may be parties; and they also agree that, should it be impossible to settle the dispute by diplomatic negotiation and should the States in dispute have recourse to the other procedures provided in the present Article, they will report this fact and the progress of the negotiations to the other signatory States. These provisions do not affect controversies already submitted to a diplomatic or juridical procedure by virtue of special agreements.

ARTICLE 5

The High Contracting Parties agree that, in the event that the methods provided by the present Convention or by agreements previously concluded should fail to bring about a pacific settlement of differences that may arise between any two or more of them, and hostilities should break out between two or more of them, they shall be governed by the following stipulations:

(a) They shall, in accordance with the terms of the Treaty of Non-Aggression and Conciliation (Saavedra Lamas Treaty) adopt in their character as neutrals a common and solidary attitude; and shall consult immediately with one another, and take cognizance of the outbreak of hostilities in order to determine either jointly or individually, whether such hostilities shall be regarded as constituting a state of war so as to call into effect the provisions of the present Convention.

(b) It is understood that, in regard to the question whether hostilities actually in progress constitute a state of war, each of the High Contracting Parties shall reach a prompt decision. In any event, should hostilities be actually in progress between two or more of the Contracting Parties, or between two or more signatory States not at the time parties to this Convention by reason of failure to ratify it, each Contracting Party shall take notice of the situation and shall adopt such an attitude as would be consistent with other multilateral treaties to which it is a party or in accordance with its municipal legislation. Such action shall not be deemed an unfriendly act on the part of any state affected thereby.

Without prejudice to the universal principles of neutrality provided for in the case of an international war outside of America and without affecting the duties contracted by those American States, members of the League of Nations, the High Contracting Parties reaffirm their loyalty to the principles enunciated in the five agreements referred to in Article 1, and they agree that in the case of an outbreak of hostilities or threat of an outbreak of hostilities between two or more of them, they shall, through consultation, immediately endeavor to adopt in their character as neutrals a common and solidary attitude, in order to discourage or prevent the spread or prolongation of hostilities.

With this object, and having in mind the diversity of cases and circumstances, they may consider the imposition of prohibitions or restrictions on the sale or shipment of arms, munitions and implements of war, loans or other financial help to the states in conflict, in accordance with the municipal legislation of the High Contracting Parties, and without detriment to their obligations derived from other treaties to which they are or may become parties.

ARTICLE 7

Nothing contained in the present Convention shall be understood as affecting the rights and duties of the High Contracting Parties which are at the same time members of the League of Nations.

ARTICLE 8

The present Convention shall be ratified by the High Contracting Parties in accordance with their constitutional procedures. The original convention and the instruments of ratification shall be deposited with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic, which shall communicate the ratifications to the other Signatory States. It shall come into effect when ratifications have been deposited by not less than eleven Signatory States.

The Convention shall remain in force indefinitely; but it may be denounced by any of the High Contracting Parties, such denunciation to be effective one year after the date upon which such notification has been given. Notices of denunciation shall be communicated to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Argentine Republic which shall transmit copies thereof to the other Signatory States. Denunciation shall not be regarded as valid if the Party making such denunciation shall be actually in a state of war, or shall be engaged in hostilities without fulfilling the provisions established by this Convention.

In witness whereof, the Plenipotentiaries above mentioned have signed this Treaty in English, Spanish, Portuguese, and French, and have affixed thereto their respective seals, in the City of Buenos Aires, Capital of the Argentine Republic, this twenty-third day of December of the year 1936.

RESERVATIONS

Reservation of the Argentine Delegation: (1) In no case, under Article VI, can foodstuffs or raw materials destined for the civil populations of belligerent countries be considered as contraband of war, nor shall there exist any duty to prohibit credits for the acquisition of said foodstuffs or raw materials which have the destination indicated.

With reference to the embargo on arms, each Nation may reserve freedom of action in the face of a war of aggression.

Reservation of the Delegation of Paraguay: (2) In no case, under Article VI, can foodstuffs or raw materials destined for the civil populations of belligerent countries be considered as contraband of war, nor shall there exist any duty to prohibit credits for the acquisition of said foodstuffs or raw materials which have the destination indicated.

With reference to the embargo on arms, each Nation may reserve freedom of action in the face of a war of aggression.

Reservation of the Delegation of El Salvador: (3) With reservation with respect to the idea of continental solidarity when confronted by foreign aggression.

Reservation of the Delegation of Colombia: (4) In signing this Convention, the Delegation of Colombia understands that the phrase "in their character as neutrals", which appears in Articles V and VI, implies a new concept of international law which allows a distinction to be drawn between the aggressor and the attacked, and to treat them different. At the same time, the Delegation of Colombia considers it necessary, in order to assure the full and effective application of this Pact, to set down in writing the following definition of the aggressor:

That State shall be considered as an aggressor which becomes responsible for one or several of the following acts:

(a) That its armed forces, to whatever branch they may belong, illegally cross the land, sea, or air frontiers of other States. When the violation of the territory of a State has been effected by irresponsible bands organized within or outside of its territory and which have received direct or indirect help from another State, such violation shall be considered equivalent, for the purposes of the present Article, to that effected by the regular forces of the State responsible for the aggression;

(b) That it has intervened in a unilateral or illegal way in the internal or external affairs of another State;

(c) That it has refused to fulfill a legally given arbitral decision or sentence of international justice.

No consideration of any kind, whether political, military, economic, or of any other kind, may serve as an excuse or justification for the aggression here anticipated.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, this is the most comprehensive of all the treaties which have been before the Senate today. It contains a number of reservations by several of the countries; and the Foreign Relations Committee, in presenting this treaty, also makes a reservation on behalf of the United States. I shall be glad to endeavor to answer questions which may be asked concerning the treaty by Senators who are not members of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada desire to have read now the reservations made by other nations?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think it is necessary that the reservations be read, in view of the recommendations of the Foreign Relations Committee, unless some Senator desires them read.

Mr. KING. What are the recommendations?

Mr. PITTMAN. The resolution of ratification, of course, will be read later, but I will state the reservation which is made a part of the resolution of ratification, and which is as follows:

The United States of America holds that the reservations to this convention do not constitute an amendment to the text, but that such reservations, interpretations, and definitions by separate governments are solely for the benefit of such respective governments and are not intended to be controlling upon the United States of America.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. Are any of the reservations made by other nations signatory to the treaty of such character as to increase or diminish the responsibilities resting upon the United States as a signatory to the treaty?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not think that the committee so considered them. However, there was a reservation, such as this, on the part of Paraguay:

Reservation of the delegation of Paraguay: (2) In no case, under article VI, can foodstuffs or raw materials destined for the civil populations of belligerent countries be considered as contraband of war, nor shall there exist any duty to prohibit credits for the acquisition of said foodstuffs or raw materials which have the destination indicated.

That is a declaration as to what may constitute contraband of war in the event of war. We do not desire to be bound by the admission that that will always be true.

Mr. KING. May I ask another question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. Assume signatories to the League of Nations or to the Kellogg-Briand Pact wage war among themselves; take two nations, they become belligerents and one of the two, if not both, appeals to the League of Nations, is there anything in this treaty that would drag the United States into the controversy, or would the appeal to the League of Nations by one of the parties, the other resisting, repeal ipso facto the provisions of the treaty under consideration as between the parties?

Mr. PITTMAN. To a certain extent, by its very terms, such a circumstance would repeal or abrogate the treaty, because it explicitly provides that all its provisions are subject to every other treaty that any of the signatory powers may have entered into. It also expressly provides that in the case of consultations each Government may make its own decision and act independently. So that is all taken care of.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I had in mind a case of this character: Supposing two South American republics, who are members of the League of Nations, became involved in a controversy and hostilities were imminent, indeed entered upon, and one of the parties appealed to the League of Nations for the purpose of settling the controversy and the other refused to do so, what would be our duty and the duty of the other signatories to the treaty in respect to both of the belligerents, and particularly to the belligerent that had appealed to the League of Nations for a determination of the conflict?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to say for myself that I do not find anything in these treaties that changes our attitude or relationship in any respect toward the League of Nations. Whatever might transpire under the treaties would not in any degree change our position or our relationship or our obligations so far as the League of Nations is concerned.

Mr. PITTMAN. That had to be taken care of, I will say, Mr. President, because some of the governments are still in the League of Nations and others are not. Undoubtedly, if two governments, members of the League of Nations, in the event of war should appeal to the League of Nations, our jurisdiction or responsibility under this treaty, even to the extent of engaging in consultation, would be eliminated.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask, does not the able chairman understand that there is a specific negation against the assumption of our Government being drawn into a controversy between any governments of South or Central America or any other countries which might themselves ask the intervention of or endorse the League of Nations?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think it is clear all the way through.

Mr. LEWIS. Such is my understanding.

Mr. PITTMAN. That if the League of Nations is appealed to, it takes precedence over any form of consultation provided by this instrument.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The treaty is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification with the reservation will be read.

The legislative clerk read, as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive P (75th Cong., 1st sess.), a convention to coordinate, extend, and assure the fulfillment of the existing treaties between the American states, signed at Buenos Aires on December 23, 1936, by the respective plenipotentiaries of the United States of America and the other 20 American republics, represented at the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace held at Buenos Aires in December 1936, with the following declaration as a part of such ratification:

"The United States of America holds that the reservations to this convention do not constitute an amendment to the text, but that such reservations, interpretations, and definitions by separate governments are solely for the benefit of such respective governments and are not intended to be controlling upon the United States of America."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the reservation to the resolution of ratification.

The reservation was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification with the reservation. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification, with the reservation, is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the consideration of treaties on the calendar for today.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest that the regular order of business in executive session be followed. I understand reports of committees come first.

MAY REPORT OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, submitting, pursuant to law, a report of the activities and expenditures of the Corporation for the month of May 1937, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Joint resolution requesting Congress to increase the gasoline tax in the District of Columbia

Whereas the present rate of tax on gasoline in the District of Columbia is lower than the rates imposed by Maryland and Virginia; and

Whereas this results in a hardship on the gasoline dealers in the State of Maryland adjoining the District of Columbia; and

Whereas most of the States have a higher rate of tax on gasoline than the District of Columbia: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the United States Congress be and it is hereby requested to enact legislation increasing the tax on gasoline to 4 cents per gallon in the District of Columbia; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, requested to send under the great seal of the State of Maryland a copy of this resolution to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Senators and Representatives from Maryland in the United States Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Maryland, which was ordered to lie on the table:

Joint resolution expressing appreciation to the President and Congress of the United States

Whereas during the past 4 years the President of the United States, through his unparalleled leadership and guidance, has carried the country through one of the greatest economic depressions in the history of the country; and

Whereas the President and Congress of the United States have made available funds not only for the relief and care of the needy and unemployed, but have also made provision for the aged and for the dependent and neglected children; and

Whereas the President and Congress have, for the purpose of giving employment, granted funds to the several States, counties, municipalities, and other subdivisions of the States for the construction of public works and have in addition loaned funds to banks, railroads, and other corporations, which have enabled them to continue operations in the interest of the people generally; and

Whereas as a result of the initiative, incomparable leadership, and guidance of the President of the United States, confidence has been restored and the industrial, commercial, agricultural, and financial conditions have been greatly improved: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the appreciation and gratitude of the people of Maryland be, and they are hereby, extended to the Honorable Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of the United States, and to the Congress of the United States for the great benefits which they have brought to the people of the State of Maryland during the past 4 years and for the general improvement of social, business, economic, and welfare conditions; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of Maryland be, and he is hereby, directed to send, under the great seal of the State of Maryland, a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the President of the Senate of the United States Congress.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution, adopted by the Common Council of the City of Buffalo, N. Y., protesting against adoption of the proposal to make sponsors of W. P. A. projects pay 40 percent of the labor costs thereof, which was ordered to lie on the table.

THE FUTURE OF AMERICAN DEMOCRACY—ARTICLE BY DR. STUDEBAKER

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, having read recently an article published in the official organ of the American Legion which I am inclined to believe properly belongs in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, it is my intention to ask unanimous consent to have it so printed. Before doing so I desire to submit a remark or two in reference to it.

While the article, entitled "Safer for Democracy", written by Dr. J. W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education, is addressed primarily to the American Legion, it carries a vital message to every American as well. It defines the democratic system in definite and practical terms and emphasizes the need for mass education as a cornerstone for a democratic and peaceful world.

The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE] has introduced a bill which I hope will receive the careful consideration of the Members of this body, providing for a 3-year public forum demonstration program in the various States. While the plan outlined in the bill does not appear at first glance to compare in significance to some of the proposals calling for huge outlays of funds, it is nevertheless a measure which is more important to the future of American democracy than any which has come to my attention in recent months. I for one am convinced that unless the citizens of a democracy are constantly discussing and studying the basic problems, local, national, and international, we cannot expect the intelligent understanding necessary to grapple with these issues.

During the past year and a half, under emergency funds and local administrations, Commissioner Studebaker has been demonstrating the value and significance of this type of education in some 19 centers in 19 States. In these places, with a total population of about 4,000,000 people, more than 10,000 meetings have been held, attended by more than one and a half million people. If this procedure were being followed in other States, and in hundreds of communities in these States, we might be more confident that our great democracy rests upon a sure foundation of intelligent public opinion. Therefore I commend for the attention of the American people this brief but significant article by Commissioner Studebaker, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in connection with my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SAFER FOR DEMOCRACY

(By J. W. Studebaker, United States Commissioner of Education)

"We won't come back till it's over, over there", ran a popular wartime song. This was the spirit of the recruits in 1917–18. They were enlisted for the duration of the war. We were given two slogans in those days. One was, "A war to end war." The other was, "To make the world safe for democracy."

The casual reader of the newspapers knows that the world is on the brink of another war, and that no country on earth is now "safe for democracy." Quite apart from the controversy which continues to rage concerning the underlying causes of the war, few Americans will dispute the desirability of achieving the two ends given us as slogans. In terms of those objectives, the war was a fight to a draw and the peace treaty defined the terms of the next armed conflict.

Those who entertain these two great goals—world peace and world democracy—know that the struggle to attain them has never ended. As a matter of fact, the struggle has now advanced to a most critical stage. The forces of democracy and peace have been driven to the wall by the forces of dictatorship and imperialism. The struggle on the political front has now come to a crisis where it again may be shifted to the military front. Those who went "over there" are back, but they know that it isn't "over, over there." It looks as though our real problem is to keep that basic conflict from spreading over here.

The question which confronts us as enlisted recruits in the struggle that never ended is, "What can we do to win an eventual victory; that is, a warless, democratic world?" It would seem to be good tactics to hold the line of democracy here in America. I would suggest for our slogan, "Organize to preserve and extend in America what we fought to make the world safe for." That may be poor grammar, but it appeals to me as good sense all the same.

A slogan is a crystallized philosophy, an abbreviated purpose for action. It is a useful thing if the people who get together to work for it know what it means. It is a dangerous thing if it becomes a substitute for thinking.

The basic ideas and ideals of a democratic society are simple and yet profound. No society has yet applied them to all of the aspects of social organization. Indeed, the prerequisites of democratic behavior are so severe that the progress from despotism on the one hand to complete self-government on the other must of necessity be slow and halting. The urge in man for power over his fellow man which has been passed on from tribal days must be sublimated by an intelligent understanding of the infinite possibilities of man's power with man.

People have to learn the ways of democratic behavior. Like all other strong human urges, the passion for power over people can be mastered only by the substitution of other patterns of behavior through education. Therefore the battlefront in the world-wide struggle for democracy stretches from the home through the schools, the local community, State and Nation to the international conference table. Parents who encourage children to join in a cooperative organization of family life as early as possible are contributing to a world "safe for democracy." Schools which develop self-government, self-discipline, and the practice of respecting group decisions prepare youth for citizenship in a democracy. Educational and social organizations which define greatness of character in terms of service and meanness of character in terms of exploitation lead us toward the democratic ideal.

The world or any section of it will be a safe place for the flowering of democracy when enough people understand and practice the fundamental principles of that way of life. Essentially, the idea of democracy contains two important principles. First, the freely expressed will of the majority is law. Second, the right and privilege of people in the minority to attempt to become the majority through peaceful persuasion is scrupulously protected. The phrases "majority rule" and "freedom of expression" are commonplace in our vernacular. But the realization of their profound meaning in national and international affairs requires patient and careful education and organization.

If the will of the majority is expected to promote progress and intelligent action, the masses of people must have access to thoroughgoing educational preparations. The leaders of the democratic idea have always maintained that it could not be achieved without mass education. At least three kinds of educational experience are necessary for citizens of a democracy.

First, they must learn to use the tools of communication—reading, writing, and speech. People who cannot read are slaves whether they have the right to vote or not.

Second, they must learn in actual practice in group life, starting with the family and continuing in all other social groupings, the methods and techniques of self-government. People must be educationally prepared to treat each other as free, self-respecting human beings. They must come to understand the ways of getting things done with group understanding and participation. When it is generally recognized that people who seek to arrive at goals, no matter how worthy, by the use of dictation and force, are anti-social persons, we may consider our educational and social institutions successful in citizenship training.

Third, the citizens and those preparing for citizenship should have educational facilities for the continuous study and discussion of the problems which require their intelligent attention.

Majority rule, of course, implies some power to compel compliance. But if the people understand and participate intelligently in important decisions, and if they have learned the essentials of democratic behavior, the problem of securing compliance is not so difficult to solve with the minimum of force. The great difficulty arises when the members of the minority are unwilling to accept the expressed will of the majority and seek to change that will by force. This unwillingness to accept majority government when it rules contrary to one's own hopes or interests must be dealt with educationally on the school playground, in summer camps, in student self-government, in social groups of all kinds.

People who have not, by and large, come to appreciate the importance of compliance with majority rule are not prepared for citizenship in a democracy. Therefore, we will do well to inspect carefully the methods we are using in the home, in the school, and in our various organizations to see that we are really promoting a respect for and confidence in majority rule. Without mass confidence in the ultimate value of majority rule, we face the danger of open clashes between majority and minority forces, called civil war. This is a reversion to the old way of deciding important matters by contest of armed forces. The policy is made by the side which can kill most efficiently the people on the other side.

But we should never forget that respect for and confidence in majority rule are engendered and increased only by a majority attitude which scrupulously protects the minority in its chance to become the majority by processes of peaceful persuasion, by free discussion, by argument. Centuries of human struggle have taught us that it is in a minority which has been coerced into silence by an arrogant and intolerant majority that the seeds of violence are planted. Therefore, those of us who profess to believe in the democracy of self-government by majority rule bear the responsibility of exemplifying tolerance toward the dissenting voice of the minority. And, on the other hand, the minorities which clamor for the right to be heard and which protest against restrictions of civil liberties must recognize their obligation not to use these liberties as a means of establishing a social order that would place control in the mailed fist of a new and intolerant majority.

The democratic method rests on the process of counting noses and not corpses. But it takes a high state of culture and civilization to get social action in this way.

In international affairs, the Kellogg Pact notwithstanding, there is still a general reliance on the method of counting corpses to arrive at important decisions. We know that this is costly and uncivilized. We have made some attempts to decide things internationally by counting noses. But governments are reluctant to give up the right to turn to the old method in case they get an unfavorable decision through majority rule.

So, it appears, the desirable slogan "to end war" is dependent in the last analysis upon the world-wide achievement of the other slogan, "to make the world safe for democracy." When the democratic idea is being practiced by people in all parts of the world in their homes, schools, social and political institutions, we may expect to see this civilized technique of social progress employed in international affairs. In other words, it is my conviction that a democratic world is essential to a warless world.

The scene abroad looks rather dreary and to some hopeless. We ourselves hold a strategic place of world influence. The question is put to us: "Will democracy work in this new, complex machine age?" If we can make it work here to create an ordered social and economic progress resulting in the greatest good for the greatest number, it will spread by contagion. The present trend toward new chaos and economic collapse which characterizes the old-style dictatorships turns the attention of people abroad to successful experience with democracy.

Therefore, I can think of nothing more significant for the veterans of a struggle fought under the slogan "to make the world safe for democracy" to do, than to enlist their support behind those educational institutions which give our democracy a good fighting chance to survive and mature. This involves support of our public school system which equips youth with the tools of expression and a basic understanding of the history and nature of our world. It involves the intelligent support of all educational and social institutions which train youth and adults in the habits of democratic action. It also involves, in my opinion, vigorous support of discussions, forums, study groups, and adult civic education programs.

If we seriously want to perpetuate the democratic ideas of majority rule and freedom of expression, we must somehow perfect ways and means of enabling free citizens to come to an understanding of the perplexing problems over which they must exercise their rulership.

The enemy within the gates of a democratic society is he who accepts the rights of citizenship without discharging his responsibility of studying the problems of his community and country. But it seems to me that we cannot mark these "slackers" in the struggle for a democratic world unless we plan and operate educational facilities for the use of all the people in achieving civic understanding. If we do organize such institutions for adult discussion and study, we may come to the day when the citizen who neglects to inform himself as a prerequisite to the exercise of citizenship will be subject to the pressure of public disapproval.

A Nation-wide system of adult civic education operated under local managements appeals to me as an important phase of national defense, if what we are really defending is our democratic tradition as well as the land which gave it birth. The duration of the war is perhaps longer than we at first expected. We cannot truly call ourselves veterans until the basic struggle to make the world safe for democracy has ended in a victory. Education of the three types I have suggested is essential to the winning of eventual victory. For services already rendered to the cause of public education, grateful credit is given to the American Legion. The future offers even greater challenges to those who are still enlisted in the cause of a democratic and warless world.

ADDRESS BY HON. JAMES A. FARLEY AT OLD ORCHARD, MAINE

SIGNS OF PROSPERITY—ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON STAR

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Signs That Prosperity Has Turned That Corner", written by Lucy Salamanca and published in the Washington Star of Sunday, June 27, 1937, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REDUCED INTEREST RATE ON FEDERAL LAND-BANK LOANS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on the 7th of June the House of Representatives passed House bill 6763, extending for 1 more year the reduced rate of interest on Federal land-bank notes. Two years ago Congress reduced the rate of interest on land-bank loans to 3½ percent to apply for a period of 2 years. That reduction expires tomorrow, the 30th day of June. The Farm Credit Administration, while opposing the reduction, are anxious to know what they must do about the reduced rates of interest beginning July 1.

The Banking and Currency Committee, through a subcommittee of which I happen to be chairman, held hearings on the matter of extension, and the subcommittee reported to the full committee favorably recommending the extension. This morning the full committee directed that the bill be reported favorably to the Senate with an amendment.

In order that the matter may be determined and that the Farm Credit Administration may know what it is expected to do with respect to the collection of interest beginning July 1, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted at this time to report the bill to the Senate, and then I shall ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky for permission to report the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BARKLEY. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 6763) to extend for one additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land-bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land bank commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years, and I submit a report (No. 831) thereon.

I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall object, but I think we ought to have a little further time for consideration of the matter. It is my understanding that the President of the United States has indicated, after full consideration of the questions involved, the condition of the Treasury, and all the implications that would arise from the measure, that it is not wise, and he has recommended adversely. The Senator from Kentucky has just stated that Dr. Myers, head of the Farm Credit Administration, which is intimately connected with the law and its enforcement, has also recommended adversely.

I wonder if the exigency is such as to warrant the Senate now, in view of the facility which we have always exhibited toward approving recommendations of the President, in rejecting his suggestion and the suggestion of the organization primarily concerned with the matter, and now take up the bill for consideration?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I have purposed to have read the letter of the President relating to the matter. I shall explain the situation very briefly so that all Senators may understand what is the real issue.

If the bill is not passed at once, then, beginning day after tomorrow, the Farm Credit Administration must collect the normal rate of interest because the extension of the reduced rate expires tomorrow by operation of law. Regardless of the attitude of the Farm Credit Administration, it is necessary for them to know what they are expected to do about it, and we have only 1 more day in which we can act. If the Senate does not see fit to pass the bill, then automatically the rate goes back to the normal rate. If we do pass the bill, then for 1 more year the rate of 3½ percent will be maintained.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand the able leader on the Democratic side of the Chamber intends later to move a recess until Thursday. That is the emergency which the Senator from Kentucky is now trying to meet. I favor the proposal made by President Roosevelt and by Mr. Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration. The reduced rate is to be extended for only 1 year. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if there is no objection to the present consideration of the bill, I have nothing to say.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I hope there will be no objection, because this is a matter in which a considerable section of the country is deeply interested. It has already been shown that if we are going to act at all, we must act quickly. I hope there will be no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, did I correctly understand the Senator to say the proposal is to extend the present rate of interest for 2 years or for 1 year?

Mr. BARKLEY. The present rate is to be extended 1 year, and then a rate of 4 percent is fixed for the following year. There is an extension for 2 years of a reduced rate, but for the first year the 3½ percent will remain as it has been for the last 2 years, and for the second year the rate will be 4 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. I express the hope there will be no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill as requested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6763) to extend for 1 additional year the 3½-percent interest rate on certain Federal land bank loans, to provide a 4-percent interest rate on such loans for the period July 1, 1938, to June 30, 1939, and to provide for a 4-percent interest rate on land-bank commissioner's loans for a period of 2 years, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, after line 9, it is proposed to strike out section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. Section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, as amended (relating to loans by the Land Bank Commissioner), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, the rate of interest on loans made under this section outstanding when this amendatory paragraph takes effect or made on or after such date, shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 2 years commencing on the date when this amendatory paragraph takes effect."

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) effective July 1, 1935, the first sentence of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (relating to reduction in interest rates on certain Federal land-bank loans), is amended by striking out the following: "occurring within a period of 2 years commencing July 1, 1935" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "occurring within a period of 3 years commencing July 1, 1935, and shall not exceed 4 percent per annum for all interest payable on installment dates occurring within a period of 1 year commencing July 1, 1938."

(b) The fourth sentence of such paragraph "Twelfth" (relating to the time limit on payments made by the United States to land banks on account of such interest reduction) is amended to read as follows: "No payments shall be made to a bank with respect to any period after June 30, 1939."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the House bill would extend the 3½-percent interest rate for 1 year as it has existed for the past 2 years. Then it is provided that a 4-percent rate of interest shall apply for a second year beginning

July 1, 1938, and running until July 1, 1939. From now until July 1, 1938, the rate would remain at 3½ percent as provided by the action of Congress of 2 years ago.

Section 2 of the bill deals with loans upon which the interest rate has never been reduced; that is, commissioner's loans. The rate of interest on commissioner's loans, which are of a secondary nature or the security for which may be second mortgages, chattel mortgages, or security of a lower degree than first mortgages on farms, is limited under the law providing for obtaining loans through the ordinary farm-loan associations and the Farm Credit Administration.

There never has been any reduction in the rate on the commissioners' loans. The rate has been 5 percent since they were inaugurated. The reason for that is that since the loans are of a secondary nature, the chances are that there will be greater losses on the commissioners' loans than on the first-mortgage loans taken by the farm-loan associations. The security for the commissioners' loans is not as good as the security for the first-mortgage loans; and now that we are at least on the way out of the depression and up the hill, and inasmuch as no action ever has been taken by Congress to reduce the interest on the commissioner's loans, the committee felt that it was not well now to begin a new practice, but was wiser simply to continue the status quo as it has existed with respect to farm loans generally. For that reason the committee struck out section 2, which makes a reduction in the interest on commissioner's loans in addition to the reduction of interest on land-bank loans already provided for.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have here the House bill. There does not seem to be any Senate committee amendment in it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator that the committee acted only this morning. The report has not been formally made; but in the copy which I have reported I have stricken out section 2, which provides for a reduction in the rate of interest on the commissioners' loans.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should not the interest on the commissioners' loans be reduced, as well as the interest on the other loans? The commissioners' loans are harder to pay now than the others, because they are based on second liens, and are more shaky. I do not see any reason why we should make it still harder to pay them by providing for an increased rate of interest.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the question also involves the Treasury. I will say frankly that a legitimate argument may be made in favor of a reduction of interest on commissioners' loans on the same basis as land-bank loans, but the reduction in the rate of interest on land-bank loans means an outlay of $31,000,000 per year from the Treasury. In other words, it is an outright grant from the Treasury of $31,000,000. The reduction in the rate of interest on commissioners' loans involves an outlay of $9,000,000; so both of them together mean that out of the Treasury there must be taken $40,000,000 per annum in order to meet the deficiency in the interest charged the farmer. That is the amount that the Government is out.

Inasmuch as the commissioners' loans have gone along for the past 2 or 3 years at the rate of interest which has prevailed—there has been no agitation, and really no particular request for a reduction of the interest on those loans—and in view of the fact that interest rates are always based somewhat upon the possibility of loss, on the whole, by reason of the character of the loans, the committee felt and the Farm Credit Administration feels that if this extension is to be made of the 3½-percent interest rate on land-bank loans, we ought not now to enter a new field and reduce the interest rate on commissioners' loans.

That is the explanation, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if this amendment is adopted, changing the House bill, the measure will have to go back to the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. And in that event we are likely to lose it. It must become a law by tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, if the bill should be passed now and sent to the House today, the House could act on it, and either accept or reject the amendment, and then it would be an easy matter to adjust. I do not think there would be any delay beyond the 1st of July by reason of the amendment.

I will say to my friend from Texas that that is the reason why the amendment was adopted by the committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not adopt this amendment.

The Senator from Kentucky suggests that there will be a loss to the Treasury on these two transactions. That is altogether possible and likely; but, Mr. President, if we are going to pay out any bounties, or are going to give any "hand-outs", this is the best place I know to do it, because here we are helping people who are helping themselves.

We have been through a very critical period in the United States in the way of holding on to land during this depression. Commissioners' loans are instrumentalities that were devised to help out the man who had a farm and was trying to pay for it by giving him a further increase of loan. Many of these farmers will pay out. They are on the land, they are working, they are digging, they are trying to get out, and they are not on a relief roll in town. If we can give a billion and a quarter dollars to people to do nothing, I do not see how the Government will suffer much by giving $40,000,000 in the form of reduced interest rates to people who are at work establishing homes and increasing the value of those homes.

That is just the plain situation. In my State and in many other farm States the people have been gallant during the depression. They have stayed on the land and suffered, and could not pay their interest; but they have worked and rearranged matters and refinanced their loans, and now they are coming out. I believe this is money well spent, and I particularly hope the Senate will not adopt the Senate committee amendment.

As was so well pointed out by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], if we adopt the amendment the bill will have to go back to the House. I assume the House meant what it said when it passed the bill with section 2 in it; and the House may not be as complaisant as the Senator from Kentucky seems to think it is. It may resist. The bill may go to conference; and, furthermore, the President may veto the bill. This is not an administration bill, even though it is sponsored by the leadership here on the floor of the Senate, because the President, in his message which is set out in the hearings, states that he is opposed to it. Therefore, even after the bill gets to the House we may have to vote on a veto—that is, some of us.

So, Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not adopt this amendment, but will pass the bill as it passed the House. This is one place where we can help people who are helping themselves, not directly by giving them something, but indirectly by lowering the interest rate. The land banks will have to absorb some of the reduction for this period of extension; but it is justified aid, it is sound aid, given to people who are trying to build homesteads and trying to pay for them, and who are out in the hot sun at work. While some of the W. P. A. people are standing out here in the lobby of the Senate of the United States, coming to Washington on Government money and lobbying for the continuation of made work, free jobs, the farmers are asking this slight concession.

I hope the Senate will reject the amendment of the Senate committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with the whole subject I think it would be well to have the letter of the President read into the RECORD. The letter was written to a Member of the House of Representatives, the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. It was written the day following the passage of the bill through the House. The President was not aware of the fact that on the 7th day of the month the bill had passed the House; and on the 8th he wrote this letter to Hon. MARVIN JONES, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture. I think the President's letter ought to be read, because it is in harmony with the position taken by the Farm Credit Administration in its testimony before the subcommittee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 8, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT F. WAGNER,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Banking and Currency,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing herewith a copy of a letter which I have sent today to Hon. MARVIN JONES, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives. H. R. 6763, has, of course, not yet been acted on by the House, and I am sending you this merely to keep you informed.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

[Enclosure]

JUNE 8, 1937.

Hon. MARVIN JONES,
Chairman, Committee on Agriculture,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am disturbed by the provisions of H. R. 6763 and think I should advise you of the situation which the passage of this bill would create. The whole question involves the rate of interest charged by Government agencies and relates not only to farm loans but also to moneys lent by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Public Works Administration, and other agencies.

We ought, first of all, to examine into the original object of the Congress and the administration in 1933. It was—

1. To stop wholesale foreclosures and failures by refinancing the debts of farmers, home owners, counties, cities, towns, small businesses, and banks on a basis that would permit them to pay out as national prosperity returned.

2. To provide for extensions of principal and interest payments which farmers, home owners, etc., were unable to meet because of causes beyond their control.

In the case of farmers, they were the only classification of the many listed above who were given temporary reductions in interest rates to assist in their financial rehabilitation. This was done because of their then existing mortgages due to the Federal land banks, which had been made necessary by previous conditions.

In regard to farm borrowers, there was another definite objective—to avoid the old custom of 6 or 7 or 8 percent charged on first mortgages and 8, 10, 12, and even 15 percent charged for second mortgages.

At the time the original legislation for farmers, home owners, businessmen, banks, municipalities, etc., was passed, no one thought, and no reasonable person should think today, that the Government of the United States should permanently subsidize these borrowers by an annual grant or gift caused by legalizing an abnormally low rate of interest.

It is not reasonable to insist that 4 percent on a first mortgage for a farmer or 5 percent on a second mortgage is an unreasonably high rate of interest.

Everybody knows that the Government, as well as the Federal land banks, has to borrow money before it lends it and must, therefore, get that rate back. On long-term borrowings the Government would have to pay a rate of interest of about 3 percent. The Federal land banks or the Government must stand the cost of servicing loans and collecting the interest which, on the average, amounts to a little less than 1 percent. In addition to this, there are losses which will amount to at least one-half of 1 percent to 1 percent additional. The net result is that, at present, the Federal land banks must get a 4-percent return on first mortgages and the Government a 5-percent return on second mortgages (where, of course, the losses are heavier), in order nearly to break even.

Any reduction below these rates constitutes a gift from the Federal Treasury.

In the case of H. R. 6763, the additional cost to the Government of the United States would be more than $40,000,000 a year. It seems to me that the Congress should be definitely advised of this fact before taking action on this bill.

The passage of this bill was clearly not contemplated in the preparation of the Budget for the fiscal year 1938. As you know, I am definitely seeking the balancing of that Budget. The problem is a comparatively simple one from the budgetary standpoint: If the Budget is thrown out of balance through extra appropriations or obligations, new taxes alone will bring the Budget into balance.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will be glad to answer if I can.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to be sure that I understand the situation. Is it correct that, once the committee amendment is adopted, this bill not only will extend the previous gift, but will add a brand new gift that will cost $9,000,000, and put the Budget that much more out of balance?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Under those circumstances, it would seem to me that since the bill itself runs the possibility of a veto, in view of the President's letter those who are anxious to get completed legislation had better not add another uncontemplated burden which certainly would produce a veto.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion of the Senator. Personally, I have no interest, one way or the other, in whether this amendment is adopted or not. I am merely trying to represent the committee in presenting it, and giving the reasons which actuated the committee in striking out section 2.

There are in this country more than 6,000,000 farmers, and of that 6,000,000 about 650,000 are borrowers from the Federal land banks. About one-tenth of the total number of farmers in the United States borrow money from the land banks. There are between five and six hundred thousand of the Commissioner's loans, but because of the duplication, many of the original borrowers also borrowed under the Commissioner's loans, so that the total number of farmers who have both Commissioner's loans and land-bank loans is a little more than 800,000 out of a total of 6,000,000.

The question is very simple, whether we want to extend what we have already done or do more. That is all there is to it, and that is why this amendment is recommended.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator any information or intimation about how the House would feel in regard to eliminating this section? I should be disposed to take the view of the matter taken by the Senator from Michigan, but it seems to me that we are running about ninety-nine chances out of one hundred of losing the bill, because it will go to the House, and in all probability it will not be acted upon today, though it possibly may be acted upon tomorrow. I think the President is just as likely to veto the bill carrying $31,000,000 as $40,000,000; and it seems to me that we have now delayed the matter so long we are in such a position that if we do not act expeditiously we will not get anything at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to inquire why it is that the matter has been delayed until just the day before the change would take place in the interest rate, why it is that it has not been brought before the Senate earlier?

Mr. BARKLEY. Three or four bills were introduced by Members of the Senate extending the 3½-percent interest rate, one or two of them providing an extension for 1 year, one or two of them for 2 years. The House committee reported their bill, put it on the calendar, and the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency felt that unless the House passed its bill, there was really no need to take up the bill in the Senate, as it had it already on the calendar.

The House passed the bill about 3 weeks ago. The subcommittee of the Senate committee which had charge of the proposed legislation also had a number of other bills before it for consideration, and hearings were in progress. Hearings were held on the pending bill at the very earliest possible date when the matter could be reached, and the subcommittee acted about a week ago in voting to report the bill to the full committee. The full committee did not meet until this morning when it could take action on the report of the subcommittee. That explains the delay. It may not have been a justifiable delay, but that is the explanation.

I have no information as to whether or not the President will veto the bill. He sent the letter to the other body in order to express his views. Representatives of the Farm Credit Administration appeared before the Senate subcommittee and opposed any extension at all, on the ground that, after all, agriculture was on its way up the hill, and that farm prices had increased to such an extent that the Farm Credit Administration did not feel this bounty, or subsidy, or gift, or whatever it may be termed, ought to be granted any further. The committee did not agree with the Farm Credit Administration on that subject, and that is why the bill is here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, what has been the amount of liability borne by the Government during the last year on account of the 3½-percent interest rate?

Mr. BARKLEY. Approximately $31,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. That much has been lost to the Government?

Mr. BARKLEY. That much has been lost, and it is estimated that much will be lost to the Treasury in the next 12 months if this bill shall pass, even without the reduction of the Commissioner's rate, and $40,000,000 if the two are put together and the reduction is made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, while I am quite willing to go along with the extension of the existing low rate, I want to ask the Senator, if we are to start now expanding the privilege of a low rate, what earthly reason have we for not extending it to the H. O. L. C. and all the other loans of the Government?

Mr. BARKLEY. As the President pointed out in his letter, of course, if this is to be continued indefinitely, sooner or later the question will arise whether the same reduction is to be extended to home owners under the H. O. L. C. and all other agencies which have been put at the disposal of the people in order to help solve the problem of the depression. It is a very serious question now, when we are on the way out, when everyone admits we are in better condition, whether we ought to extend the field of interest reductions out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator, that we are on the way out of the depression, and I agree that the farmers are in better condition than they were. But the farmers are not out yet by any means. My recollection is that in 1929 the income from the American farm was about $11,500,000,000. It dropped to about $5,500,000,000 in 1932 and 1933. It is now back to about eight and a half or nine billion. But that income is still two or two and a half billion behind what it was in 1929.

We know what the conditions were on the farm in 1929. They were very bad. Everyone will recall that in 1929 the political conventions were waited on by delegations of farmers stating their condition, telling of foreclosures, sales for taxes, and like things. The farmers are not yet out of their trouble.

While we are pleased that they are moving out, and are quite willing to give all credit due to those who have helped to move them out, yet many of them still are in a distressing condition. There can be no doubt about that. I recognize that the question before us is serious, but a serious situation is faced out on the farms, where the foreclosures are taking place. As the Senator from Texas has well said, nowhere can we contribute more effective aid under present circumstances than to the man who is on the farm, in order to keep him there. There is one way to stop the growth of tenancy, and that is to keep the owner in possession of the title to the farm. It seems to me that we can well afford to lower the interest rate in view of the number it will likely enable to avoid foreclosure and loss of title.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, has not the Senator observed that where the land banks foreclose they are worse off than they were before the foreclosures, because they cannot dispose of the lands and get anything substantial for them? If we can keep the man on the farm, the Government will suffer less loss than if it forecloses and has to sell the place for half price. That is the experience in my State.

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the representative of the farm organizations who appeared before the committee in behalf of this extension did not request that the privilege be extended to Commissioner's loans. Mr. Chester Gray, whom we all know, who represents the American Farm Bureau Federation, testified before the committee. All they asked was the extension of the present low rate on land-bank loans. Mr. Gray stated that he did not request that the low rate be extended to Commissioner's loans, because his organization had taken no action on that subject. They had not authorized him to request that the reduction be extended to Commissioner's loans, and therefore he made no such request. If the farmers, through their spokesman, are not asking the expansion of this reduction, it seems to me we might well ponder whether we ought to grant it.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question. He states that there will be a $31,000,000 loss through the Farm Credit Administration. In what does that loss consist, or how is it brought about?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the difference between the rate that is borne by the land-bank bonds, which are held by the general public, and the rate which the farmer pays to the land bank from which he borrows money. In other words, if the farmer pays only 3½ percent interest to the bank, and the bank must pay the holders of its bonds 4 or 4½ percent, the difference is made up by the approximate amount of $31,000,000. The law obligates the Treasury to reimburse the land banks for that difference, and that difference amounts to the $31,000,000 about which we are talking. In other words, the rate of interest paid by the farmer does not compensate the land bank for the interest it pays the holders of the land-bank bonds.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course, if some arrangement were not effected to reimburse the banks for the difference between the interest they pay and the interest they charge, the banks would become insolvent, their bonds would be in default, and the system probably would be wrecked.

Mr. BARKLEY. They could not pay interest on the bonds held by the general public, and, therefore, we must appropriate out of the Treasury the difference.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The bonds are guaranteed by the Government, are they not?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not all of them.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; not land-bank bonds.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not land-bank bonds.

Mr. BILBO. What rate of interest is the Government charging the shipbuilders on its loans made in connection with the merchant marine?

Mr. BARKLEY. I cannot answer the Senator's question. The Maritime Commission as yet have made practically no loans. We appropriated $160,000,000 for the use of the Maritime Commission, but they have not yet gotten far enough along in their work to determine the interest rate; so I cannot give the Senator that information.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has had before it for some time a resolution proposing an investigation of the administration of the Federal land banks and their operations, upon the theory that there is a great deal of lost motion in the operation of these banks, and that many unnecessary expenses are involved in their operation. I have an idea that possibly the trouble is not so much in the rates of interest as in the operation of the Farm Credit Administration and that that is the reason why it shows a loss.

Personally, I think this amendment ought to be killed. I am not adverse to subsidizing, as evidenced by my vote for merchant-marine legislation, though I knew that meant subsidizing by the hundreds of millions of dollars; but if anybody in this country ought to enjoy any subsidies at all, they ought to be enjoyed by those least able to take care of themselves, and who are trying to take care of themselves.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the object of Congress in providing for the Maritime Commission, and providing loans in order to maintain and build up the American merchant marine, was to provide facilities for finding markets for the people of the United States, not only industrial markets but agricultural markets as well; and, of course, an indirect benefit will result to the farmers all over the country from building up our merchant marine and providing facilities through which it may carry the farmers' products to the markets of the world.

Mr. BILBO. I agree with the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky. For that reason I voted for the merchant-marine legislation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I will say to the Senator that the maritime loans must bear at least the same rate of interest that is borne by the Government securities which produce the funds.

Mr. BILBO. I take the position that the Government can get money at 4 percent and can make these Commissioner's loans and Federal lank-bank loans at that rate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Not long-term loans. The Government can get short-term loans at that rate, and less, but not long-term loans.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I am a member of the Finance Committee and also a member of the subcommittee which considered this bill. Unfortunately, I was not present when the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] explained the measure; but the subcommittee was strongly in favor of the bill as passed by the House, and favorably reported it to the full committee by quite a large majority.

I believe the last paragraph of the bill, reducing the interest on the Commissioner's loans from 5 percent to 4 percent, should be retained. The money that goes into the Commissioner's loan is not derived from the sale of land-bank bonds. It comes from the Treasury of the United States, and that money, of course, is derived from the sale of ordinary Government bonds at a lower rate—2½ or 3 percent—so there is no loss to the Government on these 4-percent loans. Of course, there would be a loss of 1 percent to the Treasury if the interest rate on the Commissioner's loans were reduced from 5 percent to 4 percent; but I mean there is no actual loss as a result of the reduction to that amount of interest on the bonds in view of the ability of the Government to borrow money at less than 4 percent.

Furthermore, the bill must be passed and signed by the 1st of July, and the time is now short. The House passed the bill with section 2 in it; and if it is to be passed in time to be of benefit to the farmers, it seems to me it should be passed as it was passed by the House. Already it has been delayed a long time. The bill was passed by the House on the 7th of June. The farmers need this lower rate of interest. They are still in hard circumstances. Conditions have improved somewhat; but the fact was brought out before the subcommittee by those representing the farm organizations that in 1936 there were 178,000 farmers whose farms had been foreclosed and that there were 24,158 cases still pending in adjustment of foreclosures, making over 200,000 farms foreclosed. That gives the Senate an idea of the general condition of the farmers. It is true that the foreclosures were not all in connection with land-bank loans, but they were farm loans just the same; and any saving that is made to the farmers on the interest they must pay, of course, will be a saving in their general income.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the point I desire to make—that one-hundred-seventy-odd thousand foreclosures represented the total number of foreclosures on all farms; but only a small proportion of that number represented foreclosures made by Federal lank banks.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Federal land banks have made a great many foreclosures. I have not the number of foreclosures instituted by the Federal land banks. There are also 28,000 foreclosures still pending, awaiting readjustment.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is, pending readjustment of indebtedness with a view of scaling it down, and making it more easy for the farmers to pay.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is true. Mr. President, this reduction of 1 percent, while it does not make a great deal of difference to the Government, does make some difference to the farmers who are doing their best to save their homes and lands; and I hope the amendment will be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN BILLS DURING RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess or adjournment to follow today's session the President pro tempore be authorized to sign bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORITY FOR APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE TO SUBMIT REPORTS

Mr. ROBINSON. I also ask that the Committee on Appropriations may be permitted to file reports during the recess or adjournment of the Senate to follow today's session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ELIGIBILITY OF CERTAIN PERSONS FOR ADMISSION TO THE CIVIL SERVICE

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 792, being Senate bill 714 relating to the eligibility of certain persons for admission to the civil service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 714) relating to the eligibility of certain persons for admission to the civil service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Civil Service with an amendment, on page 1, line 11, after the word "prescribed", to strike out "the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1930, as amended, shall not apply to any person admitted to the classified civil service by reason of this act" and to insert "Any applicant admitted to any examination under the provisions of this act who passes such an examination and who is later appointed to a position in the classified civil service and who by reason of his age at the time of appointment may not serve a minimum of 15 years before he shall reach the retirement age for his group shall not be eligible for admission to or participation in the retirement benefits as provided in the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1930, as amended", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any provision of the civil-service laws or any rule or regulation made or promulgated thereunder prescribing a maximum age limit for persons seeking admission into the classified civil service of the United States, hereafter no candidate for such admission, who is otherwise duly qualified for examination or appointment as provided by law, shall be held ineligible for such examination or appointment solely by reason of his having attained the maximum age so prescribed. Any applicant admitted to any examination under the provisions of this act who passes such an examination and who is later appointed to a position in the classified civil service and who by reason of his age at the time of appointment may not serve a minimum of 15 years before he shall reach the retirement age for his group shall not be eligible for admission to or participation in the retirement benefits as provided in the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, this bill makes no change in the present civil-service procedure. It is a bill that the committee has unanimously reported favorably. It is a bill which does away with all age limits in civil service. I think that without any difficulty I can convince the Senate that it is a bill which means much to our Nation just at this time.

It provides that a person fully qualified in all other respects shall not be debarred from taking an examination nor from having his name placed upon an eligible list merely by reason of his age.

Under the present practice, the Civil Service Commission fixes an arbitrary age limit for every examination. In one instance the Commission may fix a maximum age limit of 35. In another it may fix a maximum age limit of 44, and in a third it may fix a maximum age limit of 53. These age limits may have nothing whatever to do with the requirements for the particular job for which the examination is being held. The higher age limit may be established for a job requiring greater physical strength and endurance than the job with the lower age limit. These age limits, it seems, represent pretty largely the notions of the various department and bureau chiefs who make or recommend appointments.

My proposal does away with all of these uncertainties and admits men and women to these examinations on the basis of their qualifications and fitness for a particular job which they seek.

This measure establishes no new precedent. I want to impress this upon the Senate. It is not new. Under the present law veterans may take any civil-service examination, notwithstanding what their age may be. I support this kind of consideration for veterans and the wives and widows of veterans, but we shall not do any injury to them by admitting everyone to examinations exactly on the same basis.

We have talked a great deal in recent years about the problem of the man above 40 and the reluctance, even the refusal, of industry to employ men and women of this age and above this age. Civic bodies insist that this policy creates a serious social problem. National and State officials and many Senators in this body, I am sure, have talked long and eloquently about this lack of opportunity that closes in on middle-aged workers who are strong and able and willing to work.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall not interrupt the Senator in the presentation of his remarks if he wishes to finish them. I should like to direct a question to him as to the form of the bill, if he is prepared to submit to that sort of a question at this time.

Mr. MOORE. Yes; Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is noted that the language is as follows:

> That notwithstanding any provision of the civil-service laws or any rule or regulation made or promulgated thereunder prescribing a maximum age limit for persons seeking admission into the classified civil service of the United States, hereafter no candidate for such admission, who is otherwise duly qualified for examination or appointment as provided by law, shall be held ineligible for such examination or appointment solely by reason of his having attained the maximum age so prescribed.

My inquiry is why the Senator does not propose to repeal or change the law rather than merely to take note of it. It seems to me that what is being done by this language is to leave in force the law fixing a maximum age governing appointments and qualifications by the civil service, and yet expressly providing for disregarding the law.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, there is not any law establishing age limits; there is not any law which says a draftsman shall be 30, or that he shall be 40. The Civil Service Commission makes the rule. The law provides that a man must attain a certain age, but this bill provides that if a man is appointed when over age he shall not receive the benefit of the pension or retirement system.

Mr. ROBINSON. That makes the question even more pertinent from my standpoint than when it was first asked. The bill begins:

> That notwithstanding any provision of the civil-service laws or any rule or regulation made or promulgated thereunder—

And so forth. Why does not the Senator provide that—

> All laws or regulations fixing the maximum age heretofore promulgated are hereby repealed and hereafter—

And so forth? I am merely inquiring for information; I am not seeking to embarrass the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MOORE. I understand the Senator's position. The only answer I can give is that there is not any law to be repealed with regard to a maximum age limit. A rule is set up, but it is not a law. The civil-service law provides that there shall be examinations to ascertain merit and fitness, but it does not say anything about an age limit for specific positions.

I will admit the language of the bill is rather general, but it was made so in order to cover the entire situation both as to the law and the rules. There is not, however, any law to be repealed.

I may say that a similar law has been in effect in New Jersey for some time and has worked wonderfully well. Under present conditions, in the Government service, a man over 40 years, for instance, or a woman over 40 years, cannot take an examination for a position involving a class of service which has been his or her life work.

I have many letters here with regard to this matter. One is from a woman who states she is 44 years of age, that she has six children, and her husband is dead. Before she married she was a stenographer and secretary and had had many years of experience; she had also been vice president of a company. She wants to take a Federal examination for stenographer, but is debarred from doing so because she is 44 years of age. She has to pay taxes just the same. In some instances the same situation applies to a person over the age of 35.

I have another letter from a man who has been an engineer in naval construction for 33 years. He is 53 years of age. There is an examination to be held for a position involving that kind of work, but he cannot take the examination.

In New Jersey we have no age limit; it is a question of merit and fitness, and, as I have said, the law there has worked wonderfully well. It helps the morale of people in these days when a man over 40 may be considered an old man. In New Jersey, no matter what the job, if a man can prove that he is capable of doing it and is otherwise qualified, he is entitled to it and is appointed. Let the Senate understand that this bill does not make any change. Veterans already have such a preference.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, this bill is intended to apply to all civil-service employees in the United States?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would apply to rural mail carriers and storekeeper-gagers. While it may be by regulation, I was under the impression that there was some law fixing in some cases a maximum age. In the Internal Revenue Service, I think, 55 is the age limit. If this bill should be enacted, would it mean that anybody 60 or 65 or 70, if otherwise qualified, would be eligible to take the examination?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BARKLEY. An applicant for rural mail carrier might take the examination no matter what his age, if he were otherwise qualified?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; if he were physically and otherwise qualified; but he would not get the pension right.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; he would not get the retirement privilege.

Mr. MOORE. Many men 55 years of age are better than others who are 30. I could cite numerous instances.

Mr. BARKLEY. I realize that is true. Take the Senator's case and my own——

Mr. MOORE. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. We offer ourselves as evidence of the fact that a man 55 years of age is still pretty good. However, I am wondering what the effect would be upon the general morale of the hundreds of thousands of Federal employees who have accepted always the age limit fixed by the commission or the bureau or the department under which they work.

Mr. MOORE. The president of the civil-service employees' organization appeared before the committee and urged the passage of the bill. What is a man over 35 going to do when he is not allowed to take an examination simply because of the notion of the head of a department who may have in mind a man 30 years of age? It is the easiest thing in the world to get the man who is wanted by taking the man who is 30 and saying, "This examination is limited to people 30 years of age." A man who is 32 could not take it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, an age limit of 35, I presume, is an exception. In most of the positions with which I have come in contact in connection with civil-service examinations the age limit has been above 50.

Mr. MOORE. If the Senator will let me correct him there, let me say that a census of 405 representative industries throughout the United States was taken and inquiry made as to the chance for jobs for applicants of various ages. The following results were shown:

Age of applicant	Percentage of job opportunities in industry	Percentage in United States civil service
For applicant under—
35 years	100	100
35 to 40 years	100	85
40 to 45 years	94	66
45 to 50 years	88	43
50 to 53 years		37
50 to 60 years	80	0
60 to 65 years	76	0
Over 65 years	75	0

So it goes. How can we stand here and talk about industry taking up people who are unemployed who are over 40 years of age?

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that, because that is information I am trying to obtain.

Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask one other question?

Mr. MOORE. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am merely seeking information; I am not opposing the Senator's bill; I may be for it.

Mr. MOORE. I hope the Senator will be.

Mr. BARKLEY. But it is a new proposition and one to which I have not given any thought.

Mr. MOORE. New Jersey has been operating under such a law for years.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am only trying to find out how it is going to work. I will not, however, interfere further with the Senator's remarks.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should like to point out to the Senator an apparent inconsistency. The National Reemployment Service, trying to get work for the unemployed in private industry, has as its most difficult task the securing of work for men and women over 40. They are spending a very large portion of their time going out in private industry and saying that industry should not have a rule providing a 40-year age limit; and yet the National Reemployment Service, in the employment of its own people, has a rule fixing an age limit of 30, 35, and 40 years. The personnel department hires men within the service and says that for certain work they cannot be over 30, and for other work over 35, and for other work over 40; yet they are out telling industry all the time that they should hire men who are 40, 45, 50, or 55 years of age.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is the age limit of 32, 35, or 40 fixed by the reemployment service brought about in any way by the refusal of industry to consider the employment of men over that age? In other words, has that refusal had anything to do with the fixing of the limitation by the reemployment service?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think the limitation is fixed by the Department of Labor by a certain expert lady who has charge of the personnel there, and who believes that in certain classifications nobody over 30 years of age should be employed. It is entirely within the Department of Labor itself.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am sorry to say that I have not read the report submitted by the committee that considered the bill being now sponsored by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MOORE. It was approved unanimously.

Mr. REYNOLDS. But I should like to ask if any members of the Civil Service Committee have appeared before the committee; and if so, what was their combined or individual attitude?

Mr. MOORE. They did not appear at the hearing. They objected originally because the bill did not contain a provision to preclude men over age from receiving a pension status. They said that in that form it would interfere with the pension fund. However, under the bill as now presented, a man who is over age will not get a pension; he will waive his right to one.

I wish to say that in the last few days the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I am informed, has passed a law making it a misdemeanor for any corporation in industry to refuse to employ a man over 45. So I do not see how we, as a Federal Government, can take a position that a man has to be not over 30 or 31 in order to take a civil-service examination.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am wondering if any of the organized bodies interesting themselves in legislation appeared before the committee; for instance, the American Federation of Labor and the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the American Legion.

Mr. MOORE. The Veterans of Foreign Wars are under such a provision of law. They have a right to take examinations regardless of their age.

Mr. REYNOLDS. All veterans have that right?

Mr. MOORE. Yes; and the president of the civil-service employees appeared in favor of the bill. I have a telegram from the executive committee of the Federation of Architects, Chemists, Engineers, and Technicians, who have been particularly affected by present conditions, endorsing this bill. I have many other letters and telegrams likewise endorsing it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I believe the Senator stated that a similar law has been in operation in the State of New Jersey for 10 years?

Mr. MOORE. A law of this character has been in operation there for years and has worked wonderfully well. It helps the morale of the man over 40. When he sees an announcement of a civil-service examination he says, "Oh, if I only could take the examination and secure a position, perhaps I could support my family." He has to pay taxes, but he is now prevented from taking the examination for the Government service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 29, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We pray Thee, O Lord, our God, to vouchsafe to us that which we need. Our Father, search the hidden sin and forgive, the unuttered grief and give grace to bear. Our experiences are different, yet we are united in a common infirmity and by a common need; do Thou let us hear the whisper of the Most High; our hope is in Thy everlasting bounty. We pray that our hearts may beat to that greater measure of that greater heart of which we are only fragments. We praise Thee for the eternal promise: Surely goodness and mercy shall follow us all the days of our lives and we will dwell in the house of the Lord forever. Almighty God, bless and preserve in safety the American youth of our land which is in our midst. May the light of Thy truth shine in growing brightness upon them. Blessed Lord God, shelter and keep them in the knowledge of Thy teaching. We pray that they may be prepared for clean, courageous, and patriotic citizenship. Make our fathers and mothers grandly conscious of their responsibility for the sake of our homes, our churches, and our country. For the love of Thy only Son, Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1938

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6958) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that the Senate has added a very considerable sum of money to the bill as it passed the House and, in addition, some projects that are not authorized by law. I wish to express the hope that the conferees will stand to keep the bill down as closely as possible to the House figures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say to the distinguished gentleman from New York that he is correct in that there has been a considerable sum of money added to the Interior bill by the other body. I am advised that 134 amendments, practically all of which would increase the appropriation for the various departments, have been added by the Senate. Personally I felt like introducing the House subcommittee to the bill. I hardly recognized it when it came back. As far as I am concerned, I shall do my best to hold it down as much as possible.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee as well as the Members of the House, to some of the Senate amendments. As I understand, under paragraph 2, rule 20, any amendment that would be subject to a point of order when the appropriation bill was pending in the House must be brought back to the House for a vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then certain Senate amendments must be brought back to the House and I will insist on it. I want to call the attention of the chairman of the subcommittee to one item in this bill in particular. There are a number of bad ones, but this one is an amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], on page 6409 of the RECORD, in the second column. It will be found on page 67 of the bill as it passed the Senate. It is only two lines:

Provided further, That section 2 of the act of Congress approved August 12, 1935, shall not apply to the Five Civilized Tribes.

Of course, no one knew that amendment was adopted until the RECORD was received this morning, unless one happened to be in the Senate yesterday afternoon. I have secured a report from the General Accounting Office this morning which shows that if that amendment is agreed to by the House the Court of Claims will not be able to recognize as an offset $17,000,000 in gratuities and advances made to these tribes in their claims pending against the Government, which were filed by the Five Civilized Tribes.

A bill passed the Senate yesterday by unanimous consent which provides that that section shall not apply to those cases. A similar bill has been reported favorably in the House, but it has not yet been acted upon. If this amendment is agreed to it takes $17,000,000 out of the Treasury, because the Department of Justice will be absolutely powerless to defend the Government against these claims. I want to express the hope to the gentleman from Oklahoma that he will not agree to that amendment. Let the Indian Affairs Committee bring the bill to the floor of this House and let it be considered under the general rules of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say to the gentleman that, of course, I cannot speak for the committee, but it is my understanding that under the rule a separate vote will be required on that and other items. At any rate, I will go into the matter and see that the gentleman gets every opportunity to express his wishes.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is not enough for me. Before I allow this bill to go to conference by unanimous consent I want some assurance that that item will be brought back to this House for a vote.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I think I can safely assure the gentleman that there will be a separate vote on that item.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman, of course, always keeps his word. Such action on the part of the conferees will expedite the matter, because we are in a position under the rules to force a separate vote.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. As I understand, that is a change in existing law?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is a change in existing law, and it would have been subject to a point of order in the House when the appropriation bill was pending here and, of course, was not offered.

Mr. TABER. That will have to be brought back to the House for a separate vote. The conferees could not agree to it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Under the jurisdictional act passed by the Congress allowing the Five Civilized Tribes to take their claims to the Court of Claims regardless of the statute of limitations, some 50 petitions were filed, and in each instance, I am advised, the court held in favor of the Government. In other words, the attorneys for the Five Civilized Tribes have been unable to convince the court they have a just claim. Therefore, they come now and want the Congress to pass a law which will prevent the Government from presenting its evidence showing advances made to these tribes. Pass this amendment, and no less than $17,000,000 of the taxpayers' money will be required to meet the decision of the court. It is the same as saying to a defendant in a damage case you can present only the evidence the plaintiff says you can present. It is absurd to think that this House is going to agree to that amendment. The Senate yesterday put that amendment in the bill; and if you will refer to the RECORD, you will see it was not debated—no facts were presented as to the effect the amendment would have on the pending claims.

Mr. Speaker, I know it is late and that appropriation bills should be passed before the night of the 30th, which is tomorrow night; but, so far as I am concerned, this bill is not going to pass without some roll calls on the amendments added by the other body, which, if adopted, will take millions out of the Treasury. You have amendment after amendment authorizing public-works projects which have no place in the bill. We should not agree to them until the legislative committees have considered the bills and the House has passed them. This thing of authorizing public-work projects on appropriation bills should stop, and now is the time to stop it. There is no rush. If there is a disagreement among the conferees, bring in a resolution continuing the present appropriations, which will enable the department to carry on until an agreement can be reached. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, I am going to insist upon a separate vote on some of the amendments; and when I say separate vote, I mean roll calls.

Mr. Speaker, having received the assurance of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] that the amendment will be brought back for a separate vote, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this include the tunnel through the mountain?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman refers to a $900,000 project in Colorado which will ultimately mean millions more. Oh, yes; that is now in the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. That has no place in an appropriation bill. As I understand it, before the conferees agree to that proposition it will come back for a vote?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. JOHNSON of Oklahoma, SCRUGHAM, O'NEAL of Kentucky, FITZPATRICK, LEAVY, RICH, and LAMBERTSON.

RELIEF BILL OF 1938

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on House Joint Resolution 361, making appropriations for relief purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I expect to make an explanatory statement. I wonder if the House would grant unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House be printed in the RECORD at this point instead of being read. There is nothing controversial.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the reading of the conference report and statement of the managers on the part of the House may be dispensed with and that the statement may be printed in full in the RECORD at this point. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report and the statement of the managers on the part of the House are as follows:

And the Senate agree to the same.

"SEC. 201. The Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works (herein called the 'Administration') is hereby continued until July 1, 1939, and until such date is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform on June 29, 1937. All provisions of law existing on June 29, 1937, and relating to the availability of funds for carrying out any of the functions of such Administration are hereby continued until July 1, 1939, except that the date specified in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1936, prior to which, in the determination of the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works (herein called the 'Administrator'), a project can be substantially completed is hereby changed from 'July 1, 1938' to 'July 1, 1939.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 202. The amount which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized by existing law to have invested at any one time in securities purchased from the Administration is hereby increased from $250,000,000 to $400,000,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 203. The amount of funds which the Administrator, upon direction of the President, is authorized to use for grants from moneys realized from the sale of securities is hereby increased from $300,000,000 to $359,000,000; and after the date of the enactment of this joint resolution no allotment shall be made by the Administrator for any project the application for which has not been approved by the examining divisions of the Administration prior to such date."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 62: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 204. The paragraph in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, under the caption 'Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works' is hereby amended by (a) striking out the words 'in connection with the liquidation' and (b) striking out the sum of '$10,000,000' and inserting in lieu thereof the sum '$15,000,000'."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 63: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 63, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 205. The funds available to the Administrator for the making of loans or grants or loans and grants may be used for projects (in addition to other purposes for which funds may be used) of the following classes, in amounts not to exceed the sums specified for each such class: (a) For school projects (other than those included in subdivisions (b) and (c) of this section) to replace, eliminate, or ameliorate existing school facilities or conditions which, in the determination of the Administrator, are hazardous to the life, safety, or health of school children, $60,000,000 for grants and $11,000,000 for loans; (b) for projects which have been authorized, or for the financing of which bonds or other obligations have been authorized, at elections held prior to the date of enactment of this joint resolution, or for projects for which an authority or board constituting an independent corporation without taxing power has been specifically created by a State legislature prior to such date, $70,000,000 for grants and $22,000,000 for loans; (c) for projects for which appropriations have been made by the legislatures of the States, $13,000,000 for grants and $2,000,000 for loans; (d) for projects to be financed, except for the grant, by the issuance to contractors of tax or assessment securities at not less than their par value: Provided, That an allotment shall not be made for any such project unless the applicant has, in the determination of the Administrator, made or incurred substantial expenditures or obligations in contemplation of receiving an allotment, $5,000,000 for grants; (e) for projects for which funds have been tentatively earmarked by the Administrator but for which formal allotments have not been made, $54,000,000 for grants and $78,000,000 for loans: Provided, That the grant for any such project shall not exceed the amount tentatively earmarked as a grant for such project: Provided further, That the amount specified for any of the foregoing classes may be increased by not to exceed 15 per centum thereof by transferring an amount or amounts from any other class or classes in order to effectuate the purposes of the title."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by such amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 207. Title II of this joint resolution may be cited as the 'Public Works Administration Extension Act of 1937.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) making appropriations for relief purposes submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On nos. 1, 2, 2½, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 29, 35, 42, 43, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 56, and 57: Provides for changes in section numbers, technical corrections, clarification, and other changes not involving the purposes of the text of the House measure or the Senate amendments.

On no. 3: The Senate amendment inserts the words "eradication of insect pests" and "minor miscellaneous" in category (b) of the limitations on the classes of projects under the appropriation. The House accepts the Senate amendment modified so as to eliminate the word "minor."

On no. 4: The House bill made provision for "self help" projects in category (c) of the limitations on the classes of projects under the appropriation. The Senate struck out these words and the conference agreement restores them to the bill.

On no. 5: The House has accepted the Senate amendment which provides that no part of the funds for relief and work relief shall be allocated or used for any purpose except to provide relief or work relief for persons in need or for completion of flood control projects already begun and for which other relief money has heretofore been allocated, and that not to exceed 5 percent of the amount allotted or used by any department or agency may be expended for administration of such relief or work relief except in the case of the agencies specifically set forth in the amendment with a modification striking out the words therein "or for completion of flood control projects already begun and for which other relief money has heretofore been allocated."

On no. 6: The House measure contains a provision that no non-Federal projects shall be undertaken or prosecuted under the relief appropriation unless and until "adequate provision has been made or is assured for financing" such part of the entire cost thereof as is not to be supplied from Federal funds. The Senate changed the words in quotation marks in the preceding sentence to "the sponsor has made a written agreement to finance" and the House has accepted the Senate amendment.

On nos. 7, 8, and 9: The House bill provided for loans, relief (direct), and rural rehabilitation for needy persons to be administered through any agency to which the President might allot the funds for that purpose. The Senate amendment restricts the administration of funds for those purposes to allocations to the Resettlement Administration and makes provision for administrative expenses of such administration and provides that the words "needy persons" in the House measure should include "Indians." The House accepts the Senate amendments insofar as they relate to the Resettlement Administration and the Senate has receded from the insertion of the words "including Indians."

On no. 10: The House measure provided that no agricultural laborer and no unskilled laborer who refuses or has refused an offer of private employment paying as much or more in compensation for such work as such person has received or could receive under the relief provided in the joint resolution, and who is capable of performing such work, shall be eligible for relief for the period such private employment or any similar subsequent offer of such employment would be available, with the further stipulation that any such person who performs any such private employment shall, at the expiration thereof, be entitled to an immediate resumption of his previously existing employment status on work relief. The Senate has stricken out the House provision and inserted a substitute embodying in clarified form the purpose of the House and extending the same to include all classes of persons employed on work projects and certified as in need of relief. The House accepts the Senate substitute.

On nos. 11 and 12: The House required that the part of the appropriation allocated to the W. P. A. be so apportioned and distributed over the 12 months of the fiscal year 1938, and be so administered during such fiscal year, as to constitute the total amount that will be furnished during such fiscal year for relief purposes through such agency. The Senate amendment strikes out the reference to the W. P. A. and requires the entire appropriation to be apportioned and distributed as to constitute the total amount for all agencies for relief for the year. The House accepts the Senate amendment.

On no. 13: The House measure contains a provision authorizing the President to prescribe rules and regulations for administering the appropriation and to utilize agencies within the Government and to delegate to such agencies the authority to prescribe rules and regulations to carry out the functions delegated to them by the President. The Senate struck out that part of the House text authorizing the President to delegate to agencies the authority to prescribe rules and regulations. The Senate recedes from its amendment and restores the House provision.

On no. 14: The Senate inserted a requirement that in the event the Congress, or any Federal agency so authorized by act of Congress, shall establish minimum rates of pay for persons employed by private employers in any occupation or occupations, and shall establish differentials applicable to different localities or sections of the country in such rates of pay, that thereafter no greater percentage differentials shall be applicable to the compensation of persons engaged upon projects under the relief appropriation than the average differentials so established by law or such Federal agency and in the event the law or such Federal agency shall establish such minimum rates of pay without any differential applicable to different localities or sections of the country that there shall be no such differential in compensation applicable to persons engaged on work-relief projects. The Senate recedes from this amendment.

On no. 25: Strikes out the Senate amendment requiring that the W. P. A. shall, upon request, make public a list of the names, positions, and salaries of all administrative personnel heretofore or hereafter appointed by the W. P. A. whose annual compensation is $1,000 or more.

On nos. 26, 27, and 28: The House text contains a section providing that any administrator or other officer named to have general supervision at the seat of government over the program and work contemplated under the appropriation, and any State or regional administrator (except persons now serving as such under other law), receiving a salary of $5,000 or more a year should be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The Senate amendments modified the section to make such appointment and confirmation extend to all officers and employees with a salary of $5,000 or more a year whether located in the District of Columbia or in the field and to strike out the language in the House text exempting from such appointment and confirmation State or regional administrators now serving as such under other law. The Senate recedes from its amendments extending Presidential appointment and confirmation by the Senate to persons other than those provided by the House language and the House agrees to the Senate amendment striking out the text of the House which exempted certain State or regional administrators with salaries of $5,000 or more a year from such appointment and confirmation.

On nos. 29, 30, and 31: The House provided that appointments to Federal positions of any administrative or advisory capacity under the relief appropriation in any State or county should be made from among the bona-fide residents of that State or county so far as not inconsistent with efficient administration. The Senate amendment eliminates the requirement for county residence and changes the word "residents" to "citizens". The House accepts the Senate amendments.

On nos. 32, 33, and 34: The House measure contains a provision prohibiting the payment of any of the appropriation therein as compensation to any Federal officer or employee in an executive, administrative, or supervisory position located outside the District of Columbia unless such person is an actual and bona-fide resident of the State or Territory in which such person is employed. The Senate amendment modifies the House language (1) to change the word "resident" to "citizen", (2) to restrain the operation of the paragraph so that it will be effective "so far as not inconsistent with efficient administration", and (3) to change the qualification of citizenship from the "State or Territory" to the "State, Territory, region, or district." The House accepts the Senate amendments.

On nos. 36 and 37: The House measure contains a section prohibiting the use of any of the appropriation to pay the salary or expenses of any person who is a candidate for any State, district, county, or municipal office (such office requiring full time of such person and to which office a salary attaches), in any primary, general, or special election, or who is serving as a campaign manager or assistant thereto for any such candidate. The Senate amendment expands the House provision to include any person who "holds" any such office and expands the definition of the term "office" as one to which "per diem" attaches as well as one to which salary attaches. The Senate recedes from its extension of the section to an officeholder and the House accepts the extension of the definition of "Office."

On no. 38: The Senate struck out the proviso of the House that none of the appropriation should be used to pay any W. P. A. district official unless such person is a bona-fide resident of the W. P. A. district in which the office is located. As the substance of this amendment has been included in the House agreement to Senate amendment no. 34, the House accepts the Senate amendment eliminating the proviso.

On no. 39: The Senate struck out the paragraph of the House prohibiting the payment of any of the appropriation as compensation to any Federal officer or employee in any administrative, executive, or supervisory capacity if such person receives or earns compensation for personal services (rendered during the period when such person holds such position) from any other source. The House accepts the Senate amendment eliminating the paragraph.

On no. 40: The House prohibited the use of any of the appropriation for the payment of the salary or expenses of any person who is related to the State administrator, district manager, or county supervisor, or the appointing power, within the third degree by blood or marriage. The House accepts the Senate amendment striking out the paragraph.

On nos. 41 and 44: The House measure contains a requirement that Federal appointments to positions under the joint resolution for employment within the District of Columbia should be apportioned among the several States and the District of Columbia on the basis of population. The Senate has modified the requirement to make it effective "so far as not inconsistent with efficient administration" and the House accepts the Senate amendment. The same section of the House text provides that in making separations from the Federal service, or furloughs without pay for as long as 3 months, of persons employed in the District of Columbia under the joint resolution, preference shall be given, in retaining employees, to those from States that have not received their share of appointments according to population. The Senate amended this part of the section to permit the appointing power to exercise the preference "as nearly as good administration will warrant" and the House accepts the Senate amendment.

On nos. 45, 46, and 47: Section 9 of the House measure makes provision for use of the appropriation for payment of administrative expenses, as determined by the Director of the Bureau of Budget, for any department, establishment, or agency for additional work incident to carrying out the purposes of the appropriation or the provisions of section 5 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935 or for agencies established by the President under section 4 of such act. Senate amendment no. 5 to section 1 of the joint resolution, as accepted by the House, deals specifically with administrative expenses and the Senate, therefore, made allotments under section 9 subject to the limitations of section 1, and the House accepts this change. Senate amendments to section 9 also changed the authority for the determination of administrative expenses from the "Director of the Bureau of the Budget" to the "President", and struck out authority for administrative expenses for agencies established by the President under section 4 of the Emergency Relief Act of 1935. The House accepts the change substituting the President for the Director of the Bureau of the Budget and accepts the Senate amendment with reference to administrative expenses of agencies under section 4, modified so as to provide specifically for the National Resources Committee instead of the general provision of the House measure.

On no. 48: Section 10 of the House measure was stricken out by the Senate. It provided (1) for the establishment of special revolving funds for the purchase, distribution, or rental of materials, supplies, equipment, and tools in connection with the furnishing of relief and work relief under the appropriation; (2) for the assignment, with the approval of the President, of personnel, equipment, and materials of the Corps of Engineers, War Department, to service in connection with flood-control and water-conservation projects under the joint resolution, even though such projects have not been duly authorized by law; and (3) waiving the requirement in section 1 that no Federal construction project under the relief appropriation should be undertaken until the full amount necessary for its completion should be allocated and irrevocably set aside for that purpose. The House accepts the Senate amendment with modifications which (1) restores the House language relating to revolving funds and making such funds available to include "repairs", and (2) restores the House provision relative to waiving the requirement for complete allocation of the entire cost of a Federal project changed so as to waive such requirement only in the case of Federal projects authorized by a law other than this joint resolution.

On nos. 54 and 55: Section 15 of the House measure provided that no part of the funds of the United States should be loaned or granted, except for an obligation previously incurred, to any State or any of its political subdivisions or agencies for any program or project of constructing, rebuilding, repairing, or replanning its penal or reformatory institutions unless under the laws of such State the sale in the open market of goods, wares, or merchandise, manufactured or mined in whole or in part by convicts or prisoners (except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation) has been prohibited. The Senate amendments to the section modified it (1) by changing the class of funds prohibited from expenditure from those of the "United States" to those "appropriated in this joint resolution" and (2) by changing the qualification to obtain the use of the funds for the stated purposes from that of State law prohibiting the sale in the open market of the products of prison labor to a finding by the President that the projects to be financed with the loan or grant will not cause or promote prison competition with private enterprise. The House accepts the Senate amendments modified so as to make more clear the intent of the Senate amendments.

On nos. 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, and 65, comprising title II of the joint resolution, extending the life of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works: The House, by the passage of H. R. 7363, extended for a period of 2 years the functions and funds of the P. W. A., increased from $300,000,000 to $340,000,000 the amount which the Administrator might use from the sale of securities for the making of grants, provided $3,000,000 for administrative expenses for the fiscal year 1938 (in addition to the $10,000,000 in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938), and provided that after the date of the enactment of H. R. 7363 no allotment should be made for any project the application for which had not been approved by the examining divisions of the P. W. A. prior to such date.

The Senate did not pass the House bill, but instead inserted title II of the joint resolution dealing with the same subject matter. Each of the Senate amendments is a separate section dealing with P. W. A. As to all of these, except one, the House has agreed with amendments substituting for the Senate language a composite of the Senate and House proposals. Senate amendment 64, the House accepts without amendment; it provides that no new applications for loans or grants for non-Federal projects shall be received or considered by the administration after the date of enactment of the joint resolution.

The substitute proposed by the House for the other amendments of the Senate increase from $300,000,000 to $359,000,000 the amount that may be used for grants instead of from $300,000,000 to $367,000,000 the amount which in effect might be so used under the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments provide for an increase in the amount of P. W. A. securities which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation might hold at any one time from $250,000,000, in effect, to such an amount as might be necessary to carry out the Senate proposal. The substitute increases the amount from $250,000,000 to $400,000,000. The House bill (7363) had no such similar provision.

H. R. 7363 and the Senate proposal contain provision that after the date of the enactment of the joint resolution no allotment shall be made for any project the application for which has not been approved by the examining divisions of the P. W. A. prior to such date. The substitute contains such a provision.

H. R. 7363 provides $3,000,000 additional administrative expenses for P. W. A. during the fiscal year 1938. The Senate amendments provide for $5,000,000 additional administrative expenses for 1938 and $10,000,000 for 1939 and amend the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938, so as to provide that the $10,000,000 of administrative expenses therein for the fiscal year 1938 shall not be in liquidation of P. W. A. The substitute adopts the Senate proposals for administrative for 1938 and for amendment of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, but omits the administrative expenses for the fiscal year 1939.

Senate amendment 63 is accepted with modifications setting forth categories of projects which were considered by both the House and Senate in arriving at an increase in the amount of grant money which the Administrator might use. The House bill, H. R. 7363, increased from $300,000,000 to $340,000,000 the amount of grant money for the purpose of providing for certain classes of projects which were set forth in the report of the House on that bill. The Senate amendment set forth the classes of projects in specific form. The conference agreement sets forth these classes of projects informatively and makes it clear that these classes of projects for which the funds may be used are in addition to other purposes for which funds may be used under the provisions of title II. The substitute for section 205 clarifies the Senate text with respect to projects in subdivision (b) and omits subdivision (f) and the proviso thereto dealing with miscellaneous projects.

The House bill, H. R. 7363, left the authority with respect to the P. W. A. in the determination of the President as provided by the present law. The Senate proposals took the authority from the President and placed it in the Administrator of the P. W. A. The substitute adopted leaves the authority in the President.

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I hope to take very little time, because there is nothing controversial in this report, and, of course, I am very happy about that.

There were no fundamental changes in the bill which came from the Senate as compared to the bill which we passed in the House. A number of clarifying amendments were inserted by the Senate, many of which were agreed to by the House conferees. Perhaps the principal amendments in which the House might be interested are amendments nos. 26, 27, and 28, on page 9 of that print of the bill carrying the Senate amendments.

In amendments nos. 26 and 27 an effort was again made by the Senate to secure for that body the right to confirm the appointment of employees of the Government who receive salaries of $5,000 or more. I am very glad to be able to report that after full and complete consideration the Senate receded from these amendments and this provision was stricken out of the bill.

On page 16 of the bill is amendment no. 55, relating to the use of Federal funds for projects which involve the use of prison labor. The Senate put a proviso in that amendment to permit prisoners to be used in the preparation of materials for and in labor upon the projects for which grants could be made. This proviso, of course, was very vigorously objected to by labor and by the building-trades industry—and I think with much merit—upon the ground that it was not right to use relief money or P. W. A. money to pay for a structure and then use prison labor to build it; that this was putting prison labor into direct competition with free labor. This proviso was stricken out.

Title II of the bill comprises the Senate amendments extending the Public Works Administration for 2 years.

You will recall that we passed a separate bill in the House (H. R. 7363) carrying out, as we thought, the understanding about an extension of the Public Works Administration. It was sent to the Senate on June 7. The Senate, instead of passing the separate House bill, added an extension of P. W. A. as title II of the relief bill. In general intent their action was the same, but in method of approach and in language it was entirely different. After careful deliberation the Senate language, in nearly every instance, was stricken out and the text of the House bill used as the basis for carrying what is the final provision, the substance of which, as carried in this conference report, is that instead of taking the control of the Public Works Administration out of the hands of the President and putting it in the hands of the Public Works Administrator, as the Senate amendments sought to do, it leaves control in the President and administrative control in the Administrator subject to the approval of the President. We agree also in language of the former House bill increasing the amounts for grants in that bill to the extent of $17,000,000 and $2,000,000 more for administrative expenses, which is $8,000,000 less than the amount for grants which the Senate put in the bill.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. I much prefer the original language of section 203, which specified that the amount of the grant should be 45 percent. Under the section as it is now drafted another administrative order similar to 197 could be issued, and we would again be forced to accept Federal grants on a restricted relief labor basis.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman from New York that while another administrative order could be issued, yet under H. R. 7363, as passed by the House, the President had control over the Public Works Administration, but I think it would not be fair to assume that the President, having agreed to recall the no. 197 order and having actually recalled it, would issue another such order.

Mr. BEITER. That is true, but a similar order could be issued and the grant that is to go to these municipalities in that event would not necessarily amount to 45 percent.

Mr. WOODRUM. It could be less than 45 percent.

Mr. BEITER. It could be less than 45 percent, whereas in the language of the original bill it was specifically directed to be 45 percent.

Mr. WOODRUM. The original bill (H. R. 7363) as we passed it continued the present law of grants at not to exceed 45 percent, whereas in this agreement, if there are communities where a grant of less than 45 percent has been earmarked the grant cannot exceed that, and to that extent it is more flexible and more in favor of the Government, and after all we would like to give Uncle Sam a break in connection with these things.

This agreement carries an additional authorization of $17,000,000 for grants which cover some classes of projects put in by the Senate. We struck out of the Senate amendments an item of $8,000,000 for grants for miscellaneous projects.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Some days ago our conferees were instructed by vote of the House to insist that the two separate bills, appropriating money respectively for the military and for the civil functions of the War Department, be kept separate, although the Senate had combined the two bills in one. In this case it appears we passed two separate appropriation bills, one for the Works Progress Administration, the other for the Public Works Administration. The Senate has combined these two in one bill. I am wondering if that is not a departure from the precedents which have been set in the recent case and in other cases.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman from Colorado the House conferees frankly stated to the Senate that though neither the relief bill nor P. W. A. extension bill was a "general" appropriation bill, they felt the Senate should have taken action on the Public Works Administration extension bill which the House sent over there. Those gentlemen assured us their action in putting this on as an amendment here was an effort to conserve time and when we met them in conference they were generous and very agreeable about it. Academically and theoretically, we do not like it, but actually it gives us an opportunity now in one transaction to do both jobs, which, after all, is what we are trying to do. I may say to the gentleman that this is in no manner a parallel case to that of the War Department appropriation bill, where two entirely separate "general" appropriation bills have been passed by the House and combined into one by the Senate. The relief bill and the P. W. A. extension are both legislative bills. Neither of them is a "general" appropriation bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Knowing as I do the jealousy of the gentleman from Virginia for the prerogatives of the House, I am glad to have his explanation. I trust this will not be a precedent.

Mr. WOODRUM. No. I may say to the gentleman that in the last few days before July 1st necessity makes us wound our prerogatives sometimes.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I realize that.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. I notice that the Senate struck out all of section 10, which, among other things, provided for the President assigning personnel, equipment, and materials of the Corps of Engineers of the War Department to supervise construction of flood-control projects not authorized by law.

There is a substitution in place of that amendment, but it leaves out that particular feature of flood control and water conservation that is not authorized at the present time. It was the understanding when this bill was pending before the House, that as a part of the compromise in not earmarking these funds that amendment would be permitted to stay in the bill. When section 10 was eliminated from the House bill, it was stated in the Senate at the time Senator BARKLEY brought that matter up, by the Senator who had charge of the bill, Senator ADAMS, of Colorado, that they would try and write a new amendment in conference that would take care of the situation along the Ohio Valley where flood-control projects have not been authorized by law. May I ask the gentleman what it is proposed to do in this connection?

Mr. WOODRUM. That provision was stricken out of there upon the positive assurance it was not needed and that the Corps of Engineers already had that authority under existing law without such amendment being written into this bill.

Mr. PARSONS. The Corps of Engineers does not have the authority to embark upon flood-control projects that are not already authorized by law?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not understand that amendment would have permitted them to do that.

Mr. PARSONS. The House language was written especially for that purpose, that is, to authorize the President to assign engineers, material, and equipment to projects not authorized by law.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not believe the House ever would attempt to write a provision in the bill that would permit embarkation on flood-control projects not authorized by law. If that provision was written in there, I think we did not know what we were doing when we put it there.

Mr. PARSONS. I may say to the gentleman that was a part of the compromise in withdrawing support for earmarking these funds. There was not an authorization bill from the Flood Control Committee setting up projects following the flood of 1937 and we wanted it distinctly understood in this bill these funds would be made available for flood control in the Ohio Valley and its tributaries and that the President could assign personnel, equipment, and material of the War Department to supervise the construction of these projects that had not been authorized.

Mr. WOODRUM. They told us they had a right to assign the personnel, equipment, and materials without that authority. We were told this language was not needed to accomplish what it states.

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will yield further, may I read the language of the House bill? This was the particular amendment upon the adoption of which a large group withdrew their support of earmarking. The amendment reads as follows:

Provided, That with the approval of the President, materials, equipment, and personnel of the Corps of Engineers, War Department, may be assigned to service in connection with flood-control and water-conservation projects prosecuted under this act notwithstanding that such projects have not been duly authorized by act of Congress.

This language particularly was placed in the amendment, and this was a part of the compromise.

If the Committee on Flood Control reports and the Congress passes an authorization bill, that will then take care of the situation. However, I may say to the gentleman that thus far, so far as I know, the committee has not reported such a bill, and we have no assurance the Congress will pass such a measure this year. Therefore, the Ohio Valley will be left out entirely except with regard to projects which have been heretofore authorized in the omnibus bill, and this bill will not give the relief we expected to be given under this amendment.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman I have a memorandum on the margin of my bill, and Mr. Sheild, our clerk, verifies my statement, that when we came to consider this matter we found there is no question about the fact the President has authority under this bill to allocate this money for relief projects, whether they are flood-control projects or what they are, and can use the Army Engineer Corps on those allotments.

Mr. PARSONS. He can do that on projects not authorized by law?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes. This relief bill is a "law", and he can allot for flood control under it in providing work relief.

Mr. PARSONS. However, the Army engineers cannot go upon these projects without the consent of Congress.

Mr. WOODRUM. We understand that if the President allots money for the construction of the Federal flood-control project as a relief project the Army engineers can be used upon it. There was no contest made over the provision by the gentlemen who were the conferees representing the other body because the matter was explained to the satisfaction of everyone. It was not a question of wanting to take the authority away but it was simply stated that it was not necessary to put the provision in the law.

Mr. PARSONS. I may say to the gentleman if I did not have some hope and expectation that the Committee on Flood Control will report a bill which may become law in this session, I certainly would fight the language which has been agreed upon in this bill. I think the committee is going to report such a bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will yield, is it not the understanding of the gentleman from Virginia that, without being specific about these things, the President under this bill will have the authority to use this money on unauthorized flood-control projects and, further, will have the authority to carry on the projects under the supervision of the Army engineers?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is my understanding. I am pleased to have the record show that was the understanding of the conferees, for whatever it may be worth to the gentleman.

Mr. PARSONS. With that assurance, and with the hope the Committee on Flood Control will report an authorization bill, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. BEITER. Under section 205, $60,000,000 is made available for grants and $11,000,000 for loans to replace schoolhouses which are considered by the Administrator to be in a hazardous condition. Where a school district has made application setting out that it has raised 55 percent of the funds which will be used to construct such a project, would it be entitled under the language of this bill to a grant of 45 percent?

Mr. WOODRUM. My understanding is that it would be eligible for consideration.

Mr. BEITER. During the consideration of the bill in the House the same question was propounded by another Member of the House. Upon reading the RECORD the following day, I saw that an affirmative answer had been stricken out of the RECORD. I wanted to get this in the RECORD, so it would be given consideration.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I note that in connection with amendments 7, 8, and 9 it is stated on page 6, in the statement accompanying the conference report, that—

> The House provided for loans, relief (direct), and rural rehabilitation for needy persons to be administered through any agency to which the President might allot the funds for that purpose. The Senate amendment restricts the administration of funds for those purposes to allocations to the Resettlement Administration.

Under the bill which we will further consider when the pending matter is out of the way, we provide that such of the funds as are allocated for this purpose shall be handled by the Department of Agriculture, and also such funds as may be transferred by Executive order. We make no appropriation. We permit the Resettlement Administration as such to die on June 30, but stipulate that rehabilitation loans shall be handled by the Department of Agriculture, where we shall have departmental responsibility. It seems to me this provision would complicate the situation.

Mr. WOODRUM. I may say to the gentleman I am afraid it does, but the House conferees were unable to get that language stricken out of the bill. The report has been adopted by the Senate, and it is now to be adopted in the House. I hope the bill will go through just as it is. We cannot frame this bill to anticipate what Congress may do in the future. We shall have to try to meet that situation when we come to it.

Mr. JONES. By resolution or some other way?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. Since it is desired that this entire appropriation shall be expended for relief purposes, the House adopted an amendment to the original bill making it illegal to pay any part of the appropriation to anyone who has another job. I see the conferees have agreed to strike this language out of the bill. I would like to know what prompted the conferees to reach such an agreement.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, the main thing that prompted the conferees to reach that agreement was that they had to reach such an agreement or still be conferring perhaps. The gentleman knows that in the stress of time you have to give and take. However, I may say to the gentleman that the same reason that was advanced in the House was advanced by the Senate conferees, that this kind of a provision would prevent the employment on a part-time basis of architects, engineers, and people in a supervisory capacity who might be used temporarily, and who might have a position where they could do a small job somewhere else.

Mr. WALTER. It seems to me the conferees could very easily have met that situation by modifying this language in such a way as to have made it possible for people of that sort to have been employed temporarily by the W. P. A., without leaving in the administration a great many people who are receiving salaries for whole-time work and are devoting very little of their time to the W. P. A.

In view of the fact that this appropriation is considerably less than is necessary to relieve distress and unemployment, I feel the conferees certainly should have insisted that the language the House put in the bill should remain in the measure.

Mr. WOODRUM. The conferees did insist, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but you cannot always get everything you want.

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. Section 206 provides that—

> No new applications for loans or grants for non-Federal projects shall be received or considered by the Administration after the date of enactment of this joint resolution.

It is my understanding that after administrative order 197 was issued, in some cases the school boards called off the bond elections, and since this bill has been considered in the Senate and this amendment added to the relief bill, some of these school districts now have ordered bond elections to be held. Will they be precluded from consideration for a grant?

Mr. WOODRUM. I should think they would be, unless you are going again to open the doors for all applications.

Mr. BEITER. I grant that, but where a project has been approved, and upon the suggestion of the Administrator no bond election has been held, it would appear there is more or less of a moral obligation on the part of the Government there, because they were ready to proceed and had advertised their bond elections previously. In many cases they have again advertised, and in one case I know about the bond election is being held today. In the event this measure is passed and the election is carried, they will be precluded from participation in a Federal grant.

Mr. WOODRUM. I am afraid that will be true, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. The only moral obligation on the part of the Government that I thought existed was where elections had been held, and this was the basis of whatever conversations I had with the gentleman from New York and others.

Mr. BEITER. That is right.

Mr. RAYBURN. Whether the bonds were sold or not. Now, it appears to me that the matters that the gentleman from New York is now talking about will just be matters that are in the lap of the gods for the future as to whatever course may be taken, but the moral obligation on the part of the Government that we were discussing here 2 weeks ago extended only to those places where they had voted bonds, sold them, or the legislature had taken action and had done whatever was necessary under the law of the State with respect to the State, county, municipality, or whatever subdivision may have been concerned.

Mr. BEITER. I want particularly to see the consummation of all projects in school districts where they have not held bond elections, but where the school directors have issued a tax levy and raised their proportionate share through a tax levy and not by a bond issue.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think if they had raised it by tax levy sometime in the past and before these agreements were made, and it was proper and legal in that jurisdiction, a moral obligation would exist so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BEITER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania briefly.

Mr. RICH. In the allocation of funds for flood control, who is going to make the recommendations to the President with respect to the projects that are to be constructed?

Mr. WOODRUM. I assume the President will get technical information from the Corps of Army Engineers who have charge of the supervision and construction of these projects, as well as consider a list of authorized projects which Congress has specifically authorized and I understand exists, although I am just answering the gentleman somewhat at random.

Mr. RICH. Congress has not authorized anything along that line that is applicable to this one billion and a half dollars.

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, yes; as I understand it, there are many authorized flood-control projects to which the President, under this bill, could allocate funds.

Mr. RICH. On the direct recommendation of the Army engineers?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Will the President hold up the recommendations of the Army engineers or is he going to try to carry out all the promises that have been made over the week end to Members of Congress who have had the privilege and pleasure of going down to Jefferson Island; and what consideration is going to be given to Members on this side of the House who did not receive an invitation to attend that love feast?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sure the President will take care of the matter in the proper way.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think he will give us proper consideration?

Mr. WOODRUM. I am sure he will give you the consideration you merit. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICH. It might be considered by some that there is no merit in the minority, and on that point we may disagree very much; but I would like to ask the gentleman this further question. The gentleman is one of the leading members of the Appropriations Committee. You have appropriated one billion and a half dollars now for relief. In the gentleman's opinion, what will be the result of this one billion and a half so far as taking care of the relief situation for the next year? Since you claim that prosperity is back, and that the Democratic Party has brought prosperity to this country, how long are you going to be compelled to carry on relief?

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that, of course, my views on the question of how much money is necessary for relief are pretty well known. I do not mean to say that one billion and a half dollars is not necessary for relief. Perhaps much more than that amount will be necessary, but I have felt all along, and have not changed by mind in this respect, that Uncle Sam should not pay all the bill.

A provision has been written into the bill that has not had much said about it. There has not been much publicity about it. This provision will save between $750,000,000 and a billion dollars on the relief bill in the fiscal year 1938 unless Congress subsequently repeals it. It provides that the funds appropriated here shall be set up on a basis of 12 months; that it shall be the total sum to be used for the relief bill for 1938. That provision was written into the bill in the Committee on Appropriations of the House. It was retained in the House and has been retained in the Senate, and will be in the law when we adopt this conference report. What does it mean? Last year we appropriated $1,425,000,000 for relief in the regular relief bill. They came back early in this session for $789,000,000 more. If this provision to which I relate were not in this bill which we adopt today, I have no doubt, yielding to pressure from States, municipalities, groups whom you represent and I represent, not able to stand up against the pressure, perhaps, they would be back here next January for another $750,000,000. They cannot come now. To that extent I answer the gentleman by saying that this bill carries a billion and a half for relief, more than I would like to see, but a very substantial and drastic reduction in the relief bill of the United States.

Between now and the time we convene next to consider this matter I hope to see some sane, logical, sensible method worked out whereby we can handle this relief problem, or so much of it as the Federal Government is going to assume, and yet put the responsibility upon the States and upon the localities. [Applause.]

I make this prediction to you. Unless you do that, an organization will arise in this country, a federalized organization, that will be so powerful politically that no Congressman can ever be elected in this country unless they put their stamp of approval upon him—an organization of people receiving gratuities from the Federal Government. They will be here asking you for a civil-service status. They want to be classed as Government employees. They will want annual leave and sick leave and retirement benefits, and an increase in wages.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. In just a moment. I do not believe that that is merely an alarming statement. The Federal Government is going to have to bear part of this cost for a while, until conditions come nearer to being normal. There are certain areas, congested areas, metropolitan centers, that obviously cannot carry the whole burden of this thing. What should we do? We should place upon that individual community or State or municipality the responsibility of purging their relief rolls, of taking the racketeering out of it and bringing it down, and then when the Federal Government is convinced that that locality or State cannot carry that burden, it is the duty of the Government to help them with it in some way, but let us put the responsibility back home, for that is where it belongs. Unless we do that, I say to you that this problem will come down upon you every Congress with increasing intensity, and you will not be able to stand up under it, and the taxpayers of the country will not be able to stand up under it, and they will wreak their vengeance upon those of us who permit that kind of condition to arise. I hope that between now and next year somewhere, somehow, there will be some sort of sane, logical, sensible plan evolved and brought here whereby such part as the Federal Government has to take in this relief program will be patterned in a way that it will clean it up to some extent.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman from Virginia answered several other questions that I was going to ask. I say to the gentleman that he has the respect of the Members of this House. There are from Virginia two of the greatest Senators in the United States, and would to God we had about 70 more of them. When those gentlemen put aside the mantle we feel sure that the gentleman from Virginia is going to be a successor to take his place in that body. Those Senators take the same attitude that the gentleman is advocating here, and if he will advocate that stronger, the House of Representatives will go with him in January, and I say to him that I am behind him 100 percent. I hope the gentleman will be able to carry out that program. [Applause.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. I want a little information about section 14 on page 16 of the bill. That section seems to provide that no loan or grant shall be made to any State when it is engaged in producing articles that will go into commerce in competition with a private enterprise. Here is a condition that we have in my State. I do not know just exactly what the status of the agreement is in that respect. We have a twine plant in connection with the State penitentiary at McAlester, and that plant was put there to enable the farmers of Oklahoma to get their twine without having to pay International Harvester Co. monopolistic prices. Under this law as agreed to, as I understand it, the State of Oklahoma can get no assistance in the further continuance of the manufacture of binder twine.

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, they would not get assistance, anyway, in the manufacture of twine. The question arises only in the matter of getting a loan for the construction of buildings, getting relief funds for the construction of buildings, and there is no other way that question can arise.

If the State of Oklahoma had an application for a relief grant for the purpose of erecting buildings at its penal institutions, then it could not get that grant if that institution, when erected, was going to manufacture goods that would go ino the open market in competition with free labor.

Mr. MASSINGALE. The part that gives rise to the question is on line 22, where it provides that—

> Unless the President shall find that the projects to be financed with such loan or grant will not cause or promote prison competition with private enterprise.

Mr. WOODRUM. That is right.

Mr. MASSINGALE. That is just exactly the reason that the twine plant in the State Penitentiary of Oklahoma was put there. As I understand it, under this language Oklahoma is shut out as far as the operation of the twine plant is concerned.

Mr. WOODRUM. No. It does not affect the operation of its twine plant. It affects its ability to get money from the Government to improve it.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. On page 2, line 25, is the proviso that—

> No portion of the funds hereby appropriated shall be allocated or used for any purpose except to provide relief or work relief for persons in need or for completion of flood control—

And so forth. Does that mean if a man is receiving a salary of $30,000 for liquidating a bank, he could be employed as a W. P. A. administrator?

Mr. WOODRUM. If I had the construction of it, I would say I would make that kind of construction of it.

Mr. WALTER. Was it the gentleman's understanding that that sort of situation could not exist when he agreed with the Senate conferees in striking out language that would have made that sort of thing impossible?

Mr. WOODRUM. I cannot say that there was any specific understanding about that particular case but we were definitely assured that the situations of which the gentleman speaks did not exist; that there were no cases where people were on the pay roll of the Works Progress Administration and had salaries that amounted to anything, who had other incomes or other business of any moment.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman can take my word or the word of the people who are busily engaged in building up the vast political machine of which the gentleman spoke a moment ago, that the W. P. A. administrator in my district was appointed liquidator of a mortgage pool of a closed bank and his fee fixed at $30,000. He is engaged in liquidating that mortgage pool and at the same time drawing a salary of $4,300 as W. P. A. administrator, and he never goes near the W. P. A. office.

Mr. WOODRUM. That should not exist.

Mr. WALTER. What would the gentleman do about it?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman knows what I would do about it.

Mr. WALTER. We are bound under the amendment adopted by the House.

Mr. WOODRUM. We could not save it for the gentleman, I am sorry to say.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. HOOK. I was interested in the gentleman's reference to the relief work being turned back to the States. Does the gentleman know that in most of the States, at least in my State, the direct relief is taken care of by the State and furnished directly by the State, and that the only assistance the State receives from the Federal Government is the Works Progress Administration? Michigan matches practically dollar for dollar all the relief grants for work relief. Does not the gentleman believe that is an equitable distribution, and is it not the proper thing to do?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think it is not the proper thing to do under any circumstances, unless it is absolutely necessary to relieve suffering and unemployment. In my judgment that is the only possible basis on which you can put the right of the Federal Government to go into Virginia or into Michigan and build sidewalks, sewers, schoolhouses, and streets, as much as we like to see those wonderful improvements come into our own communities.

Mr. HOOK. Is that not the only reason we are passing this bill, and as long as that necessity exists, should we not carry it on?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman from Virginia mentioned the responsibility of the States. In southern California we have 6,000 transients per month arriving there without means of subsistence and displacing other people who are working and throwing them on relief. Does this bill permit assistance in the case of transients which we face in California and perhaps in Florida?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think it does.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I ask the distinguished gentleman, who has devoted so much study to this question, if it is his opinion that the $1,500,000,000 will be sufficient to meet the pressing needs when you consider that since January 1 we have lost man-days of work on account of strikes amounting to a little over 10,000,000 days, with the increased load that is taking place at this very time on the agencies which are administering this kind of relief?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, that is an added feature to it, undoubtedly.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS. The gentleman feels, does he not, that in the case of able-bodied people who are unemployed a program of constructive work is much superior to direct relief?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS. And is that not the main reason for the work-relief program?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman with reference to this public-works extension, particularly with reference to section 205, where various projects, projects of different classes for which these funds can be spent are mentioned?

I notice this language in Senate amendment no. 63:

for projects which have been authorized, or for the financing of which bonds or other obligations have been authorized, at elections held prior to the date of enactment of this joint resolution, or for projects for which an authority or board constituting an independent corporation without taxing power has been specifically created by a State legislature prior to such date.

I have in mind also the statement of our floor leader, the distinguished gentleman from Texas, regarding moral obligations. He referred to the issuance of bonds duly authorized. In my State we have this situation: In 1933 a law was prepared here in Washington, sent down there and presented to the legislature, and was enacted by the legislature, setting up a bond authority and giving power to the various political subdivisions to issue revenue bonds without calling an election; that when approved by that bond authority these bonds would be good.

As I say, that law was passed and a great many of our projects are set up on that basis; in fact, in some instances these applications have been pending for 2 or 3 years; they have been approved by all of the examining divisions. In some cases they have actually sold such bonds and have the money in the bank and are paying interest on the bonds. In the gentleman's opinion would such projects be covered under this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman's statement presents a somewhat involved case. As I have been able to follow it, it seems to me that he has a class of cases that are provided for under this bill, but without further and considered judgment I would not like to make that as a binding statement. The language is as plain as we were able to make it, and it seems to me that the gentleman has stated a case that would come under it; but I must make that answer with reservations.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I wonder if the gentleman from Texas, our majority leader, would state an opinion regarding it?

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman from Virginia will yield, I answered that question a while ago when I interrupted the gentleman from Virginia. I think so; except, I may say to the gentleman from Alabama, that a revenue bond is about the hardest thing to convince them is sound. If they are convinced that this is sound—they do not have to do this in all cases—but if they are convinced that it is a sound proposition I think that a basis would exist, myself.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I may say with reference to soundness that there are at present pending 55 applications from the State of Alabama which have been approved by all of the examining divisions. I understand that all of those except 21 will be left out unless such projects as I have described are included in this provision.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Getting back to flood control, which I mentioned a few moments ago, I find in the bill reported by the Flood Control Committee yesterday this language:

That any funds appropriated for the fiscal year 1938 to carry out the provisions of the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, may be used for plant, material, supervisory, and skilled service necessary in the execution of the projects authorized herein, with relief labor furnished under the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937.

Which if passed will take care of the situation, as I mentioned a while ago. Would the gentleman be willing to support such a bill if brought before the House? And I propound the inquiry to our majority leader if he will use his good offices to see that this bill is brought before the House for consideration?

Mr. WOODRUM. Answering for myself, I may say that I shall be very glad to give it very careful consideration.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have heard only a few lines of the bill read.

Mr. PARSONS. Our majority leader is doubtless sympathetic with the intent of the flood-control bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am for the flood-control bill, I will say to the gentleman, for a specific one in this session and for a general one in the next session.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. LANZETTA. In connection with the apportionment and distribution of the amount appropriated in this bill does not the gentleman feel that if the need should arise the President should relax and permit the use of more funds during any 1-month period in which such increase was needed?

Mr. WOODRUM. I think he does not have the right to do it under the provisions of the bill. The bill does not provide for an allocation on a monthly basis. He may set it up on a seasonal basis; but it must be for 12 months; that is the point of it. He could use 75 percent of it in the first 6 months, but then he would have to make the 25 percent stretch over the next 6 months.

Mr. LANZETTA. Then it is the gentleman's understanding that it is to be on a seasonal basis?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is to be on a 12 months' basis. It has got to be spread out over a year and used as his good judgment and experience dictate it should be used.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. In view of the different methods used by political subdivisions to meet the requirements of P. W. A., not merely by bond elections, but by tax levies and other methods so long as they meet the requirements, why should they be excluded and only those projects recognized for construction in the matter of which bond elections have been held?

Mr. WOODRUM. It gets back to the proposition of moral obligations on the basis that where communities and localities had gone to the trouble of taking overt acts under the requirement, setting up men, machinery, and operations, it was felt that there was some moral obligation on the part of P. W. A.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. A tax levy would involve practically the same obligation as a bond election.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this bill, as far as I can observe, carries a direct appropriation of one and one-half billion dollars. Referring to the Treasury statement of June 25, which came this morning, I would think there is about $270,000,000 of reappropriation that the President could turn into this item for the first title of the bill.

Under the second title there is a reappropriation of funds growing out of the funds which have been turned over or will be turned over by the P. W. A. to the R. F. C. of approximately $204,000,000. So that the total, in addition to the loans to municipalities for expenditures which will be available under this bill in the next fiscal year, amounts to approximately $1,974,000,000.

The expenditures for so-called relief this year, according to the Treasury statement—and I refer to expenditures, not the total that is carried there—run approximately $3,800,000,000. Page 2 of the statement shows $2,800,000,000, but we must add to that the repayments which have been made, amounting to $1,000,000,000 in revolving funds, which have been subtracted from the recovery and relief expenditures on page 2 of the Treasury statement.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very large sum of money, and practically none of it is going to be available for relief, according to the program. It simply means a continuation of the W. P. A. and their extravagant method of doing business and their inefficient method of doing business. A friend of mine who has been going around the country came in this morning and advised me that in no place all over the country—and he has paid special attention to it—was there efficiency in the administration of the W. P. A. The sooner we get away from this type of demoralizing, so-called work and so-called relief, and have things administered in an efficient manner, where expenditures of that kind are supervised by the local authorities and the responsibility put up squarely to the local authorities for the relief situation, the better this country is going to be, and the better the people who are on so-called relief employment and that sort of thing are going to be. We are not going to make a forward step toward rehabilitating that group until we get rid of this overhead in Washington and this idea of managing things from a central spot instead of placing the responsibility where it belongs.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the presentation of this conference report in its present form and its adoption by the practically unanimous vote which will presently be accorded it, carries a significance which should not be overlooked just at this time.

In adopting this report the House and Senate are not merely voting on the appropriation of a billion and a half dollars for relief. That is the least important issue submitted for the action of the House here this morning. The real question before the House when the vote is taken on the conference report is the approval of the relief program of the administration; the endorsement of the methods used, the amounts expended, the results secured, and especially our cooperation in the continuance and completion of the program. Every opportunity has been afforded for observation at first hand of the program and its objectives.

In every State, every congressional district, and every community projects have been carried on, relief has been administered, employment has been provided. And now, after 3 years of trial, we vote this morning to decide whether it has been a success or a failure; whether it has been honestly and efficiently administered; whether we decide to continue it as heretofore or whether we prefer to revise or amend it; whether we wish to reduce the amount available for the purpose or continue it at the figure recommended by the administration. That is the issue before the country. That is the question on which we vote in passing on the adoption of the conference report.

We are now in the later stages of that program. In its furtherance we have disbursed sums so stupendous as to stagger human comprehension. The proposition now before us is to spend another billion and a half in the same way, under the same circumstances, and by the same authority. As has well been said, that in each previous appropriation we have given the President a blank check. And now again, after exhaustive investigations and debate in the House and Senate, through the newspapers, over the radio, and on the streets of every city and village in the Republic, we again propose in this conference report to give him another blank check. And in a few minutes this House will vote practically unanimously to adopt the conference report and turn the check over to him practically without qualification or limitation.

It is the greatest tribute ever paid to a public official, the strongest endorsement ever given an administration, the most convincing expression of confidence ever voted by this or any other Congress.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. My time is so brief I hope the gentleman will not insist.

Mr. Speaker, persistent efforts have been made to create the impression that the Congress is out of sympathy with the administration and the President. Columnists and editorial writers, with whom the wish was father to the thought, have affected to see in the debate on the relief bill the reflection of an unrelenting opposition to the program and the determination to deny either approval or cooperation. But this conference report, unanimously submitted by House and Senate conferees and shortly to be approved by both Houses, effectually sets at rest any doubts which may have been entertained on that score. We are united. We are back of the President. And after 3 years of trial the administration program meets with the wholehearted cooperation of both the Congress and the country.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, we might also recall the assurances freely given that any action taken by the House of Representatives on this bill was inconsequential and could have no ultimate effect on the measure; that regardless of the form in which passed or the amount written in by the House it would be revised, rewritten, and reduced to a billion, or a billion and a quarter. But here it is before the House for final approval in practically the same form in which it was reported by the committee and in the same amount passed by the House. This conference report is conclusive and convincing evidence that the House of Representatives is still a part of the Federal Government, and that it continues to discharge its proper functions under the Constitution of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I had intended to save more time for the gentleman from Missouri, the acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I therefore ask unanimous consent that he may have 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the bill as reported by the committee, as passed by the House, and as now submitted in the conference report is the happy medium between two extremes. On the one hand there were those who contended that it carried too much money; that it promoted racketeering, was characterized by few redeeming features, and should be limited to an appropriation of a billion dollars at most. On the other hand were those who insisted just as strenuously that the amount carried was inadequate; that the bill was a niggardly and parsimonious makeshift and should be increased to a minimum of $2,000,000,000 at least. The bill before us is the well-considered mean between the two. Press reports from all parts of the country within the last week reflect protests against the retrenchments and reductions enforced by the Government in its program to curtail relief and return to normal conditions. The suggestion that some plan must be adopted to discontinue relief comes belatedly. That course was determined upon by the President months ago, and this bill reducing the annual expenditure by more than three-quarters of a billion dollars is a studied step in that direction.

At the same time provision is made for actual requirements and no child will lack food or clothing; no unfortunate family will suffer; recovery will continue; the Budget will be balanced and national welfare promoted and safeguarded. The President will disburse this money honestly, wisely, and effectively, as in the past. And despite widely disseminated reports of discord, disloyalty, and disintegration here on the Hill, the Congress will continue its united support and cooperation, as evidenced by the enactment of this legislation in the form and amount warranted by the successful experience of the past 3 years. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OMAHA-COUNCIL BLUFFS MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7405) to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that private bridge bills of this character, providing for tolls, should come up on the regular call of the Consent Calendar and should not be considered specially.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will yield for just a moment, the Chair justified the recognition of the gentleman from Nebraska by the assurance given to the Chair that time is of the essence in this matter, inasmuch as certain obligations and contracts will expire on the 1st of July.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to explain the bill if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the extension of a franchise for a publicly owned bridge at Omaha, Nebr., across the Missouri River at that point. The franchise was granted in 1930 and has been extended by the Congress from year to year. This bill provides for an additional extension for 1 year.

The reason I have asked for the immediate consideration of this measure is that if the bill is passed by July 1, certain Federal funds may be allocated for use on this bridge which cannot be used if the bill is not passed before that date. This is not a private bridge but a publicly owned bridge, which is to be owned and controlled by a board set up by public law. The board is a nonprofit board. The bridge is not in any sense a private toll bridge.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman mean highway funds will be so allocated?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Highway funds; not W. P. A. funds, but highway funds.

Mr. TABER. Is not that an unusual procedure?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am informed by the Bureau of Public Roads it is perfectly proper. The matter came up before the Subcommittee on Bridges of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] on the gentleman's side of the aisle, are members. These gentlemen were thoroughly satisfied from the representations of the Bureau of Public Roads that this is in every way in order.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. During the time this franchise has been under consideration work has actually started. The State Highway Department of Nebraska, in cooperation with the Federal Government, has spent practically $2,500,000 in widening and broadening the Lincoln Highway leading out of the city of Omaha, which brings it right into the location of this bridge. This is a direct east-and-west highway to take the through traffic directly west through the city of Omaha and Council Bluffs on the Iowa side. This bill is very important. It was demonstrated before our subcommittee on bridges, which gave 2 days of public hearings to this bridge bill, that it was essential the measure be passed in order that advantage may be taken of the agreements made between the departments of public works of the city of Omaha and of the city of Council Bluffs, and that these agreements may be carried out before June 30, 1937.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not true this bridge will be built just 1 block from a bridge which is now in use?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DONDERO. What can the gentleman say with respect to what will become of the investment in that bridge?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I may say to the gentleman the history of that bridge, briefly, is that in 1887 a private bridge was built across the Missouri River between Omaha and Council Bluffs and has been in existence, privately owned, from that day to this. More than $10,000,000 in tolls has been extracted from the public. You and I and everyone who travels by the Lincoln Highway pays a toll to this bridge company. The residents of the city of Omaha, numbering about 225,000, and the residents of the city of Council Bluffs, immediately across the river, numbering about 50,000, are required to pay toll every time they go across the bridge. It was built in 1887 at a cost of about $600,000 and was later improved at a cost, it is said, of about a million dollars. The bridge, including the cost of improvements, has been paid for time and again. The city of Omaha, through its officials, has made efforts to negotiate with the private company owning the bridge to purchase the bridge, but the negotiations have come to naught. I respect private property as much as does the gentleman who is now inquiring of me, but I say that any man who objects to this bill stands in the way of the people of the State of Nebraska, the State of Iowa, and the cities of Omaha and Council Bluffs, and stands in the way of every person who is required to pay toll across that bridge as he travels across the continent on the Lincoln Highway and five other continental highways which cross the bridge.

It is important that this bill pass at this time, and as has been explained, there is nothing new about the measure. The Congress is committed to this franchise. The franchise was granted in 1930 and has been extended from year to year. Did the gentleman object when the franchise was originally granted or when yearly extensions were granted in the past? We now ask merely for another extension. The only opponents of this bill in the hearings before the subcommittee, which were held before the distinguished group of men who compose that subcommittee, were those who own the private bridge which is now extracting toll from the public.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think a public necessity exists for the building of the new bridge?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Not only do I feel that way about it, but the people of my city feel that way and the people of the city of Omaha and of the State of Nebraska feel that way and the people of Council Bluffs, represented here so ably by my friend, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN], feel that way, as well as the people of the State of Iowa generally. They are all united in this request.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I sympathize a great deal with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has said in regard to this request for unanimous consent, but the urge for the passage of the bill before the 1st of July seems to be great. I do not understand why those interested have delayed so long before bringing the bill before the Congress, but the Subcommittee on Bridges of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce considered the bill very carefully. After holding extensive hearings on it the subcommittee reported it back to the full committee unanimously and the full committee in turn unanimously approved the recommendation of the subcommittee and reported the bill to the House. The present bill is only an extension of a permission which was granted by the Congress in 1930.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for completing the construction of the bridge at or near Farnam Street, authorized under the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States", approved June 10, 1930, as extended, is hereby further extended 1 year from June 10, 1938. It is hereby recognized that construction has been heretofore commenced under the provisions of section 3 of said act as extended, and said bridge may be constructed at any point at or near Farnam Street, irrespective of the site of the commencement hereby recognized, subject to the approval of the War Department and the approval of either of the Highway Departments of the States of Iowa or Nebraska, all in accordance with and subject to the provisions of said act approved June 10, 1930, as extended, and as amended by this act.

SEC. 2. Any bridge constructed or to be constructed or owned and operated by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees under said act of 1930, as herein amended, shall be deemed a Federal instrumentality for facilitating interstate commerce, improving the postal service, and providing for military and other governmental purposes.

SEC. 3. That in addition to the powers granted by said act of 1930, said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees may acquire and purchase and thereafter operate any other bridge or bridges (including approaches) over the Missouri River within 1 mile of the site of the bridge to be constructed by said board at or near Farnham Street, Omaha, Nebr., as referred to in said act of 1930, all in the manner provided by this act and said act of 1930, it being contemplated that all bridges owned and operated by said board will be so financed that the obligations incurred will be amortized and the travel over such bridge or bridges will be made free of tolls at the same time. It shall be obligatory upon said board that all toll revenues, after paying the reasonable and proper charges of operation and maintenance and the accruing interest on the outstanding indebtedness, be applied to the retirement of such indebtedness. The rate or rates of toll for crossing any bridge now or hereafter constructed which abuts upon or enters into the corporate limits of both the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, shall not be reduced below the rate or rates now in effect on existing bridges so long as any indebtedness of said board for the account of any bridge or bridges shall be outstanding and unpaid. To pay the cost of any such bridge or bridges so purchased, the board may, either separately or in conjunction with the financing of any other bridge, issue bonds as provided in said act of 1930 as herein amended: Provided, That said board shall operate each of the bridges under its control and charge and collect such rates of toll for transit over same as will not reflect upon or impair the earnings of any other bridge to such extent as to adversely affect any outstanding bonds which said board may have issued for account of such other bridge: Provided further, That the power granted in this section with respect to the acquisition and purchase of any other bridge shall not be exercised by said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri Bridge Board of Trustees until the amount to be paid for the acquisition and purchase of any such bridge shall have been approved by the Highway Departments of the States of Iowa and Nebraska. The construction of no competing bridge shall hereafter be authorized, the operation of which will adversely affect such outstanding bonds, unless provision is otherwise made for the payment thereof: Provided further, That the rates of toll to be charged for transit over bridges operated by said board shall at all times be subject to regulation by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. That either the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa, separately or jointly, or the cities of Omaha and Council Bluffs, separately or jointly, or the counties of Douglas, Nebr., and Pottawattamie, Iowa, separately or jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in all of the bridges, including approaches, and including any interest in real property necessary therefor, then owned and operated by said board. It shall not be necessary to condemn or expropriate such property, but the said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, its legal representatives and assigns, shall deliver same by proper instrument of conveyance; and no damages or compensation whatsoever shall be allowed for any such right, title, and interest, but such conveyance shall be made and taken subject to the bonds, debentures, or other instruments of indebtedness of said board then outstanding, including accrued interest thereon. Such instrument of conveyance shall be executed and delivered within a period of 30 days after a written notice of such intention to take over such property.

SEC. 5. That in addition to the powers granted by said act of 1930, as extended, said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, its legal representatives and assigns, are hereby granted power and authority to acquire, condemn, occupy, and possess and use real estate and other property acquired for or devoted to a public use for park or other purposes by the State of Nebraska or the State of Iowa, or any governmental or political subdivision thereof, or any person or corporation which real estate or other property may be required for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and highways leading thereto, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 6. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 2156) to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes, may be substituted in lieu of the House bill (H. R. 7405), and that all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill be stricken out and the House bill (H. R. 7405), as amended, be substituted therefor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting therefor the House bill as amended, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN: Strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and insert the following:

"SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it was of the utmost importance that the House of Representatives consider the bill now before Congress extending the right of franchise for the building of a free bridge between Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr. It has been a great pleasure to cooperate with Senator EDWARD R. BURKE, of Nebraska, and Congressman MCLAUGHLIN, as well as the two mayors of the cities interested, the Governor of Nebraska, the chairman of the present bridge board, Mr. Henry Kieser, and all interested parties in bringing this matter to a successful conclusion. It was my pleasure to introduce and obtain passage of an extension of the same franchise at one of the earlier sessions of Congress of which I was a Member.

It is very fine indeed that all groups in the two cities of Council Bluffs and Omaha have united in an agreement under which they can proceed toward the construction of a bridge, and I believe that the erection of such a structure is nearer to a realization today than it has been for many years.

As has already been explained, the necessity for haste with reference to the pending bill is due to the fact that unless it passes this House, in addition to the approval that has already been given to the bill in the Senate, we will be unable to utilize certain Federal funds now available in the State of Nebraska. The fact that the legislation will have practically completed its passage through Congress upon its approval here today will indicate definitely to the authorities now in charge of the funds that the franchise is to be extended. The cooperation of the Speaker of the House [Mr. BANKHEAD] and the Members with reference to this particular matter is, I am sure, greatly appreciated by the citizens of Council Bluffs and southwest Iowa, whom I represent.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEITER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein the statement of Mr. Donald Richberg before the Joint Labor Committee on Wages and Hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

FARM-TENANCY BILL

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7562, with Mr. DRIVER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the first section of the bill has been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The first paragraph of the bill has been read.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it proper to offer an amendment at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is in order at this time if it is germane.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to report the amendment.

Mr. BOILEAU (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with—it is rather long—and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on the amendment, and ask the gentleman to explain the amendment before making the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD at this point? Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order against the amendment.

The amendment referred to is as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 1, line 3, strike out all of section 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That this act may be cited as the 'Farmers' Security Act of 1937.'

"TITLE I—FARM TENANT PROVISIONS

"SECTION 1. (a) There is hereby established a corporation to be known as the Farmers' Security Corporation (hereinafter in this act referred to as the Corporation), which is hereby declared to be an agency and instrumentality of the United States. The principal office of the Corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia. The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors composed of five members, not less than two of whom, at the time of their appointment, are farm tenants or sharecroppers. The directors shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Each director shall receive a salary at the rate of $7,500, together with actual necessary traveling and subsistence expenses when engaged in the business of the Corporation outside of the District of Columbia, and shall hold office for a term of 5 years, except that (1) any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and (2) the term of office of the members first taking office after the date of the enactment of this act shall expire as designated by the President at the time of appointment, one at the end of 1 year, one at the end of 2 years, one at the end of 3 years, one at the end of 4 years, and one at the end of 5 years after the date of the enactment of this act. In submitting the names of such nominees to the Senate for confirmation, the President shall certify that, in his opinion, each of such persons has demonstrated that he will exert every effort to improve the status of those who qualify for loans or grants under the provisions of this act and is in sympathy with the efforts of farm tenants, farm laborers, and sharecroppers to become farm owners. Before the President submits the names of nominees for membership on the board of directors of the Corporation, he shall give a reasonable opportunity to the national representatives of the various organizations composed primarily of farm tenants or sharecroppers to recommend persons for such positions. The Corporation shall annually make a full report of its activities to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who shall cause the same to be printed for the information of the Congress.

"(b) The board of directors shall have power (1) to select from its members a chairman and a vice chairman; (2) to determine and prescribe the manner in which the obligations and expenses of the Corporation shall be incurred, allowed, and paid; and (3) to adopt such bylaws and to promulgate such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, as may be necessary or convenient for the proper conduct of the affairs of the Corporation or to carry out the purposes of this act.

"(c) The capital of the Corporation shall be in the sum of $500,000,000, subscribed by the United States of America, payment for which shall be subject to call, in whole or in part, by the board of directors of the Corporation. The Corporation shall issue to the Secretary of the Treasury receipts for payments for such stock subscriptions and such receipts shall evidence the stock ownership of the United States. There is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not in excess of $500,000,000 for the purpose of subscription to the capital stock of the Corporation. In addition, there is authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for each year succeeding the first fiscal year for which an appropriation is made under the preceding sentence, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, and the sums appropriated in pursuance of this authorization shall be available to the Corporation for the purposes of this act.

"(d) The Corporation, including its property, franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, and other funds, and its loans and income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipal, or other local taxing authority, except as hereinafter provided. Mortgages, notes, and other lien and credit instruments executed to, or held by, the Corporation and any obligation issued or executed by it shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the United States. The Corporation, when designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be a depositary of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary; and may also be employed as a financial agent of the Government; and shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositary of public money and financial agent of the Government, as may be required of it. The Corporation may also function as an agent of the United States with respect to lands in the public domain to the extent and in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, or by the Commissioner of the General Land Office with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The Corporation, with the consent of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, may avail itself of the use of information, services, facilities, officers, agents, and employees thereof in carrying out the provisions of this act.

"(e) The Corporation shall have power to employ, to fix the compensation, and to prescribe the powers and duties of such officers, examiners, attorneys, other experts, and employees and agents as may be necessary to carry out the powers and duties conferred upon the Corporation by this act, to require bonds of them and fix the penalties thereof. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails for its official business in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government.

"(f) All books, records, and accounts of the Corporation and of all county committees shall be open for inspection, under such regulations as the Corporation may prescribe, by any officer of the Corporation or any member of a county committee, or by any person who has applied for or received assistance under this act.

"(g) The Comptroller General of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to audit at least once each governmental fiscal year, and at such other times as he may prescribe, the books, records, and accounts of the Corporation. Such audit shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the President of the United States and the Congress, together with such recommendations thereon as the Comptroller General deems advisable.

"SEC. 2. The Corporation shall have the power, and it shall be its duty, to establish, and to assist in the establishment of, farms and farm homes, for the purpose of encouraging the ownership of farm homes and improving the situation of farm tenants, sharecroppers, and farm laborers.

"ACQUISITION AND IMPROVEMENT OF PROPERTY

"SEC. 3. The Corporation shall have power, in order to carry out the purposes of section 2, to—

"(a) Acquire by purchase, gift, devise, condemnation, or by transfer from any agency of the United States or from any State, Territory, or political subdivision, real property, and options to purchase real property, suitable for use for farming and for farm homes. Real property may be acquired subject to any reservations, outstanding estates, interests, easements, or other encumbrances which the Corporation determines will not interfere with the utilization of such property for the purposes of this title.

"(b) Construct and maintain necessary buildings and improvements on property acquired under this section. No building shall be constructed under this subsection unless the county committee has certified to the Corporation the necessity therefor and has approved the type of building and the amount proposed to be expended for the construction thereof.

"(c) Improve, develop, maintain, and insure property acquired under this section.

"COUNTY COMMITTEES AND LAND PURCHASE

"SEC. 4. The county committee established under section 32 shall—

"(a) Receive applications of persons desiring to sell real property in the county to the Corporation for the purposes of this title.

"(b) Make inquiries in the county as to real property which may be suitable and available in such county for purchase for the purposes of this title.

"(c) Examine and appraise real property in the county when required by the Corporation or with respect to which application to sell is made.

"If the committee determines that any such real property in the county is of such character that there is a reasonable likelihood that its purchase and lease would carry out the purposes of this title, it shall so certify to the Corporation and it shall certify the amount which the committee finds is a reasonable purchase price, taking into consideration land values in the county. No real property shall be purchased by the Corporation unless certified by the county committee in which such real property is situated, nor shall the Corporation pay for any such real property an amount in excess of its value as so certified by the county committee. No certification shall be made with respect to land in which any member of the committee has any property interest, direct or indirect.

"ELIGIBLE BENEFICIARIES

"SEC. 5. (a) Only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations shall be eligible individually or cooperatively to receive the benefits of this title; but no such person shall be eligible if his income is sufficient to maintain his family, pay operating expenses and taxes on and maintain property owned by him, and discharge the interest and principal payments on any indebtedness secured by such property. In making available the benefits of this title, the Corporation shall give preference to persons who are married or who have dependent families, and who are most in need.

"(b) The recommendations of prospective lessees by the county committee provided for in section 32 shall be considered in selecting lessees of land within that county, and no lease of land shall be made in a county to any person until the county committee has had an opportunity to report its opinion with respect to the ability of such person to carry out undertakings which may be required of him under this title. The county committee established under section 32 shall make inquiries in the county as to prospective lessees who are eligible to receive the benefits of this title and shall receive applications of prospective lessees. If the committee finds that any person is so eligible and that such person by reason of his character, ability, and experience is likely successfully to carry out undertakings required of him under a lease which may be made under this title, it shall so certify to the Corporation. No lease of any land in the county shall be made under this title to any person unless such person has been so certified by the county committee.

LEASES TO TENANTS

"SEC. 6. (a) The Corporation shall lease farms acquired by it under this title to persons or cooperatives eligible for its benefits.

"(b) Farms leased shall be of such size as the county committee with the approval of the Corporation determines to be sufficient to constitute an efficient farm-management unit and to enable one or more diligent farm families, either individually or cooperatively, to carry on farming of a type which the county committee deems can be successfully carried on in the locality in which the farm is situated, which gives reasonable indication of providing minimum standards of health and decency for such family or families as established by the Bureau of Home Economics of the Department of Agriculture or other Government agencies.

"(c) Each lease shall be for a term not in excess of 5 years, and the Corporation may renew any such lease for a term not in excess of 5 years.

"(d) The lease shall provide for payments which the Corporation determines to be fair and reasonable, and such payments shall not be in excess of the prevailing rentals in the locality in which the farm is situated as certified by the county committee. No lease shall prohibit the prepayment of any sum due under it.

"(e) The lease shall provide that the lessee will conform to such requirements as the Corporation shall prescribe in order that the property may be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented.

"(f) The lease shall provide for its termination upon default of any obligation thereunder or upon assignment, without the consent of the Corporation, by the lessee of this interest.

"(g) The Corporation shall have power to prescribe such additional terms (not inconsistent with this title) in the lease as it deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this title.

"(h) Amounts paid under subsection (d), diminished by such amounts as the Corporation determines are necessary to reimburse it for insurance paid on the farm and for amounts paid under section 13 with respect to the farm, shall be applied to the purchase price of the farm if the Corporation enters into a contract for the purchase of the farm by the lessee.

"LESSEE PARTICIPATION

"SEC. 7. (a) Wherever practicable, in the administration of this title, the prospective lessee shall be consulted respecting the farm which is to be made available to him and respecting the construction, remodeling, extension, or repair of any building on the farm.

"(b) No building shall be constructed, remodeled, extended, or repaired by the Corporation on any farm during the period during which a lease is in effect unless with the consent of the lessee.

"PURCHASE BY LESSEE

"SEC. 8. (a) The Corporation is authorized, at any time not later than the termination of the lease, to enter into a contract with the lessee under which the lessee agrees to purchase the farm and pay the price agreed upon (minus amounts applied to such price in pursuance of section 6 (h)). The term of each such contract shall be 40 years from the time of the making of the contract. The term of any such contract may be extended in the case of a purchaser who has not paid the entire amount due by reason of the provisions for reduced payments of subsection (b) if the purchaser is not in default on any other provision of the contract. The extension in such case shall be for such period as the Corporation determines will be necessary to enable the purchaser to pay the amount due, together with interest thereon at the rate of 1½ percent per annum, in annual installments equal to the average annual payment made by him during the last 10 years of the term of the 40-year contract.

"(b) The contract shall provide for payment of the unpaid balance of the price agreed upon, together with interest thereon at the rate of 1½ percent per annum in annual installments in accordance with uniform amortization schedules prescribed by the Corporation. The contract shall provide that if, on any installment date, one-fourth of the cash value of the farm products produced on the farm for sale during the period since the due date of the previous installment is less than the installment due, the purchaser shall be permitted to pay on account on such installment an amount equal to but not less than one-fourth of the cash value of such farm products. The contract shall also provide that if, on any installment date, one-fourth of the cash value of the farm products, produced on the farm for sale during the period since the due date of the previous installment, is more than the installment due, the purchaser shall be permitted to pay in addition to such installment an amount not more than the amount by which one-fourth of the cash value of such farm products exceeds such installment, except that, in addition, an amount equal to the whole or part of accumulated deficiencies in payment by reason of payments permitted under the preceding sentence may be accepted.

"(c) The contract shall be in such form and contain such covenants as the Corporation shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the price agreed upon, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented.

"(d) The contract shall provide that the purchaser shall pay taxes and assessments on the farm to the proper taxing authorities, and insure and pay for insurance on the farm buildings.

"(e) No contract shall be assigned except with the consent of the Corporation.

"(f) Upon satisfaction of the purchaser's obligation under the contract, he shall be entitled to the farm free of any estate or property interest retained by the Corporation to secure the satisfaction of the obligation.

"(g) For the purposes of this section, in computing the amount paid on the agreed purchase price (1) there shall be included amounts paid (pursuant to sec. 6 (d)) under a lease, diminished by such amounts as the Corporation finds are necessary to reimburse it for any insurance paid on the farm and for amounts paid under section 13 with respect to the farm, but (2) there shall be excluded such portions of amounts paid under a contract to purchase as the Corporation determines are properly allocable to interest paid under the contract.

"REPURCHASE BY CORPORATION

"SEC. 9. At any time during which a contract, under section 8, is in effect, the Corporation, with the consent of the purchaser and upon recommendation of the county committee, shall purchase the interest of the purchaser in the farm at a price which shall not exceed an amount equal to the current appraised value of the farm diminished by the amount unpaid under the contract.

"RELIEF LABOR COSTS

"SEC. 10. In any case in which improvements on any property acquired under this title have been made by relief labor, the price at which such property is sold to a purchaser shall include only so much of the cost of such labor as is not in excess of the amount which the county committee determines would be the cost of similar labor other than relief labor.

"DEATH OF PURCHASER

"SEC. 11. If the purchaser under a contract made under section 8 dies, the law of the State or Territory in which the farm is situated shall govern in determining the person who shall exercise the rights and be subject to the liabilities under the contract and such person shall be entitled to exercise the same rights and shall be subject to the same liabilities as the purchaser. The Corporation, at the request and with the consent of the person so determined, is authorized to terminate the contract and purchase the interest of such person at a price which shall not exceed an amount equal to the current appraised value of the farm diminished by the amount unpaid under the contract. The contract shall contain such provisions as the Corporation shall prescribe to carry out this section.

"STATE JURISDICTION

"SEC. 12. The acquisition by the Corporation of any real property to carry out the provisions of this title shall not deprive any State, Territory, or political subdivision of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property, or over persons resident thereon, or impair the civil or political rights, under the law of the State, Territory, or political subdivision, of such persons.

"TAXATION

"SEC. 13. Except in the case of property with respect to which a contract under section 8 is in effect, the property acquired, held, or leased by the Corporation under this title shall be exempt from taxation by any State, Territory, or political subdivision, but the Corporation shall pay, in respect of such property (except property used solely for administrative purposes), to the State, Territory, or political subdivision concerned, an amount which the Corporation determines to be fair and reasonable but not more than the property taxes (including special and other assessments) which would be payable to such State, Territory, or political subdivision if such property were owned by a private individual. The payment of such amount shall be made on the day upon which such taxes would otherwise be due and payable.

"EQUITABLE DIVISION OF FUNDS

"SEC. 14. In the expenditure of funds for the purchase of land under this title, the amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be expended equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of the prevalence of farm tenancy and farm population, as determined by the Corporation, on the basis of the latest available United States census.

"TITLE II—REHABILITATION LOANS

"BORROWERS AND TERMS

"SECTION 21. (a) The Corporation shall have power to make loans to eligible individuals or cooperatives only upon the recommendation of the county committee for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, seed, feed, fertilizer, and for other farm needs, and for the refinancing of indebtedness, and for family subsistence.

"(b) Loans made under this section shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of 1½ percent per annum, and shall have maturities not in excess of 5 years. Such loans shall be payable in such installments as the Corporation may provide in the loan agreement. All loans made under this title shall be secured by a chattel mortgage, a lien on crops, and an assignment of proceeds from the sale of agricultural products, or by any one or more of the foregoing.

other farm personal property, for sale to any individual or cooperative leasing, any farm from the Corporation pursuant to the provisions of section 6 of this act. Every contract for the sale of such property shall provide for the payment therefor within such time (not to exceed 5 years) and in such installments as the Corporation may prescribe. Any unpaid balance of the agreed purchase price shall bear interest at such rate, not in excess of 1½ percent per annum, as may be agreed upon, and shall be secured by a chattel mortgage, a lien on crops, and an assignment of proceeds from the sale of agricultural products, or by any one or more of the foregoing.

"SEC. 23. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the balances of funds available to the Secretary of Agriculture for resettlement which are unimpended on June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated and are hereby transferred to the Corporation to carry out the prpvisions of this act.

"(b) In addition to other sums made available by this act, or otherwise, the President is authorized to allot to the Corporation out of appropriations hereafter made for relief or work relief for any fiscal year, such sums as he determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 21 and 22 and to enable the Corporation to carry out such other forms of rehabilitation of individuals eligible under this title to receive loans as may be authorized by law and designated in the Executive order directing the allotment.

"TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I have offered as a substitute the provisions of a bill which I introduced some time ago on this same subject. The bill is known as H. R. 6836. It deals with the same subject matter dealt with in the bill now before the Committee. Sometime ago it will be recalled the President's special committee on farm tenancy submitted a report to this House. I believe the bill I have introduced more clearly follows out the recommendations of the President's special committee than does any bill that was introduced in this session of Congress. The bill differs in some respect, but the substance is the same as the recommendations of the President's committee. In making that statement I want to make it clear that no member of the President's special committee had anything to do with the drafting of this bill. I was assisted by many men and women in this country who are vitally interested in farm tenancy and the sharecropper problem. Men and women who have been devoting their lives to this problem have assisted me in drafting this bill. The bill first provides for the creation of a corporation, the capital stock of which shall be subscribed by the Treasury of the United States, in the amount of $500,000,000. That sounds like a lot of money, and more than is carried in this bill before the Committee, but I call attention to the fact that the $500,000,000 will care not only for the purchase of land, to put tenants on, but will also provide for rehabilitation so that it will not be necessary to allocate money out of the relief fund for this purpose, and my bill does not contain provisions requiring the President to do so.

The $500,000,000 will be turned over to this corporation the first fiscal year with authorization for subsequent fiscal years in such amount as the Congress shall from year to year authoize for that purpose. The bill goes upon the theory that the Federal Government through this corporation should purchase suitable farm lands, and after having purchased those farm lands, sell the land back to sharecroppers and farm tenants on reasonable terms over a long amortization period, with interest at the rate of 1½ percent. I emphasize the fact that the $500,000,000 authorized this first fiscal year is in no sense of the word a gift to the sharecroppers or to farm tenants, but is merely a loan with interest rates at 1½ percent. The money is loaned for the purpose of rehabilitating this vast number of people in this country who are now working on farms, living on farms, but who are not farm owners, and have no ownership rights in the land they till. The bill provides for the creation of a board which shall be the executive board of this corporation, consisting of five members, and two at least of the five members shall at the time of their appointment be sharecroppers or farm tenants, not the majority, but only two of them. Many men and women have developed in these farm-tenant organizations real ability and they can be of help to serve on this board. All names must be certified by the President to the Senate, and there must be a recommendation that these men have been in the past very sympathetic to the needs of farm tenants and sharecroppers in this country.

Then in each county there is an election. Each county in the entire United States holds an election, at which all working farmers, whether he be the owner of his farm, a sharecropper, or a tenant, shall have one vote. That county convention shall elect a county committee of five members—a president, a secretary-treasurer, a vice president, and two additional members. Three of those five must actually be farm tenants or sharecroppers, and they are elected by the working farmers of that particular county. Those men have no authority to loan the money, but before the corporation can buy any land in a community for its purposes it must first have the approval of the county committee. That will prevent this corporation from buying lands that are valueless, buying farms upon which these sharecroppers or farmers cannot rehabilitate themselves. In addition to that the county committee will have authority to recommend to the corporation the names of those people who are suitable, those people who would make good farmers, who would probably be able to carry this load and finally become farm owners. If the county committee submits a name to a corporation, that does not mean that the corporation must of necessity loan money to those farmers, but they cannot loan it to any farmer, any tenant, or sharecropper who has not been first approved by this local committee that is democratically elected. That would insure not control by the county committees of sharecroppers or tenants but it would insure sympathetic administration of the act. It will also provide insurance against waste, because the people in the various localities who are vitally interested in the success of the bill will have a great deal of responsibility to guide the destinies of the program and to assist the corporation.

Now, the first step is a lease. The corporation will lease this land to the tenant or sharecropper for a period not to exceed 5 years, with the provision that an extension of an additional 5 years can be granted if the corporation sees fit. That is a lease. It is a trying-out period. If the sharecropper or tenant shows during that period of time that he is competent, that there is likelihood of his carrying out his obligations, then he can become a purchaser, provided the corporation sees fit to sell the land to him. The county committee has no jurisdiction there. That insures the operation of the program from a Federal standpoint. They can sell the land to a farmer on a 40-year contract, bearing 1½-percent interest. They amortize the loan over this 40-year period, including principal payments and interest, and a definite amount is fixed that the purchaser shall pay to the corporation. His contract provides for a definite payment in amounts of money, with the provision, however, that in no year shall the farmer be obliged to pay more than 25 percent of the cash value of the crop produced for sale upon his farm. So that if there should be, on account of a drought or pestilence or for some other reason, a very small crop, in no one year will the purchaser be obliged to pay more than 25 percent of the crop produced for sale upon that farm.

You may say, "Well, how do you know you are going to finally pay off this indebtedness?" The bill provides that, if with these variable payments of not to exceed 25 percent, at the end of 40 years the purchaser has not paid all of the money he is obliged to pay under his contract, an additional period of time will be given, during which period he shall pay the average amount that he paid to this corporation during the preceding 10 years. So that it may extend this period of 40 years for a few years more.

This bill will give security to the farmers who are put upon these lands for at least 45 or 50 years. During that period of time they can acquire ownership. During that period of time they cannot be dispossessed if they comply with the terms of their contract. During that time they will have an opportunity to rehabilitate themselves and their families.

I submit to you that with the growing tenancy problem in this country, with the increase of tenancy year after year, such as we have seen in the last 25 or 50 years, there is need for tackling this problem, not in a peanut way, not in a drop-in-the-bucket way, but in the same proportion as the problem exists in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of saving time I am not going to press the point of order. I will withdraw the point of order, although I think it is very doubtful. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. NELSON] desires recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the point of order reserved.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. No one who knows my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], who has just offered this amendment, doubts his sincerity or his real heart interest in this cause. The question, as I see it, is not what we want but what we can reasonably hope to get.

The bill now being considered, and which represents months of study on the part of our committee, is not a perfect measure. It is, though, much better than was the original. It is no "cure-all." Frankly, it represents but an experiment, an experiment which all hope may prove successful but about which many entertain justifiable doubts. In the beginning it can, at best, benefit but few. But it is worth a trial.

In the first place, tenancy is not a disease but only evidence of the disorder which we are now attacking, in the hope that, after due time, we shall discover a cure. The trouble, to discontinue the figure of speech, is that farming has not been profitable. In agriculture, as in any other business—and farming is a business—prosperity is properly measured by the purchasing power of the profit. If there is no profit, there can be no permanent purchasing power. Make the farmer secure. Give him the cost of production and a little more for what he has to sell, year after year, and the farm-tenancy problem will largely be a thing of the past.

As a member of the subcommittee which gave long study to this bill, I fully appreciate the difficulties encountered in framing a measure that will apply with equal fairness and desirability to all sections of the country. However, as this measure, carrying an appropriation representing only a fractional part of the $500,000,000 suggested by my colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], can justly be looked upon only as an experiment, the committee felt proper that all sections of our country should be included in the trial. So in section 4 equitable distribution of loans is provided, the requirement being that the amounts available be distributed among the States and Territories on the basis of farm population and prevalence of tenancy. This is fair to all the States.

As I have said, conditions differ, as do terms. In Missouri, for instance, I do not recall that in any talk between farmers, of whom I am one, I have ever heard another referred to as a "tenant." We speak of "renters", never of "tenants" or "sharecroppers."

From some of the discussions heard on this bill, one might gain the impression that the tenant, or, let us say, renter, is a man of less than ordinary ability, incapable of succeeding without a great deal of guidance and direction. This may be true of some, but it in no sense applies to the rank and file of renters in Missouri. Some of the best farmers I have ever known have been renters. In this class are many who a few years ago were prosperous farm owners, but who because of economic conditions, especially during the latter part of the Hoover administration, and through no fault of their own, lost their farms. Afforded an opportunity to again acquire these same farms or others, they will demonstrate their fitness to farm and ability to succeed under ordinary conditions. Men of this type deserve the utmost consideration in any farm-tenancy bill. It is not enough to put a man on a farm. It is more to keep him there. Generally speaking, one experienced farmer who knows and loves the land is worth a dozen inexperienced men who might be taken out of the big cities and placed on farms.

I do not agree with the suggestion that where a tenant of the right type is selected it will be necessary to provide greater safeguards than are contained in paragraph 4 of section 3 of the bill, "to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented." If the right farmer is selected by the county committee of three farmers, as provided in the bill, and after this selection has been approved by the final authorities there is little doubt but that he will succeed without having to follow a book of instructions or heeding expert advice from Washington or elsewhere. The big job is to select the right man with whom to begin. I have every confidence that this can be done. Speaking for the 15 counties of the Second Missouri Congressional District, which I have the honor to represent, I know that in each county there is at least one farmer—of course, there are many—who will make a go of a farm to be secured under the loan provision of this bill.

A word about the county committee to pass upon the farm and the tenant. This committee is to be made up of practical farmers, who will know the man and the land. For their services, members will receive $3 per day but for not more than 5 days in any 1 month.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. MILLS. How will these three men on the county boards be appointed?

Mr. NELSON. My understanding is that they will be appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I think, in fairness to the amendment, that the gentleman should direct his remarks in opposition to it. I think the amendment is very important. Thus far, during the first 5 minutes, the gentleman's only opposition to the amendment is on the ground that it is not what we want but what we can get. I think, in all fairness to this amendment, the gentleman should direct his remarks to it. I think it is of sufficient importance to warrant that objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. NELSON. My thought is: Is it possible to go as far as my colleague, for whom I have very great respect, wishes us to go? If not, then we must make a choice between his plan and the plan which comes to us from the committee.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NELSON. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman said that under the committee's plan one tenant farmer in each county would be taken care of. Does not the gentleman think that, if we are going to take care of this problem, we should try to care for at least 50 in each county, as my bill provides?

Mr. NELSON. I would be very glad if it were possible to take care of more farmers.

Mr. BOILEAU. I know the gentleman feels that way; on the other hand, it seems to me that we should go ahead and solve this problem now.

Mr. NELSON. I look upon this as in the nature of an experiment.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not doubt that.

Mr. NELSON. Insofar as possible, the so-called expert—and sometimes I feel that I should like to see this much-abused word stricken from the dictionary—is not given the place of greatest prominence in this measure, but more thought has been given to experience and to the practical. I would add that the excessive use of the word "expert" is unjust to the comparatively few who are really entitled to be so designated.

As to title 1 of the bill, dealing with the farm-tenant problem, I agree that changes would have been desirable, but as it is, there is much to commend. For instance, variable payments are provided for, so that in "fat" years, years of good crops, extra payment may be made to take care of "lean" years, years of poor yields, which might follow. This provision, if generally adopted in the matter of farm loans, would prevent many foreclosures. Unlike the original bill, this one merely makes provision for loans directly to farmers. It does not put the Government deeper into the land-buying business. There can be no "Tugwelltowns" or any such set-ups.

Another thing that I like about this bill, and it was at my suggestion that it was so drafted, is that there are no authorizations for vast and ever-increasing sums which, like Tennyson's babbling brook, would go on forever. Continuing appropriations, which begin at gimlet size and grow to auger appropriations, are largely responsible for Government waste and extravagance. If the experiment under the present plan, which limits authorizations to 3 years, is successful, a future Congress will, of course, make provision for continuing the program. If the plan proves a failure, many millions of dollars may be saved because no further continuing authorizations have been written in. This is good business and common sense.

Getting back to the importance of selecting the right farmer, and in the beginning there will be less than an average of one for each of the 3,000 counties in the United States, my thought is that he should be given a deed to the land as soon as he is able to make proper payment and when he has demonstrated his ability to succeed. To my way of thinking, it is unfair to the purchaser to require him to live for many years on the land before he can actually own it and really call it his home. To postpone delivery of the deed for 20 or 30 years would mean merely that the tenant had exchanged landlords, substituting Uncle Sam for the one who had previously owned the acres.

Just here, I digress in the brief time remaining to refer to title 2 of the bill, dealing with rehabilitation loans, and which provision is, in some respects, most important. Loans under this section are to bear interest not in excess of 3 percent and may run for 5 years. The object is to provide credit for farm owners and others, so that they may be able to carry on and not lose their homes. I am especially pleased with the debt-adjustment feature of this section, as carried in section 22, where machinery is set up for voluntary adjustment of indebtedness between farm debtors and their creditors. Title 3 deals entirely with the retirement of submarginal lands. To carry out provisions as shown in section 34, an appropriation of not to exceed $10,000,000 is authorized for the first fiscal year and not to exceed $20,000,000 for each of the two fiscal years thereafter.

America needs home owners. If this bill does not have this as its objective, there is no reason why it should be approved. Yesterday our beloved Speaker, in one of the most impressive addresses ever heard in the House, quoted, in matchless manner, lines from The Man with the Hoe, by Edwin Markham. This bill, I hope, once it has been approved by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President, the greatest home saver in the history of America, will in time mean that the man with a "hoe" will become the man with a "home." [Applause.]

Mr. STARNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

One of the most perplexing national problems which challenges our interest and our best thought in an effort to bring about a proper solution is the farm-tenant situation. Too often in the past has the mistaken idea been advanced that farm tenancy is a local or regional problem. It is as national in its scope as is our rural life. We cannot expect an economy of abundance in a land wherein approximately one-half of our people devoted to the field of agriculture are tenants.

The land is our greatest natural resource. From its various elements we contrive shelter, food, and raiment. Practically every necessity and every luxury of life come from the land or the proper utilization of the land. It follows, therefore, the system of landholding and land use is of vital interest. Farm operators are designated as owners or landlords and tenants. For census purposes ownership is classed as "full" or "part", a full owner being one who owns all the lands he operates, while a part owner owns a part and rents a part. Other operators are classed as managers or tenants. The 1935 farm census reveals the number of farm operators was 6,812,350; of this number 3,210,224 were full owners, 688,867 part owners, 48,104 managers, and 2,865,155 were tenants. The percentage of tenants was 42.1, which is a slight decrease from the percentage in 1930. This marks the first decline in the proportion of all farms operated by tenants.

In 1880, 25.6 percent of farm operators were tenants. This percentage grew to 42.4 percent in 1930. While it is true the highest percentage of farm tenancy is in the Cotton Belt and the Corn Belt, yet the growth and spread of farm tenancy has reached every farm section in America. The 1935 farm census reveals the fact that farm tenancy actually decreased in the 16 States known as the South from 55.5 percent in 1930 to 53.5 percent in 1935. Outside of the South, farm tenancy increased in the other 32 States from 28.5 percent in 1930 to 30.6 percent in 1935.

There are a number of reasons why farm tenancy has increased during the past 50 years. These reasons are social and economic and their effect is not only social and economic but also political and spiritual.

The following are some of the causes of the growth of farm tenancy: (1) The gregarious instinct of mankind; (2) the better social and educational advantages offered by urban life; (3) the loss of income and purchasing power of the farmer; (4) the growth of industry; and (5) the advantage of varied employment in cities.

Man by nature and instinct is gregarious. He seldom likes solitude. He wants and seeks association with his peers. This natural instinct has led to a movement from the farm to the city. As landowners have moved from their farms they have left their farms to tenants for cultivation. Thus we have a beginning and an example of absentee landlords. In modern days we also have another form of absentee landowning in the large farms owned and operated by corporations. Then, too, certain lending agencies have acquired extensive landholdings by reason of mortgage foreclosures and possession of the mortgaged lands.

Educational opportunities in our urban centers were better than those afforded by rural schools. Longer school terms, modern and well-equipped buildings, a better trained and paid teaching corps—all had their appeal for the training of childhood. The theater, the movie, the literary guilds, parks, and recreational facilities offered entertainment and an outlet for social activities which held an alluring promise of happiness to the adult and youth alike.

The American farmer is not getting his share of the national income. There is a direct connection in the continued loss of the farmer's income and the rise in farm tenancy. In 1870, 53 percent of the gainfully employed in the Nation were in the field of agriculture and received 26.5 percent of the national income. In 1880 the percentage of farm tenancy was 25.6. In 1932 the percentage of farm income to the national income had fallen to an all-time low of 7.2, while in 1930 the percentage of farm tenancy had risen to 42.4.

The loss of farm income has been tragic in its consequences. The cash income of many tenant farmers is below $100 per year. This economic fact explains why so many farmers and farm tenants have deserted the field for the factory. To these people wages of $7.50 to $12.50 per week offered an irresistible appeal. This fact is illuminating in ascertaining why wages in the South are lower than in other sections of the country.

The growth of industry in the United States since the War between the States has been phenomenal. Naturally there has been a continual increase in the proportion of the income of industry as related to the national income. Attractive wages, community life, social advantages and opportunity for advancement caused a migration from the farm to the city in ever-increasing numbers until the recent debacle in business and industry changed the trend of the tide for the first time in more than 50 years.

The endless variety of our business and industrial life offered an infinite variety of employment to our people. Sons and daughters of the wealthier farmers after completing their educational training were immediately employed by business and industrial concerns of the urban centers and contributed their talents of energy and capacity for service to business and industry. Thus farm life was impoverished of vision and leadership as well as of its best labor.

After studying the causes of farm tenancy let us briefly review some of the effects of the system.

ECONOMIC

Some of the economic evils attendant upon farm tenancy are (1) loss of purchasing power by reason of reduction of cash income; (2) the decrease in land values, with a consequent loss to the individual farmers and loss of revenue to local and State governments; (3) a loss or drainage of soil fertility caused by improper farm methods and devoting the land to crops with immediate cash market values.

We have already discussed the loss of farm income as a cause of increase in farm tenancy. The loss of income means a decrease of purchasing power. This decrease of purchasing power of more than 31,000,000 people has a serious effect upon every walk of life and every phase of business and industry. It means fewer and fewer luxuries and a scantier supply of necessities for this vast portion of our population. Bank deposits shrink, market values fall, and fewer wheels of industry turn in direct response to the decrease of income and purchasing power of the farmer.

Farm lands and buildings in the United States decreased in value between April 1930 and January 1, 1935, by approximately one-third, or from $47,879,638,358 to $32,858,844,012. Proportionately the decline in the average value of lands and buildings per farm was from $8,200 to $5,217 for owners, and from $6,148 to $3,823 for tenants. These facts prove conclusively that operating farms by tenants decreases the value of the land.

Even more startling in its full consequences is the loss of revenue by ad-valorem taxation, with the increase of farm tenancy and the decrease of value of buildings and land. In a short period of 5 years we see a loss in taxable property of approximately $15,000,000,000. We are unable to comprehend what this means in terms of loss of revenue for local and State support for schools, roads, and other necessary governmental functions in our complex social system.

Small wonder, too, that public-health work has been curtailed and that many States are finding it difficult to raise revenues to carry their share of the social-security program.

The system of tenancy prevailing has drained our soil of its fertility. It is significant that in the South and Midwest, where the percentage of tenancy is highest, most of the land is devoted to crops of cotton, tobacco, corn, and wheat. All these crops are annuals and have a cash market value at all times. They are also soil-depleting crops. Lands devoted to these crops continuously require fertilization in order to supply necessary plant-food elements. The tenant operates a farm under an annual renting system and therefore is unable to build up the soil by a well-regulated diversified farm program. His economic status will not permit; then, too, he would not reap any benefit because he does not fit in a long-range program for soil building and conservation. Work of this character indulged in by him would inure to the benefit of the landowner or to some tenant who would follow him.

The land is the capital of the owner. Constant depletion of soil fertility by use of a one-crop system and soil erosion means a constant depletion of the capital stock of the owner, and when continued leads from independence to a mortgage and from a mortgage to bankruptcy and the loss of his land. The owner then must join the ever-increasing tribe of the landless farmer—and economic paralysis grows apace.

SOCIAL LIFE

The farm tenant being essentially nomadic is unable to beautify and adorn his temporary home. It is not his. He is unable to contribute in a material manner to the support of schools and churches. He is, in fact, a man without a home and under the influences of a grinding, wasting system he becomes an economic fatalist. What is of striking import to me is that he loses his individuality. To me this means a loss of identity. Individuality distinguishes one from the mass. It carries the spark of virility and courage which, set aflame by vision, develops leadership and progress.

We have witnessed the designs of radical leaders in attempting to inflame the tenants. Their economic condition stifles social and mental development and makes fertile soil for communism and socialism. They are too easily led by shallow philosophies of government and religion.

A SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM

Many of our tenant farmers are excellent citizens who desire to become home owners but do not have the financial means to acquire and develop land. These men are of excellent character. With proper assistance they could become home owners and self-sustaining units in society. With their status fixed we could then concentrate upon building the sharecropper and poorer tenant up to the level where he would be eligible for assistance. In this way we can restore the land to the people and leaven the loaf of rural life.

I introduced the first farm tenant bill in the House in March 1935. It was identical with and a companion bill with the original Bankhead farm-tenant bill. This bill sought to establish a fund to provide financial assistance for tenant farmers of good character and who were good credit risks to enable them to buy and operate a farm, thereby changing their status from tenants to landholders. The bill now introduced differs somewhat from the bill which I introduced but in my judgment is an excellent bill and will carry out the purposes sought to be attained by legislation of this type.

In the solution of this problem it is absolutely necessary for some agency to finance the farmers—first, in the purchase of land; second, in building and operating expenses until a return is made on the investment; and, third, adequate time and low interest rates to refund the obligations.

We ask for the wholehearted cooperation of every American citizen in bringing to this great group of deserving people an opportunity to improve their condition. In so doing those of us who have pioneered and have carried it forward feel that our efforts will not have been in vain if we can see a bold and stalwart farming class erected as a barrier to the advancement of communism and atheism. Communism cannot grow in a land of social security and economic justice. A home, a well-filled granary, and a contented people are a part and parcel of a democracy. This great landholding group will become the core of a social and economic order which will not be subject to rapid changes which sweep old and established principles in the discard. It will hold fast to the truth and provide the anchor to which we must adhere in preserving the individuality of the citizen, restoring family life, creating confidence and new faith in a democracy and the opportunity for a better future.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have a high regard for my distinguished colleague, and I want to pay him a tribute by saying he is helpful in connection with many matters in the committee. He is always an earnest and hard worker. But if the Members of the House will stop and think for a moment, they will realize how impractical it is at this time to talk about making an appropriation of $500,000,000 for the current fiscal year for this particular purpose.

I am going to urge that the House vote down the amendment for that reason. May I say further there have been one or two requests for extension of time to speak. There are a great many amendments to be offered, some by members of the committee and some by those who are not members of the committee, and I would like to have each Member given the opportunity to explain his particular amendment. I hope the Members will not ask for an extension of the speaking periods for that reason. Extensive speaking now will necessitate later in the afternoon cutting down time, and the opportunity will not then be given for legitimate amendments to be offered in regular order. This is a measure of great importance in which many Members are interested; in fact, I suspect practically all Members are interested in it. I ask for a vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this particular amendment conclude in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I offer this pro-forma amendment for the purpose of calling to the attention of the House the fact that whenever it is proposed that we do in a constructive and an adequate way something which will really help the farmer, the leaders of the House, those in control of the machinery of the House, immediately become inoculated with economy poisoning.

In this amendment we are asking that $500,000,000 of Government credit be extended to deserving debtor farmers, who every one of us admits are in need and ought to be helped. There are any number of precedents which have been established by the Congress since we have been in this emergency that justify the adoption of the amendment now under consideration which would afford some measure of constructive relief. Take the R. F. C., for example, which was an experiment in every sense of the word. In 1931 we never batted an eye before making $2,000,000,000 of credit available to industry. What happened? The credit was extended to the small banks and the large industries of this country, with the result that when there was a loss it was because the large industries fell down. General Dawes and his bank in Chicago pilfered the Treasury to the extent of more than $50,000,000. However, in spite of the racketeering on the part of Mr. Dawes and his bank and other exploiting of the R. F. C., they have shown a profit, because every cent of the money lent to the small banks and small industrialists has been repaid. As a matter of fact, when an extension of the R. F. C. was asked at this session of Congress, it was shown the R. F. C. had made a profit of $141,000,000.

We are merely asking that you extend credit to people who need it, who will pay the money back, and who are not racketeers. Not one argument has been made against this amendment. One gentleman had his time extended, but he avoided presenting an argument against the amendment. He argued around the amendment and lauded the bill. The chairman of the committee did not argue against the amendment. He cannot attack the amendment in any way, shape, or form. The gentleman says it is not possible to accept the amendment at this time, but he does not give any substantial reason.

Some of my people are tenant farmers and need help. I think they should get help. Here we have a bill which is so inadequate it is a joke, and every one of you know it is entirely inadequate. You talk about helping one farmer in each county. You cannot buy a farm in any one of my counties for $3,500 unless it is a sand patch. You know you are not helping the people when you pass this type of legislation. We are asking you to give us something adequate. Why do you not do it? You do not do it because you say it cannot be done now. Just exactly why can it not be done now? I should like to have someone tell us. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 17, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it has been customary during the last few years for the House to give consideration, at least once in each session, to some legislation presumed to be of assistance to agriculture. The net result, however, is usually a testimonial meeting. On these occasions, it seems to be the proper thing for each Member representing an agricultural district to arise in his place, declare allegiance to, promise assistance to, and express sympathy for that forgotten one-third of our population commonly designated as the farmer. I ofttimes wonder if the good farmer and his wife do not become disgusted with these promises and excuses.

This bill is to be known as the Farm Security Act of 1937. The title is promising enough, but the bill itself in no way lives up to its name. Let us just take the bill apart in a general way and see what it is all about. The proposed law is divided into three titles or parts.

TITLE I—FARM TENANCY

Title I is presumed to be a provision for financing tenants in the purchase of farm homes.

Title II is presumed to provide rehabilitation loans for temporary aid to tenants and distressed landowners.

Title III is presumed to provide for the purchase of submarginal or other lands not suited to cultivation, and the utilizing of such land for various purposes.

The farm-tenancy provision of the bill is the one most talked about in the debate and the one intended to appeal most to the farmer. In short, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make loans in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii to persons eligible under the act to enable them to acquire farms. Only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain or who recently obtained the major portion of their income from farming operations are eligible. Subject to certain limitations, the Secretary of Agriculture is the judge of the eligibility.

The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to appoint in each county in which activities are carried on a county committee composed of three farmers residing in the county. Each committeeman shall be allowed $3 per day while engaged in the performance of his duties, not to exceed 5 days a month. In addition, he shall be allowed "such amounts as the Secretary of Agriculture may prescribe for necessary traveling and subsistence expenses." The Secretary shall also prescribe rules governing the procedure of the committee, furnish forms and equipment necessary for the performance of their duties, and provide for the compensation of "such clerical assistance as he deems may be required by the committee."

Now, any farm tenant desiring to get help under this act must make application to this county committee. The committee will examine and appraise the farm the tenant desires to purchase, and, if in the judgment of the committee, the tenant meets the requirements of the act, it shall so certify to the Secretary, including the recommendation of the committee as to the amount to be loaned to purchase the farm, and no loan shall be made by the Secretary unless approved by this committee.

Loans made under this act shall be in such amount "as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm"—that means 100 percent of the purchase price—and shall be secured by first mortgage given by the purchaser to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The mortgage shall provide for the repayment of the loan in full within 30 years, with interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum, and the payments shall be made "in installments in accordance with amortization schedules prescribed by the Secretary." The purchaser must, in addition to interest and payment on principal, pay all taxes when due, maintain proper insurance on the buildings at all times, and also keep the buildings and fences in good repair.

In making loans under this title, the—> Amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy, as determined by the Secretary.

To carry out the provisions of this title, the bill authorizes the appropriation of $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938; $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939; and $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

The first important observation I desire to make with reference to this so-called farm-tenancy title is that the Secretary of Agriculture in the final analysis makes all determinations. Of course, the Secretary himself cannot do all these things. Therefore some bureaucrat in the Department of Agriculture will in reality be the boss.

The 1935 census of agriculture shows that there are approximately 2,865,000 tenant farmers in the United States. These are farmers who rent all of the land they operate. They represent more than 42 percent of all the farms in the country, and it is interesting to note in which section of the country farm tenancy is most prevalent. In Mississippi 69.8 percent of the farmers are tenants, in Georgia 65.6 percent are tenants, in Louisiana 63.7 percent are tenants, in South Carolina 62.2 percent are tenants, in Oklahoma 61.2 percent are tenants, and in Arkansas 60 percent are tenants. In Maine 6.9 percent are tenants. In Michigan there are 196,517 farmers, the total number of tenants being 37,334, making 19 percent of the farmers tenants.

I again call attention to the wording of the bill requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to "distribute equitably among the States on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy." I do not want to view this matter in a sectional sense at all; but if the Secretary of Agriculture follows the mandate of the law, what relief will a State like Michigan, having 19 percent of farm tenancy, get when compared with the southern bloc of States, ranging in percentage up as high as 69.8 percent?

There are 3,200 counties in the United States, and if the Secretary were to disregard the law and furnish the assistance on the basis of counties alone he could loan money to one tenant farmer in each county to buy a $3,000 farm during the first year of operation under this proposed law, because only $10,000,000 is made available for overhead, loans and all. The next year there will be $25,000,000 to spend. That would mean two and one-half farms to each county. The third year there is $50,000,000 to spend, and that would mean five farms to a county, at a valuation of $3,000 each. Yet they call this a general farm relief bill.

The Second Congressional District of Michigan, which I have the honor to represent, is composed of four agricultural counties, and according to the 1935 census the number of farms, the number of farm tenants, and the percentage of tenancy in each county are as follows:

County	Number of farms	Number of tenants	Percent of tenancy
Jackson	3,579	718	20.1
Lenawee	4,661	1,322	28.4
Washtenaw	3,506	752	21.4
Monroe	4,315	1,043	24.2

The term "farm tenants" used in the national sense is most comprehensive. It is just as varied as is the term "farm." In California, when we talk about farmers, we possibly mean a grower of nuts or fruit, cultivating 10 acres. In Kansas we possible have in mind a wheat farmer, growing 1,000 or more acres of wheat. In Iowa it may be a corn farmer, with 200 or 300 acres of corn, while in one of the cotton States we may have in mind several hundred acres operated by sharecroppers, so-called. In my own section of Michigan we have in mind the operators of from 40 to 160 acres of diversified farming.

Those advocating this bill concede that the figures above given, as to the possible number of farm tenants to be helped during the first 3 years of the law, are as indicated. They cannot tell me, neither can they tell the intelligent farmers of my locality, that any genuine help is to be given where, at the most, one farmer in any one county in my district can borrow enough money to buy a $3,000 farm. In the first place, the farms that the right type of tenant would want to purchase will cost more than $3,000. All this is not denied, but it is insisted that the farmers have been promised something; therefore, a step in this direction should be taken. Some have even suggested that this is a laboratory experiment, and is for the purpose of testing the soundness of the plan. Well, I believe in laboratories and in experiments, but the farmer has been made the guinea pig so long that he will recognize an unsound experiment before the operation begins. We are told that this is beginning in a small way, but that at the expiration of the 3-year period we can then take care of all of the tenant farmers in the country. It will take $14,000,000,000, if this plan is followed, to buy a farm for all the tenant farmers in the country. This is unsound, it is impossible, and out of the question, if the Government is to issue its bonds to raise the money to take over the farm indebtedness of the Nation. The Frazier-Lemke bill was at least honest on its face. It contemplated the eventual printing of new money to purchase farms for farm tenants; but Mr. LEMKE, the author, recognized that it would not be sound to loan 100 percent on the value of the farm, and when his bill was before the Congress he offered an amendment making the amount 80 percent of the purchase price of the farm.

This bill contemplates loaning the farmer 100 percent. In other words, the purchaser will have no equity whatever in the farm. The Government will buy it, purchase the stock, the machinery, set the tenant up in business, and then tell him that he has a home, to go forward, and that the only person to whom he has to answer is the Secretary of Agriculture, but he must make sufficient profit off the farm each year to meet all the payments required in his mortgage. If the Government is to provide all of the tenant farmers and farm laborers with farms and homes, then it naturally follows that the same Government will be asked and required to do likewise for the city tenant, and, if carried to a logical conclusion, to the city laborer and all others who do not have homes as well. This philosophy might be applicable in Russia but it is not in keeping with American principles. The sad part of it is, however, that this legislation is not only a gesture but it is a cruel hoax on the tenant farmer who reads the newspaper headlines telling him that the Congress is providing him with a farm and a home. I am not familiar with the sharecropper and the tenant in some sections of the country, but in my own territory we have no higher class farmers than a large percentage of our farm tenants, and they cannot be fooled.

There can be no security in farm ownership unless farming on the family-sized farm is profitable. Behind the tenant question is the problem of price and income. The real essential to successful agriculture is to maintain a fair and stable price for the products of the farm. Without that price no farmer can long succeed. That price must be the actual cost of production plus a reasonable profit, and worthwhile farm legislation must recognize that truth. There is no disputing the fact that as a general proposition the farmer has been operating at a loss during the last few years. Eliminate the subsidies paid by the Government and he is operating at a loss today. Are these subsidies to continue permanently, and if so, in what form? This question must be answered and a definite policy for agriculture must be established before we attempt anything like title I of this bill.

Who is there among you who would advise his son to go in debt 100 percent in any line of industry and be required to make a living for his family, pay taxes, insurance, and annual payments on the principal indebtedness, when he knew that the industry in which he was placing him was running at a loss and that his son could not possibly succeed unless something was done to make the industry prosperous? No; you would not do this because you think too much of that son. If this reasoning is right, then we would do an unkindness to the tenant farmers of this country even if we provided all of them with sufficient loans to permit them to engage in a losing industry. We must strike at the fundamentals. The cause of the disease must be discovered and the remedy applied. When we have succeeded in that particular, then we can conscientiously endeavor to make profitable owners out of worthy tenants.

Practically every speech made in this debate has extolled the virtues of home ownership and deplored the fact that there are so many farm tenants in our land. It is true that there has been a great increase in farm tenancy over a period of many years down to 1933. There has been no increase since that date. During this period many farms have been refinanced and payments through the A. A. A. and other temporary agencies have checked the increase. Many tenant farmers who understand the agricultural situation realize that it is impossible to buy a farm and pay for it without more stabilization in the industry. Again I say that stabilization is the objective which we must seek rather than a make-believe like this proposition. This bill is not endorsed by any of the large farm organizations.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Not just now. I am sorry.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman from Nebraska has asked me to yield, but I do not want to yield for an observation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. This is just a question.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I have a short question.

Mr. MICHENER. In courtesy I must yield first to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. May I ask the gentleman if he has the same feeling against a subsidy to the farmer as he has against newspapers using the second-class mail who are receiving $75,000,000, against the ship subsidy, and against the air-mail subsidy?

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman's question is entirely irrelevant. We are discussing agriculture and farm relief and not the Post Office Department and ship subsidies and air mail. A discussion of the United States mails at this time is, however, very pertinent. I should like to have time to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the C. I. O. has interfered with delivery of the United States mail, and it would seem that the administration might take some action to compel the Post Office Department to perform the functions for which it was established.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. How about the subsidy?

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the gentleman will yield for a short question, would the gentleman mind telling the Committee what plan he would pursue?

Mr. MICHENER. I say frankly that, like the gentleman from North Carolina and all other students of the agricultural problem, I have found it impossible to determine upon a positive, specific plan. I do not know just what should be done, and no one else does. I would only do real things and not make-believe things, if I wanted to help the farmer.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I thought the gentleman had given some consideration to this subject. What plan would the gentleman bring in?

Mr. MICHENER. Well, the first thing I would do if I had my way would be to give the farmer the American market. I would cut out those parts of the Canadian and other reciprocal trade agreements which militate against the American farmer. I would pass a law making it possible for this country to grow its own sugar, and protect all agriculture against imports from Canada and other countries where the cost of production is much less. I would at least attempt to do something to put the entire industry on a paying basis. I would do nothing that would put the farmer further in the red. I would stop this unnecessary spending on the part of the Government and reduce the farmers' taxes. I would make it possible for him to get his money at the lowest possible rate of interest consistent with sound business. The more consideration I give, the more I am convinced that eventually some plan will be worked out along the line of the equalization fee or the export debenture. Honest benefits paid for honest service to the farmer cannot be criticized. The philosophy of scarcity and the doctrine that we should pay the farmer to prevent Nature from producing is all wrong, and I am opposed to it. Consequently I do not want to give any more discretion to the present Secretary of Agriculture than necessary, because we all understand that the Secretary is an exponent of this philosophy of producing less and having more.

TITLE II—REHABILITATION LOANS

In short, this title authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make loans up to 100 percent of their cash value for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, family subsistence, and so forth, to those qualified under title I to purchase farms. The interest is 3 percent, payable in 5 years, and is secured by chattel mortgage covering the things purchased.

It is unsound and unreasonable for the United States Government to loan these groups vast sums of money on livestock and crops when the borrower has no equity whatever in the property. The Government already has loan agencies to care for this group of farmers who must have assistance. I want to call attention, however, to the provision of subsection (b) of this title, which authorizes the President to allot out of appropriations made for relief such sums as he may determine to be necessary to carry out the provisions of the title and "to enable the Secretary to carry out such other forms of rehabilitation of individuals eligible under this title to receive loans as may be authorized by law and designated in the Executive order directing the allotment." I am opposed to giving the Executive any additional power. If the Congress appropriates for relief, that money should be used for relief, and the President should not have the money to spend in such places and at such times as he may think advisable to serve his purposes, be they political or otherwise.

TITLE III—RETIREMENT OF SUBMARGINAL LANDS

In this title the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to develop a program of land conservation and land utilization, including the retirement of lands which are submarginal or not suitable for cultivation. This purpose is laudable, and I have much sympathy with any law making it possible to retire some of this land on which farmers never can even make a living. We are doing the farmer a better service by getting him off of this land than loaning him money to live on it or to buy more of it.

The powers granted to the Secretary go too far, however. In reality the Secretary is authorized to do about anything he sees fit to reach the objectives. For instance, he is authorized "to sell, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of, with or without consideration, any property so acquired under such terms and conditions as he deems will best accomplish the purposes of the title." These are broad powers, and I do not like to give them to any department without more specific limitations. The Secretary is even given authority to "disseminate information concerning these activities." Now we have had considerable experience during the last 4 years with these information bureaus; and, believe me, they can spend the people's money and propagandize the country in behalf of any projects undertaken by the Secretary.

I am bitterly opposed to granting a bureaucrat the right to make rules and regulations having the force and effect of laws, where a serious penalty is attached, when there is no notice given to the public other than the Executive order setting up the rule. In this title the Secretary of Agriculture can make such rules and regulations and "any violation of such rules and regulations shall be punished by a fine of not more than $500 or 1 year in the penitentiary, or both." We had enough of these rules and regulations under the recent N. R. A. and Potato Control Act, both of which were held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. I do not want to pass any law making it possible for any Secretary of Agriculture to write some rule or regulation in Washington for the violation of which one of my farmer constituents might be sent to the penitentiary, unless that rule is embodied in a law found in our statute books.

TITLE IV

This title provides the machinery for carrying out titles I, II, and III. In the first place, it sets up another bureau within the Department of Agriculture, to be known as the Farm Security Administration. Here, again, the Secretary is given authority to employ such persons and appoint such agents as are necessary, in his judgment, to carry out the terms of the law. As is usual with these new agencies, the Secretary may make political appointments, and "without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations." He is also given the right to fix the compensation of these officers and employees. I believe thoroughly in the civil service, and if we are going to set up agencies of this kind, let us remove them as far as possible from all political patronage.

I think this title gives authority to the Secretary to do anything he may desire and create almost unlimited expense in connection with his duties. A new provision, however, is listed among many other things he may do, and that is he may "purchase, operate, and maintain at the seat of government and elsewhere motor-propelled passenger-carrying and other vehicles" for the use of the swarm of investigators and agents that will be put to work if this law becomes effective. For my part, I have felt that these agents could get about the country from place to place often enough by using the railroads and other methods of transportation, but here the taxpayers' money may be used to purchase flying machines in addition to motorcars, and all this in the interest of the farmer.

The Resettlement Administration expires on June 30, 1937, and the understanding is that many of the Resettlement officials will be given new jobs under this act. Now, from a business standpoint, many Resettlement projects have been a stench in the nostrils of the sound-thinking public. Witness the project at Beltsville as an example, where homes costing from ten to sixteen thousand dollars have been erected to rent to laborers and persons with low incomes, and all this out of the taxpayers' money. The Alaskan colony is another example of Tugwellian dreams. It is true that Professor Tugwell, the head of Resettlement, is no longer connected with the Government, but his trainees, those who operated with him and who are still carrying on his policies, are the people, we are told, who will be largely charged with the administration of this new set-up.

While I believe thoroughly in legislation making it possible to return submarginal land to the Government rather than continue contributing annually to the support of the people who are trying to eke out an existence on that land, at the same time I want to eliminate a lot of the half-baked theories of this new school of social uplifters which has cost our people so much money during the last few years.

CONCLUSION

We are told by members of the Agriculture Committee that the committee devoted 11 weeks to consideration of farm tenancy. The House will pass this bill and with very few of its Members knowing anything about the details of the proposal. The bill will then go to the Senate. The Senate will pass the Bankhead farm tenancy bill, and we will find the real legislation written in the conference committee. The Bankhead bill provides that the Government go into the land-purchasing business. The Government would buy tracts of land in tenant sections and resell farms to selected tenants. This bill would be a great help to those who find themselves in possession of large holdings of land of little value. I cannot see where it would be any help to the small farmer in my section of the country. This plan contemplates the supervision of tenants by a bureau in Washington. We have too much Washington regulation already, and any plan that makes the independent owners of small farms subject to the dictates of some theorist in Washington is just simply un-American. While we have had considerable experience along this line during the last 4 years, yet we are not converted. If the Bankhead bill is accepted by the House and becomes a law, there is no question in my mind but that the Federal Government will eventually own large sections of this tenant farm land. It will be impossible for the tenant to ever comply with the terms of the regulations, and he will in reality become a peasant as the term is accepted in foreign countries.

If 42 percent of the farmers of the country are tenants, and if this 42 percent is brought under the domination and control of a Washington bureau, then truly regimentation of agriculture has gone a long way. My farmers are opposed to regimentation. They want to own their own farms. They want to regulate their own families. They want to work out their own problems, and all they ask is a fair show and a square deal in comparison with all other industries.

This discussion is necessarily somewhat technical because I have attempted to explain just what the bill embraces. It is somewhat lengthy because I could not say to you these things in less time. For the reasons herein stated, I am unwilling to be a party to the enactment of this law. The $10,000,000 provided for the first year must be borrowed, and a large part of it will be wasted in overhead. As I said in the beginning, the farm question is not going to be solved until the farmer is assured of a parity price with other industries.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened during the last 2 days with a great deal of interest to the lamentations of the great on both sides of the aisle as they bemoaned the hopeless plight of the American farmer; and as their wails of woe have gone from this Hall I have been constrained to think of the conduct of the scribes and Pharisees.

It is startling to me to find that men who are supposed to have dedicated long years of their lives to the problem of the American farmer and who have witnessed during the last 20 years the continuing depressed condition of the American farmer are now bringing before the American people a piece of legislation which, at its most, can be considered nothing but a hypocritical pretense. [Applause.]

I have studied this measure to the best of my ability, and I refer in particular to title I. I do not find therein one single idea or thought or word which in any manner advocates or presents a policy which will lead the American farmers out of their present hopeless plight and place them again in a position of economic independence.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE] has just asked a very pertinent question, "What will you offer?" I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina and to this House that there is now pending before this body a measure which incorporates the very fundamental principles of Jeffersonian democracy and which offers a means and a pathway by which the 6,000,000 farm families of America and the 30,000,000 farm population will be granted an opportunity to get out of this wilderness of economic despair and be placed in a condition of economic independence.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the pending bill is a farce, and you know it is a farce. It offers no remedy for the diseased condition of agriculture. Why, the only thing it does for the few farmers who will receive the so-called benefits is to place them 100 percent in debt, and the very next day they are eligible to go into the bankruptcy courts of America.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman explain to the House the major features of his bill?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I may state to the gentleman I am sorry he has not been on the floor when I have explained it on at least two occasions, and in the 5 minutes now allotted to me I will not have an opportunity to explain it, but a complete explanation of the measure is available, and I hope before the day is over, if I can obtain recognition and get enough time, to give the membership the essence of the measure which is now before them; and if the gentleman has an open mind and is really interested in the welfare of the American farmer, I should like for him to listen to what I have to say on this measure during the remainder of the day. [Applause.]

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE I

POWER OF SECRETARY

SECTION 1. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to make loans in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii to persons eligible to receive the benefits of this title to enable such persons to acquire farms.

(b) Only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained, the major portion of their income from farming operations shall be eligible to receive the benefits of this title. In making available the benefits of this title the Secretary shall give preference to persons who are married, or who have dependent families, or, wherever practicable, to persons who are able to make an initial down payment, or who are owners of livestock and farm implements necessary successfully to carry on farming operations. No person shall be eligible who is not a citizen of the United States.

(c) No loan shall be made for the acquisition of any farm unless it is of such size as the Secretary determines to be sufficient to constitute an efficient farm-management unit and to enable a diligent farm family to carry on successful farming of a type which the Secretary deems can be successfully carried on in the locality in which the farm is situated.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAHON of Texas: On page 1, line 6, strike out "Power of Secretary" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Power of Farm Credit Administration."

On page 1, lines 7 and 8, strike out the following: "The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to as the 'Secretary')" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The Farm Credit Administration."

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer is an amendment which simply turns over the administration of this act to the Farm Credit Administration. The present bill places the administration of the act in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture, but the Secretary of Agriculture and the bureaus operating under him are not skilled in the business of lending money to farmers on farm land, and my amendment provides that we shall turn over this credit measure—and this is a credit bill—to the Farm Credit Administration. Indeed, it was said yesterday on the floor that Governor Myers, Administrator of the Farm Credit Administration, is the ablest administrator in any department of the Government; and I say to you frankly that this is the hardest credit problem before the Congress and before the American people, and it requires the ablest and most experienced hands available. We ought to lay down proper rules and regulations and turn over the administration of this act to the Farm Credit Administration.

That agency has already lent during the past 4 years to 3,000,000 American farmers more than $4,000,000,000. It has already lent on farm land about $3,000,000,000, and about $2,800,000,000 is now outstanding, and of the Federal land-bank loans about 87 percent are in good standing at this time.

Here we have an experienced agency. It is well oiled. It is operating in all of the 3,059 agricultural counties in this country. And in view of the difficulty of this credit problem I think we had better turn it over to this agency, because if we make a big blunder in the administration of this act and bring down the contempt of the American people upon this experiment, a great stumbling block may be placed in the way of a proper program for the tenant farmers of the country in the years to come. Therefore I hope that the members of the Committee will agree with me in turning over the money authorized to be appropriated in this bill to an organization that is already set up; to an organization that can begin work immediately after the passage of the bill, to the end that those loans which may be made can be made promptly and on a sound basis.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the gentleman given any thought to the practical problem the Farm Credit Administration will be up against, lending money to farmer A at 3 percent under the gentleman's proposal, as set forth in this bill and lending money to farmer B at 3½ or 4 percent?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I certainly have. The Farm Credit Administration is doing that today. The Land Bank Commissioner loans draw 5 percent and the land-bank loans 4 percent. Of course, we have had an emergency rate of 3½ percent for some time. I propose that no one should be eligible for one of these tenancy loans unless he is unable to secure a loan under the Federal land bank and the Land Bank Commissioner. As I said yesterday, a national farm-loan association of five directors and a secretary-treasurer is now operating in every agricultural county of the country. They know how to cooperate in a program such as we propose in this bill. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

The appropriation provided for in this bill is so small no very material accomplishment can be expected from the passage of this measure. Under amendments which I have proposed, if we handle this program through the Farm Credit Administration, we will be able to secure much more readily adequate money to finance it. Under the bill as drawn a direct appropriation from the Treasury is required.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to present some general facts and ideas on the subject of farm tenancy. We cannot appropriately forget the facts of the problem until we have achieved a solution.

We had no serious problem of farm tenancy until about 50 years ago. Beginning with 13 colonies, this Nation has expanded at intervals until now it embraces a vast empire with 1,903,337,600 acres. Formerly the farmer could secure land under the homestead laws of the United States for nothing. A farmer who became heavily indebted on one farm could surrender it to his creditors and go into new and fertile territory and homestead another farm. There was not very much in those days to provoke farm tenancy. Even when free land became scarce it was still possible for a farmer to buy much of the most fertile farm land in America for only a few cents or a few dollars an acre. The time of free land and good land that can be bought cheaply has passed and we have come into the evil days of pronounced and pernicious farm tenancy.

The record reads about like this: In 1880 only 25 percent of farmers were tenants; in 1900 the percentage had increased to 35 percent, and by 1935 the percentage had increased to 42 percent. Farm tenancy is greatest in the South and West and least in New England. In Massachusetts and Maine only about 6 percent of the farmers are tenants, while in Mississippi more than 70 percent of the farmers are tenants. These are the two extremes, but all the Southern and Western States present a bad situation in regard to this question. Mr. H. A. Turner, of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, states that, in 1930, 73 percent of all cotton farmers were tenant farmers.

My distinguished colleague [Mr. SOUTH] sometime ago pointed out the figures which are applicable to my own State of Texas. In 1880 only 30 percent of our farmers were tenants. By 1900 the number had increased to 49 percent, and in 1935, 57 percent of the farmers in Texas were tenants. In 1935, 286,000 farm families in Texas, representing about 1,400,000 people, were tenants.

The casual student of farm tenancy might say that since 42 percent of the farmers of America are tenants, it necessarily follows that 58 percent of all farmers are land owners. Unfortunately this is far from the truth. About 58 percent of the farmers do have legal title to their land, but only slightly more than one-half of these own their lands, free of mortgage. That reduces the percentage of actual farm owners in the United States to less than 30 percent. In other words, not one farmer out of three in the United States actually owns his farm. These figures represent the average and take into consideration the almost total lack of farm tenancy in some States. The figures indicate that in the South considerably less than one farmer out of every four actually owns his farm free of debt.

In 1930 the average farm mortgage was approximately $3,500. It is a well-known fact that many farmers who are so-called farm owners are worse off than tenants because they owe more on their land than the land is worth.

The real cause for so much farm tenancy is low and inadequate farm income. Our farm-tenancy problem will largely vanish when we have established a system which will give the farmer an adequate price for his labor and products.

Washington is a city of many monuments. It is being proposed that there be erected here a $3,000,000 monument to the memory of Thomas Jefferson. If we build any more after that, I think we ought to build one to the memory of the farm family who has traveled the rocky and perilous road from farm tenancy to farm ownership during the adverse conditions which have prevailed during the last 25 years. I am not talking about farmers who have inherited farm lands or who have bought and paid for farms out of an independent income.

I am talking about real dirt farmers who have gone on the land and paid for it out of the sweat of their brow. Such a monument would symbolize more acts of heroism, self-sacrifice, and unheralded courage on the part of thousands of fathers and mothers and their children than could be recorded in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during the next several sessions. Such a monument would symbolize the fact that in order to become farm owners and cease to be tenants thousands of farm families had followed a course of self-sacrifice which would read about like this:

No bathtub, no kitchen sink, no water even piped to the house, no rugs on the floor, no daily newspapers; younger children rarely having anything new, but being required to wear clothing which the older children had outgrown; a lot of heartaches because the children cannot dress as well as neighbors and wear prettier graduation dresses when the school closed in the month of May; a little cobbler's shop where the family could sole its shoes; on rainy days, no vacation, the time being devoted to working over the chicken house or doing a little wood hauling, fence building, or ditch digging; no radio; no automobile at all, or no new one—work all week from sun to sun, and often continuation of work on Saturday afternoon while the neighbor's children had gone to town or to the ball game—a very modest diet, sometimes not balanced and usually devoid of store-bought fruit; no haircuts at the barber shop, the father or mother or one of the sons doing the family haircutting; no doctor nor dentist in many cases when the services of doctors and dentists were absolutely necessary for the health of the family.

Such is a brief description of a few of the minor hardships on the road that many have followed and must follow if farm ownership is to be achieved under present conditions. The great Champ Clark, former Speaker of the House, once said that his life could be condensed into these words: "Fifty-odd years of unremitting toil." Unremitting toil and much good luck is the price of farm ownership under the present system. It is not a matter of unremitting toil and self-sacrifice for a year only; it is often prolonged for a score of years or more before the goal is attained. No one knows very much about farm tenancy who does not know by experience something about "the short and simple annals of the poor." Farm ownership has been in the grasp of many farm families only to be snatched away by serious illness, death, accident, drought, flood, storm, or any one of a score of other factors beyond the control of the farmer. Those who have no patience with the problems of the farmer and the farm tenant and denounce him for his position of economic insecurity are unfaithful to the Nation's welfare and grossly ignorant of conditions prevailing among 30,000,000 American farm people. But, referring to the monument to the memory of the unknown farmer, I am not in favor of appropriating the money for it until we have supplanted farm tenancy with wholesome farm ownership.

I think it is well to point out in discussing this subject that the solution of the problem of farm tenancy will be a step forward in the reduction of relief expenditures.

We have spent billions of dollars for relief in recent years, and there is a very definite relationship between relief and the collapse of agriculture, especially in the South and West. To do nothing about farm tenancy and to continue to appropriate billions of dollars for relief is to be inconsistent and uneconomic.

If much of that relief money had been spent in the South and West on a wise farm-ownership program, it would have accomplished greater good, and permanent good, in putting many farm families in a position to support themselves, who are now on relief. Much relief is of temporary value, but money wisely spent in the interest of farm ownership will bear good fruit for generations.

If more of the boys and girls of the future are born on farms owned by their fathers and mothers, they will have a better chance in the world than those who go from farm to farm, from year to year or at frequent intervals, but never finding a home.

We are spending about a billion dollars per year on our Army and Navy for purpose of national defense, but guns and ammunition are not the only elements to be considered in forming a policy of national defense. The morale—the spirit and solidarity of the people—is the more important thing. Before a nation can fight very successfully it must have something to fight on and something to fight for, and a citizenry of home owners and farm owners is the most necessary bulwark in national defense.

Many men love their own farm lands so much they have been known in hundreds of cases, in their misguided and intemperate zeal, to kill a neighbor over a boundary-line dispute. You will recall the story of Naboth, the Jezreelite who suffered himself to be stoned to death through the machinations of the wife of King Ahab of Samaria rather than give up a little farm which he owned and loved. Those who are interested in the reduction of relief expenditures and those who are interested in national defense cannot in good judgment withhold assistance in the attack on farm tenancy. We have begun the attack and those who love the institutions of this country will not give up until success is achieved.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I think everyone agrees, surely everyone who is familiar at all with agriculture, that the tenancy problem in this Nation is a big one at the present time. I think we all realize that probably the United States needs a new crop of landlords on the farms of this Nation as badly as anything else. I think I shall support this bill, but I am not supporting it, lulled into a feeling of security that the bill will accomplish any major good for the farm tenants of the country. The only reason I do support it is because I am in hopes that even though we spend $10,000,000 to do it, the experience derived from the expenditure of that money will teach the leadership of this Congress and teach this administration that this problem cannot be met in this way. I doubt that you could get Congress to appropriate enough money to adequately deal with the tenancy problem in this country on this basis. I think there is an adequate way, and it is a very simple one, a proven way, by which this can be handled. A few years ago we set up under the Congress what is known as the Federal Housing Administration. That Administration used private capital and the credit of the Government to build homes in this Nation. That Administration has had remarkable success. It is just as feasible to make landlords out of tenants under a plan similar to the Federal Housing Administration, using the Government's credit and private capital, as it was to carry on a home-building program under the Federal Housing Administration.

If this bill will do what one gentleman of the committee says it will do—buy a farm for one farmer in every county in the United States—and I presume it will, and if that purpose is accomplished 100 percent, what, then, have we done toward solving the tenant problem in this Nation? What would we have accomplished had we adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin a moment ago for $500,000,000? Under that you would have put 50 tenants on farms that they own in every county of the United States; but what then would you have accomplished? I shall support this bill for another reason, because I am happy to find that the Congress has finally become conscious of the fact that farm tenancy is a real problem in this Nation; but it is not going to help the situation except that it may teach the proponents of the plan the absolute unfeasibility of their plan, and then we might be able to enlist them, because of their experience of failure under this plan, to give their support to a plan that will adequately take care of the tenant problem in this Nation; and it can be done, and there is no need to break or bankrupt the Government in accomplishing it.

I come from an agricultural country and my district is one in which the tenancy situation is very bad. Statistics taken by the farm census of 1935 showed that between 80 and 90 percent of the farms were being operated by tenants. It further showed that of these tenants, more than half of them moved every year.

Think what this means. A move every other year by 80 to 90 percent of our farmers. They have no chance of success under such conditions. They cannot get acquainted with the soil they are attempting to till. They have no incentive to improve fences or buildings. Why should they cooperate to preserve the fertility by terracing or doing any of the other things that we are attempting to teach them under the Soil Conservation Service.

This bill cannot solve our problem in the Second District of Oklahoma in a hundred years. We must devise a program which will give more of our tenants a chance.

But I am glad that we are recognizing the problem and the necessity for a solution. We cannot walk until we have taken the first step.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words to support the amendment of my good friend from Texas [Mr. MAHON]. I rise to call attention to the statements made by my good friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], who said that this measure is unworkable because it is a subsidy to the farmers. That is remarkable. It is remarkable that a subsidy to the farmers will not work. I call attention to the fact that in 1916 we established what we called the Shipping Board. The Shipping Board granted to the merchant marine up to the time it went out of existence a subsidy of over $3,000,000,000, yet today we do not have any merchant marine. I wonder if the gentleman from Michigan has considered that?

Furthermore, the United States Government sold to the Dollar Steamship Co. on the Pacific coast, vessels at 10 and 20 cents on the dollar. They loaned them the money to buy those ships at that remarkably low price, and then loaned them money for 20 years' time at less than 1 percent interest. If that is not a subsidy I would like to know what it is.

Furthermore, we are subsidizing the newspapers and magazines of this country to the tune of $75,000,000 a year, and the Postal Department is footing the bill. We do that through low second-class mail rates. Your constituents and mine have to meet that subsidy.

Not only that, but we have subsidized the great business industries on the Atlantic coast and in the East, the great industrial centers, by a protective tariff; but the protective tariff does not work for the farmer unless he has nothing to sell. Then it works.

The great commoner, the statesman from Nebraska, William Jennings Bryan, often used to say, "Destroy our farms and grass will grow in the city streets." This is a measure that is of tremendous importance not only from an economic standpoint but from a sociological standpoint. If this country ever gets into trouble, your safest bet will be on those people who live on the farms, who have a knowledge of real values in life.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. I yield.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. The gentleman from Michigan may have indicated that this was a subsidy. It might be a subsidy for a large number of landowners at the present time who might like to sell their land to the Federal Government.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. It is not a subsidy to the man who buys. He pays it back, and that is something that the big businesses we have subsidized have never done. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was glad to hear the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas a few minutes ago regarding the fact that this measure, and I refer particularly to title I, is in reality a duplication of agencies which now exist in our Federal Government.

The Federal land bank was organized about 20 years ago for almost the identical purpose that this proposal is here made today, but here you are setting up an entirely new agency, with its headquarters in Washington, with thousands of employees throughout America. I understand there will be an effort made to put those employees under civil service, so as to be sure it is a permanent agency. And for what purpose? To proceed in the most expensive possible way, in my opinion, to deal with the farm problem of America. According to the most conservative figures that have yet been brought out on this floor, it will cost approximately $7,500 per farm family to get them into title ownership of a farm home. Are they in ownership? Why, that is an absurdity. They have theoretical title, but to carry this bill to its ultimate conclusion means that you will have an increased farm-mortgage indebtedness in America of approximately $20,000,000,000. Add this $20,000,000,000 to the approximately $8,000,000,000 present farm-mortgage indebtedness and you have a farm-mortgage indebtedness of $28,000,000,000. The interest alone, Mr. Chairman, will amount to approximately one-fifth of the present total gross cash income of the entire farm products of this country.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman intend to vote for this measure?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I wish to state to the gentleman that I do not know how this measure will finally be amended, but at present I am opposed to the measure. I believe that the members of this committee have brought here a measure which is a travesty and an insult to the intelligence of the 30,000,000 farm population of America.

Mr. COOLEY. Would the gentleman be kind enough to point out the particular section to which he so vigorously objects?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I have not heard one word from the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY] on this floor which in any manner showed that he was offering a measure which will place the farm families of America in a position of economic independence.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman understand that we are not talking now about the general farm program but about a specific measure for relief of farm tenants?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I am glad the gentleman has mentioned that fact, because in the report of the committee, of which the gentleman is a member, he himself admits that this bill cannot succeed unless there is passed other legislation in support of it, and I will read to the gentleman his own report.

Mr. COOLEY. That is the position, I think, all of the members of the committee entertain—that we must have additional legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I object to that. I have an amendment at the desk.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 11 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I insist that inasmuch as this is a measure of tremendous importance not only to the farm population but to the entire population of America, the Chairman should permit full opportunity to discuss the bill.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the committee, if time will be allowed for the consideration of the amendment introduced by the Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

Mr. JONES. Yes, the amendment is satisfactory to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is merely asking unanimous consent to limit debate on this amendment.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MILLS] for 3 minutes.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLS: Page 2, line 4, after the second word "who", strike out "recently" and insert the words "has ever."

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman and colleagues, I am very happy to rise at this time in support of farm-tenant legislation. Being a southern farmer, and my ancestry on both sides having been tillers of the soil for more than 100 years, I naturally have acquired a sympathetic interest in the farming industry of this country as a whole. Therefore, I am deeply gratified that this Government has come to the realization that the welfare of a citizenry must look for legislation that will help to cure the many evils that are now existing and growing in this great land of plenty.

Mr. Chairman, on page 2, in line 4, the committee has seen fit to use the word "recently." I ask that the committee strike out the word "recently" and insert in lieu thereof the two words "has ever."

The purpose of the amendment is to take care of those farmers who have moved into towns or cities but who wish to return to the farms.

First, I wish to furnish you with some specific facts as presently exist generally throughout the country on this subject. First, at present we have about 6,000,000 farms with millions of people making a livelihood from the soil out of 3,059 counties in this country, and of the total farmers, 2,800,000 are tenant farmers, with an increase of 40,000 each year. The appalling condition is an ever-increasing condition, in that 40 years ago only 1 in every 4 were farm tenants, whereas today more than 40 percent of the farm population are tenant farmers.

I readily agree that the appropriation of only $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1938, $25,000,000 in 1939, and $50,000,000 in 1940 is only a miniature set-up, to allow farm tenants to purchase farms, but I had rather for this Government to make a success, even though it is small in the beginning, than to make too large an appropriation and at the end prove that such an undertaking is a failure.

My friends, I hesitate on the floor of this House to paint an appalling picture as exists in certain sections of this great land, where there is too much to eat, too much to wear, and too much of everything to supply the demands, for people to go hungry or undernourished, poorly clad, and without shelter. Therefore we must come to the rescue of our unfortunate members of society and show them that Congress has an interest, that they all may enjoy some of the pleasures and happiness that God intended for them to enjoy. It is an unfair situation for a selected few in a democratic form of government to enjoy the advantages of life in a land of too much to eat and too much to wear and the unfortunate group to go hungry, begging for food, sleepy and no place to sleep, clothesless and no money to buy clothes. Therefore this legislation is pointing toward the greatest humanitarian move, the greatest act that I have seen this Congress begin to undertake in my short period of association, and I contend, if more of such legislation was adopted, the country as a whole would decline in looking upon this body as one that has more often shown discrimination in favor of a selected few. This type of legislation affords a greater possibility for the greater percentage of the masses becoming better independent citizens, enabling them to make a livelihood permanently. Further, this type of legislation is nothing new, as it was advocated by the early philosophers, also the Pilgrim and Puritan forefathers, as well as the Bible itself.

I have heard numbers of speeches on this floor and over the radio by Congressmen advocating pro and con various plans of legislation that will help solve the now existing conditions, but I believe passage of this bill will be going a long way toward a greater redistribution of wealth, in that it has a tendency to tax the more well-to-do and guarantee something to the smaller people.

I readily accept the sneers from some of the Members of this House when I say that this is pointing toward the ticket I was elected on—the share-our-wealth—although I desire at this time to give you to understand where the share-our-wealth meaning was first used, but not the words. I will read from the President's acceptance speech in Chicago, page 388 of the proceedings of the Democratic National Convention of 1932, and I am quoting from Mr. Roosevelt:

Throughout the Nation, men and women, forgotten in the political philosophy of the Government of the last years look to us here for guidance and for more equitable opportunity to share.

I want you to understand the idea of the share-our-wealth phrase was a phrase of Senator Huey P. Long, who is now deceased, but yet today even though he is deceased, those words ring in the hearts of every American citizen and they believe this Government, as originally founded, so well declared in the Declaration of Independence, is supposed to guarantee life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to all its citizens, and I contend that this body should adopt more of such legislation that will afford the masses an opportunity to make a livelihood; inasmuch as that is the great cry throughout the land in preference of relief.

Senator Huey P. Long in his share-the-wealth reply to General Johnson stated:

That 1 percent of Americans own 59 percent of America's wealth, while 4 percent own between 85 percent and 95 percent of the wealth.

Therefore, the cry began throughout the land that the demagogue Long is incorrect. Therefore, the New York Daily News of April 11, 1935, intimated and added that somebody ought to look into this question and get the true figures on America's wealth in order to refute Long. The News then assigned one of its most competent investigators, Lowell Limpus, to the job of digging up the figures, so Limpus came to Washington and worked for weeks here in the Library of Congress and elsewhere, to rout up the true figures, with which to deny Senator Long, and, therefore, the results of that research showed Senator Long had essentially the correct information, especially where the money power is lodged in this country.

I shall herewith set forth Mr. Limpus' findings:

More than 96 percent of the workers in the United States receive less than $2,000 a year, which is regarded as sufficient only for basic necessity.

According to the United States Federal Trade Commission in 1926, 1 percent of the people dying did not own as much as 59 percent of the wealth reported, and since that time the rich have been getting richer in proportion and the poor poorer, so stated Mr. Limpus' findings; therefore, my colleagues, this investigation by the New York Daily News shows specifically that Senator Huey P. Long had underestimated the wealth holders in America and that 1 percent owned a great deal more than 59 percent of all the property. After Mr. Limpus had discussed these facts it was decided, after some deliberation, to publish them, inasmuch as they were afraid by not publishing the uncovered truths it would be very harmful and cause a large increase of share-our-wealth believers throughout the land.

This big newspaper of the United States further stated that America has got to redistribute the wealth in the land one way or the other. Therefore, my colleagues, this is one of the safest ways, through farm tenancy and old-age pensions, that this wealth may be distributed, and I am proud this Congress is coming to the realization of the truth; and if we do not adopt the truth I am afraid eventually it will be too late.

My colleagues, in part, the language in section B, title I, reads as follows:

Only farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, who have recently obtained a livelihood from farming, shall be eligible to receive benefits from this title.

I believe the language should be changed and be sufficiently wide to allow people in towns who have not recently farmed the privilege to borrow money to buy farms, as we have thousands of families in towns who would be proud to move on a farm if ways and means could be provided for them to purchase a place. I am sure some of you will disagree by stating if too many are allowed to farm we will have an overproduction. No; we must go further and adopt the share-our-wealth way of dealing with farming by allowing the lands to lay idle every seventh year, as taught in the Bible, and Government guaranteeing to our farmers a price for their raw products equal basically to the manufacturing price. Thereby I contend buying power will be increased among the farming class and a greater demand for the farm commodities will exist. Further, as long as mass purchasing power stays down and continues to shrink, there will be an overproduction of bathtubs, cars, radios, and so forth, which we like to think are elements in the American standard of living.

There is not any overproduction in the United States of cotton, corn, wheat, rice, beans, or cattle, and have not been; there is an underproduction of those things. However, the farmers of Louisiana, Texas, Iowa, and all of the States are gradually being stamped out of existence; they are gradually having to resort to the W. P. A. rolls and various other relief agencies.

Is it because there is an overproduction? No. It is because the people do not have the money with which to buy the things they need and must consume if they are to live in a reasonable or respectable way. Farmers are not overproducing, yet those poor farmers are being told that.

My colleagues, after the New York Daily News in 1935 undertook to refute the statements of Senator Huey P. Long relative to concentration of wealth in the hands of a few and was unsuccessful, this Congress has done little toward curing that evil. Here are the multimillionaire families that found out the truth, yet this Congress and the preceding ones have undertaken very little, if anything, along this line other than this bill. It reminds me of the rich man who allowed Lazarus to stay outside the gate, with the dogs licking his sores, begging for the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table. When Lazarus died and the rich man died, and the rich man looked afar off and saw Abraham with Lazarus in his bosom, the rich man cried and said, "Father Abraham, send Lazarus that he may pour water and cool my tongue." Abraham said, "It cannot be done." The rich man said, "Then send Lazarus back to earth that he may tell my four brothers there of the torments with which I am afflicted that they may avoid this place." Abraham said, "There is not a bit of use. They have Moses and the prophets; they will not believe one who has risen from the dead and has come back to earth."

This Congress stands here today neglecting to accept so many great truths that, if adopted, would solve a great economic condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLS) there were—ayes 15, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the Delegate from Puerto Rico for 4 minutes.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IGLESIAS: On page 2, line 1, after the word "Hawaii", insert "and in Puerto Rico."

Mr. IGLESIAS. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has agreed to this amendment, and I request that it be voted on.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Puerto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON]. I share his regard for the Farm Credit Administration and its activity. I think that Governor Myers under the rules of his administration has done a wonderful work, but the principle underlying this bill removes it from the purview of his work. Several of us thought that perhaps it ought to go to that organization. Governor Myers came before our committee, making the statement that unless we wanted to change the whole set-up it would tend to injure very greatly the accomplishments of his administration. Under that administration he must sell the obligations of the Federal land banks in the open market, he must sell the obligations of the intermediate credit banks in financing the current credit of those organizations. Whether you believe in the system or not, that is the basis on which it is built. When he began, land-bank bonds were selling in the 80's and in many instances were not selling at all. They are now selling above par and the farmer is getting the lowest interest rates that have ever prevailed in the United States—the lowest rates that have ever prevailed on such a large scale anywhere in the history of the world. The system has been well administered. Questionable things have been kept out of it and only adequately secured credit has been accepted. Do you want to jeopardize that by taking a different type of credit that one who purchased bonds, one who purchased the obligations of the intermediate credit bank, might feel should not have been included? I do not believe you do.

This goes a little further than that. I hope the House will not accept the amendment because this bill follows the pattern that has been proved and tested in many other countries. It is a starting point. It is fair and I think we would do better if we started on a moderate scale.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. Is it not a fact that the bonds issued by the Farm Credit Administration are guaranteed by the Federal Government?

Mr. JONES. No. The bonds of the land banks are not guaranteed by the Government, either as to principal or interest; yet they are selling about par. If we tack this on, I do not believe that condition will continue. Governor Myers, whose administration we are complimenting, feels that it might materially injure the sale of those bonds.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

COUNTY COMMITTEES AND LOANS

SEC. 2. (a) The county committee established under section 42 shall—

(1) Receive applications of persons desiring to finance the acquisition of farms in the county by means of a loan from the Secretary under this title.

(2) Examine and appraise farms in the county with respect to which an application for a loan is made.

(b) If the committee finds that an applicant is eligible to receive the benefits of this title, that by reason of his character, ability, and experience he is likely successfully to carry out undertakings required of him under a loan which may be made under this title, and that the farm with respect to which the application is made is of such character that there is a reasonable likelihood that the making of a loan with respect thereto will carry out the purposes of this title, it shall so certify to the Secretary. The committee shall also certify to the Secretary the amount which the committee finds is the reasonable value of the farm.

(c) No certification under this section shall be made with respect to any farm in which any member of the committee has any property interest, direct or indirect.

(d) No loan shall be made to any person or with respect to any farm unless certification as required under this section has been made with respect to such person and such farm by the committee.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 3, line 16, after the word "committee", insert "or any person related to such Member within the third degree of consanguinity or affinity."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have consulted with as many members of the Committee on Agriculture as I could contact and they have all agreed this is a good amendment. Therefore, there is no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCLELLAN: Page 3, at the end of line 16, strike out the period, insert a comma and add thereto the following: "or in which they or either of them have had such interest within 1 year prior to the date of certification."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to agree to the amendment.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for accepting the amendment. Since the amendment is accepted, I should like, Mr. Chairman to address my remarks briefly to the merits of the bill. Yesterday in general debate the time was so limited that many of us who are anxious to see this legislation adopted did not have an opportunity to express our views; therefore, we must secure time under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is anyone in this House who has keener sympathy for or deeper interest in the class of people for whose benefit we are undertaking to legislate today than I have. I speak from personal experience and not as one who might have read of or who may have heard about the plight of the tenant farmers. I was reared the son of a tenant farmer and I know how hard the struggle is and how difficult it is for one in that class under present economic conditions to acquire a farm of his own. They have not the power to give themselves a start, and this bill is at least the adoption of a policy whereby the Federal Government recognizes the tenant farmer and offers some aid and assistance in his ambition to become a home owner.

Mr. Chairman, the committee is being criticized for not bringing in a better bill. Certainly this measure is not all that was hoped for. Everyone, perhaps, would like to see more money appropriated, more people benefited, and more people aided, but unfortunately we cannot do that at this time. Here is the important thing about this program. We are starting. Everybody agrees that this is a good policy. No one criticizes the policy of trying to help this class of people. As we start out I think it is important that we proceed cautiously in order to make this experiment a success, because, God pity the tenant farmers of America if this experiment fails. We must make it succeed, and the only way to make it succeed is to place it on as high a plane as possible and undertake to administer the law without financial loss to the Government.

If those charged with administering the provisions of this law will use precaution in selecting tenants most deserving and best suited to receive Government aid and proceed under a program of this kind, in a year or two, even with this meager start, the program will begin to bear fruit, and we will have gained some experience and will better understand how to develop and expand and extend this aid to larger numbers. When we have set up an organization to carry out the provisions of this act and have created the machinery to deal with this problem effectively we can then increase the appropriation and extend this aid to larger numbers of those worthy to receive it.

True, Mr. Chairman, we will never be able to lift all the share croppers and tenant farmers to a higher level and standard of living. There are those, of course, who would not take proper advantage of this opportunity if it were extended to them, but there are many who will and who will become the owners of homes and farms of their own and thus make better citizens by reason of this assistance and the program we are launching by the enactment of this legislation.

Tenant farming and sharecropping has practically doubled in my State within the past half century. We cannot close our eyes to this unhealthy condition in our agricultural industry. This trend must be checked, and the number steadily reduced. It is going to take time. It cannot be done at one session of Congress.

No doubt we will find it necessary to adopt many amendments to this legislation from time to time, but we have started and I want to join with many others in expressing thanks to the Committee on Agriculture for its work in reporting out this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and I do this for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

This part of the bill we are considering undertakes to establish certain limitations with reference to the conduct of this committee. In turning to the penal provision of the bill, I do not find anything, from a hurried examination, which makes the penal provisions of the bill applicable to the doing of things by this committee which it is intended by the provisions of the bill to prevent them from doing. There is a provision here with reference to what employees may do, and I refer to section 49.

Mr. JONES. Section 42, as we understand it, makes these county committees employees of the Federal Government and, therefore, they would be subject to the penalty provisions.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I direct the attention of the gentleman to the fact that section 49 is not a blanket provision which seeks to punish persons who do the things prohibited by the provisions of this bill, as I read this hurriedly.

The penal provision has to do with gifts, fees, and so forth, but not false certificates. I suggest to the chairman that before we conclude the bill this be given consideration.

Mr. JONES. I should like to have the help of the gentleman. If the gentleman has an amendment to suggest, I shall be pleased to consider it when we reach that point. I do not have time now to go into the question, but I thank the gentleman for calling my attention to it.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I shall be glad to look into the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McCLELLAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina a few minutes ago asked a very pertinent question in regard to whether or not I thought this measure was a piece of separate and independent legislation. It is very evident it is not. The committee in its report, which is now available, states on page 3 the following:

> The program here contemplated must be founded upon the principle that farming will be profitable enough to make the objectives of the bill realizable.

Above that it states:

> Neither the landlord nor the tenant has had sufficient income, and the landholder who hires farm laborers has not had enough income.

In addition to this, it is evident there is now in the making a measure which proposes to place in a strait jacket every farmer of America, just as this bill does. Under this proposed legislation, if it is enacted into law, the Secretary of Agriculture can actually prevent the farmer from hitching his mule to the wagon and taking his family to church on Sunday. The Secretary has absolute and complete control and domination over the farm family which is supposed to receive these so-called benefits, yet you say this is placing the American farm family in a condition of economic independence. The farm mortgages are what got us into our present trouble. The average farm mortgage in America today is only approximately $3,500, but here you are going to create a farm mortgage of approximately $7,500.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman oppose the granting of Federal aid to the most destitute people in America—those on the farms?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. No; but I do propose that instead of placing them in a condition not of tenancy but of serfdom and bondage to the so-called economic royalists that we place them in a condition of economic independence.

Mr. COOLEY. What plan does the gentleman have to offer?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I may say to the gentleman there is a plan now before Congress which, for approximately $1,500 per farm family, will completely restore the farm population of America to a condition of economic independence.

Mr. COOLEY. What is the plan?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. The plan is the bill, H. R. 6748. Has the gentleman read it?

Mr. COOLEY. No; I have not.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Has the gentleman read the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands, which has gone into this matter very extensively?

Mr. COOLEY. No; I have not.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Let me tell the gentleman what the condition is in North Carolina?

Mr. COOLEY. Whose bill is it?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. It is the bill of the gentleman from Georgia who is now speaking.

Mr. COOLEY. Did the gentleman from Georgia ask permission to appear before the House Committee on Agriculture to express or offer any constructive suggestions about the pending legislation?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. No, I did not; but the bill is now before the Committee on the Public Lands, of which the gentleman from Georgia is a member, where the bill rightfully belongs. This, my friend, is a national land-policy program, not one which would place the farmers of America in complete bondage forever. [Applause.]

Mr. COOLEY. Then, why does the gentleman blame the Committee on Agriculture for failure to act?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 8 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to talk a little out of order, with the permission of the Committee, while the Members cool off enough to do some sober thinking on the announcement I am going to make.

The subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations which is handling the Department of the Interior appropriation bill is meeting at 2 o'clock to consider the 134 amendments made to the Interior Department appropriation bill by the Senate. Anything which pertains to the Interior has some contact with soil conservation, and soil conservation has some contact with tenancy, so I am speaking on the subject.

The Senate committee made 134 amendments to the Interior Department appropriation bill. In only 5 of these amendments the amounts were decreased, a dozen of the amendments were provisional, but in over 100 of the 134 amendments the Senate committee recommended increased amounts and the Senate agreed to such increases. There is over a $13,000,000 increase on the face of it, not to say anything about the babies born which are going to cost hundreds of millions in time to come. One amendment inserted by the Senate gives birth to a baby which will cost $41,000,000 before it is matured. The committee is going to meet now, and the bill must be passed by tomorrow night. We spent 30 days in hearings, and the other body spent 10 hours last week considering the bill.

Here are the names of the six leading majority conferees on the part of the Senate: Senators HAYDEN, McKELLAR, THOMAS of Oklahoma, ADAMS, BANKHEAD, and O'MAHONEY. These administration leaders increased the amounts carried in the bill as it passed the House in 100 amendments out of the 134, and decreased the amounts in only 5 amendments. I could say something about what some of these things are, but I shall do so a little later. However, this is what these leaders who have just come from Jefferson Island have done under instructions to balance the Budget.

The Clerk read as follows:

TERMS OF LOANS

SEC. 3. (a) Loans made under this title shall be in such amount (not in excess of the amount certified by the county committee to be the value of the farm) as may be necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm and shall be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on the farm.

(b) The instruments under which the loan is made and security given therefor shall—

(1) Provide for the repayment of the loan within an agreed period of not more than 30 years from the making of the loan.

(2) Provide for the payment of interest on the unpaid balance of the loan at the rate of 3 percent per annum.

(3) Provide for the repayment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, in installments in accordance with amortization schedules prescribed by the Secretary.

(4) Be in such form and contain such covenants as the Secretary shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented.

(5) Provide that the borrower shall pay taxes and assessments on the farm to the proper taxing authorities, and insure and pay for insurance on farm buildings.

(6) Provide that upon the borrower's assigning, selling, or otherwise transferring the farm, or any interest therein, without the consent of the Secretary, or upon involuntary transfer or sale, the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable.

(c) No instrument provided for in this section shall prohibit the prepayment of any sum due under it.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: Page 5, line 3, insert:

"(7) Be in such form and contain such provisions, conditions, and limitations as may be necessary to assure that the borrower will conform to such farming practices and methods as the Secretary may prescribe, in order that, during the first 5 years the loan is in effect, the borrower's farming operations may be sufficiently profitable to enable him to carry out successfully the responsibilities of ownership and his undertakings under the loan agreement."

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I propose is in line with the report of the farm tenancy committee appointed by the President. You will find this provision on page 12 of their report.

The philosophy of the amendment is this: We are not solving the problem of turning a tenant into a successful owner-operator by merely lending the man 100 percent of the value of the farm he wants to buy. Sometimes we would be making him worse off than he was before. We provide in this bill for the lending of money to a great variety of people, tenants, sharecroppers, and people who recently got a major part of their living from farming, and we are lending 100 percent of the value of the farm. It is not everyone who can pay out on such a loan. These people, as I said yesterday, are of two kinds. They are either men who never owned farms or they are men who, having owned farms, have lost them. It is reasonable to suppose that these people, generally speaking, do not know everything about operating farms successfully. They may be just as able to plow, they may be just as able to do the manual work on the farm, but that is not all that is required to make a successful farmer-operator. Management and planning are essential to success.

In this amendment we propose that the Secretary of Agriculture, out of the experience accumulated in that Department, for which we appropriate millions of dollars, and out of the experience of the Extension Bureau and the State agricultural colleges, shall supply the beneficiaries of this bill for a period of 5 years with advice and supervision, so that they may have the best opportunity possible to succeed in the operation of their farms.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. Is it the gentleman's intention that this supervision shall be given only during the first 5 years?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. It seems to me the gentleman ought to change the form of his amendment so as to make that more specific, because it is not clear, the way I read the amendment, whether it is during the first 5 years or during the entire period.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman want to give him a life sentence?

Mr. HOPE. No; I want to limit it to 5 years, but I do not believe the amendment does that.

Mr. RANKIN. Why give him a 5-year sentence?

Mr. BIERMANN. I have no pride of authorship in the amendment. The wording is immaterial to me.

Mr. HOPE. The suggestion I would make would be that the gentleman's amendment should read that the borrower will conform to such farming practices and methods as the Secretary may prescribe during the first 5 years the loan is in effect. It seems to me the phrase "in order that" ought to come after, instead of before, the words "the first 5 years."

Mr. BIERMANN. I am perfectly willing to adopt that suggestion and, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be changed to conform with the language suggested by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. RANKIN. I object to that, Mr. Chairman. I am going to oppose the gentleman's amendment when the gentleman gets through; and if he is through now, I will rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. From the discussion of this bill it appears there will be about one of these farms for each county throughout the country.

Mr. BIERMANN. That would be true if they were divided evenly, but there is nothing in the bill that requires that.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Does the gentleman think it is wise at this time to establish a bureau to furnish an expert adviser for one farm in each county in this country? Does not the gentleman think we should wait until the plan is developed further?

Mr. BIERMANN. My amendment does not provide for that at all, and the bill does not provide for one beneficiary in each county. The bill simply provides for starting this plan slowly and carefully and sensibly with a $10,000,000 appropriation instead of going into it on a big scale, and my amendment provides that these men be given the advice and the help that is certainly necessary to the majority of them in order that they may have a Chinaman's chance of paying off the 100-percent loans on their farms.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Do you not think it will require an adviser for a number of counties?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Does not the bill provide that the money is to be distributed on the basis of population?

Mr. BIERMANN. Population and prevalence of farm tenancy per State, but not per county.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Why turn these farmers over to somebody else who could not make a living on the farm himself? The gentleman underestimates the intelligence of the average tenant farmer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa to amend the pending amendment?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I objected to that request, and I ask recognition in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina, a member of the committee, is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems we are in a right unique situation here. One Member of the House has just taken the position with reference to this bill that the House Committee on Agriculture has proposed a measure which will, in effect, put the American tenant farmer into a complete, governmental strait jacket. Now we have another gentleman, a very distinguished member of the committee, taking the position that the bill which we have reported places insufficient regulations around the person whom we are seeking to help. I believe if the Members of the House will look on page 4, section 4, they will see that the committee has reached what might be called a happy medium. Section 4 of the bill provides, among other things:

Be in such form and contain such covenants as the Secretary shall prescribe to secure the payment of the unpaid balance of the loan, together with interest thereon, to protect the security, and to assure that the farm will be maintained in repair, and waste and exhaustion of the farm prevented.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. Not now. The amendment proposed uses in place of the word "covenants" the words "provisions, conditions, and limitations." I believe that the language of the bill is sufficiently broad in its scope to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to require the tenant whom we are seeking to aid to use modern farm methods, and to comply with the soil-conservation program and to protect the soil fertility.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. Not at this point. With further reference to the suggestion that there should be some supervision, apparently my distinguished friend from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] overlooks the fact that in practically every agricultural county in the United States we have a county agent, and I suppose that most, if not all of them, are graduates of agricultural colleges. We have the extension service, which is rendering a fine service to the agricultural people of the Nation. Could it be wished that the Federal Government would add to this great list of governmental employees, and, as my distinguished friend from Missouri has suggested, employ another corps of governmental experts to go on a man's farm every day and direct the activities around his farm and around his household? I believe the Secretary in the deed of trust or mortgage which he will accept upon the granting of a loan, could place certain broad conditions laying down certain requirements with reference to the farm, and if that is done we will accomplish what we want to accomplish.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. Yes.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, if we are going to provide, in addition to credit, for the purpose of enabling the tenant farmer to acquire a farm and become a farm owner, certain restrictions with reference to eligibility, if we are going to carry on a school for farming, admitting those whom you are going to admit to credit, does not the gentleman believe that we should open the whole bill and let some of the city folk, who would like to own farms, come under the bill also?

Mr. COOLEY. I quite agree with the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it is my desire to make it possible for every farmer who wishes to do so to be able to own his home. But while we are attempting to cure the land-tenant situation by making landholders out of tenants we should also do something to reverse the policy that is now making tenants out of landowners by foreclosing mortgages on their homes and rendering it impossible for them to make a living on their own lands and pay their debts and taxes.

While it is said that this measure would only provide for purchasing land for one tenant a year in each county, on an average, it is the beginning of a policy which if properly carried out, may result in enabling large numbers of people to own homes who have never been able to do so before. I believe, however, that we should remove some of the restrictions contained in this measure so as to enable the purchaser to get full title to his land just as soon as he can pay it out and free himself from any kind of governmental supervision as early as possible.

For that reason I am opposing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN]. I fear he underestimates the intelligence of the average tenant farmer in this country. He certainly underestimates the intelligence of the white tenant farmers in the South. Those tenants, when they become landowners, do not need guardians to tell them what to do, when to sow and when to reap, or how to plow and hoe. It would be useless to send some Government agent who could not make a living farming on the best land in the South to interfere with these people and constantly harass them in their endeavors to earn a livelihood on this land. I do not believe you could send one man from the Department of Agriculture who could teach one of these farmers in my district how to raise cotton. I remember one time we had the members of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics before a committee here and someone asked them what kind of cotton bore red blooms and what kind bore white blooms. Not one of them could answer the question, although some of them pretended to be experienced in growing cotton. Any 10-year-old boy living in the cotton States could have told them that all cotton blooms are white the first day and red the next. How far do you think these men would get teaching southern farmers how to grow cotton? I doubt if one of them could go into the State of Iowa and teach those farmers how to raise corn, or into Kansas and teach them how to raise wheat. The trouble with these agricultural experts is that too many of them are overeducated and undertrained.

I feel that we are approaching this farm problem from the wrong angle. While, as I said, this measure will help as far as it goes, it certainly does not reach the farmers' trouble. We make a landowner of one tenant a year in each county, while large numbers of landowners are made tenants by having their farms sold under mortgage. This shows that there is something wrong with our economic policies—something that goes far deeper than we can hope to reach by passing legislation of this kind.

I will tell you what some of those troubles are. One of them is our taxing system. We hear a great deal about burdensome taxes here in the House. People with large incomes protest that their income taxes are too high. People who inherit enormous estates protest against paying an inheritance tax. Manufacturers of luxuries protest against high taxes on luxuries. But the highest taxes paid by anybody in America, according to his income, is that paid by the farmer who tries to own his home. He has to pay it whether he makes any income or not, or else lose his home—or both. If a man owns a farm worth, we will say, $5,000 and he owes $4,500 on it, he has to pay interest on the $4,500 and pay taxes, not on the $500 equity which he has in the farm, if it is an equity, but he has to pay taxes on the entire farm, valued at $5,000, even if his crops fail and his stock die of starvation, as has happened in some of the drought-stricken areas in the last few years.

That is the reason some tenants tell you frankly that they do not want to own land; that it is less expensive to rent a farm than it is to own one.

The farmer also pays the highest interest rate of anybody in the United States and invariably pays a bonus to get his loan through, and then has to hire someone to make him an abstract, or go through court to clear a title that has never been questioned. If we could get the interest rate to the farmer down to the very minimum and spread his payments out over a long term of years, and relieve him of these additional charges, it would do more to help people who now own farms to hold them than this bill will do, I fear, to help somebody else buy them back, after the owners have lost them. That would make home owning more desirable and cause the more enterprising tenants to strive to purchase homes.

Again, the farmer is taxed indirectly through the high protective tariff system, which has come down from former administrations and which we have not been able to entirely get rid of. A tariff is an indirect tax, a burden upon the producers on those materials for which they get nothing in return. The farmer has all this to pay. Hundreds of millions of dollars are thus wrung from the farmers of this country annually through this method of indirect taxation that levies a tribute upon everything he buys, from the swaddling clothes of infancy to the lining of his coffin.

The farmer is the victim of the manipulation of our monetary system. We call it an elastic system, because under it our monetary supply can be expanded or contracted at the will of the Federal Reserve Board. They respond to the requests or demands of private banking institutions, and therefore expand or contract the currency to meet the demands of great financial institutions without regard to its disastrous effect upon the Nation's unprotected farmers.

They are selling wheat and cotton today at practically the same price they sold it during the Taft administration, when conditions became so bad in the agricultural States that the farmers in the West revolted and drove that administration from power. Yet they are paying two or three times as much for manufactured articles now as they paid at that time.

What is the cause of this? It is the manipulation of our elastic currency. In 1913, the year that President Taft went out of office, there were approximately $34 per capita in money in circulation, or on the books of the Treasury. The Federal Reserve System was created, and they expanded that currency until by 1920 it had reached $53 per capita, with the result that wheat, cotton, corn, and other agricultural commodities rose to the highest levels they have reached since the Civil War. Then the Federal Reserve Board raised the rediscount rate, called its loans, contracted the currency, and drove commodity prices down to where they swept away the homes of thousands of farmers who were unable to pay the debts they had contracted while prices were high. They never can pay them on the present price levels.

They are now required to pay the taxes and other obligations that were made on those high prices of 20-cent cotton and $2 wheat with 11-cent cotton and $1 wheat. It cannot be done, and this bill will not reach the trouble.

If we would help the farmer to hold his home and help enterprising tenants to purchase homes, we should force a reexpansion of that currency, to raise farm prices high enough to make home owning safe and profitable. That would do more good than all the farm-tenancy laws this Congress could pass.

Another thing, our transportation system penalizes the farmer to an unconscionable degree. The average farmer, the average human being in an agricultural State, and especially in the small towns, and in the rural communities, pays the highest freight rates known on earth, and instead of helping to reduce those freight rates, Congress has recently gone on record for the so-called Pettengill bill that would pile those burdens higher. No wonder tenants are being made out of landowners in every State in the Union infinitely more rapidly than this proposed measure would make landowners out of tenants.

Again, we find the farmer is bled white by monopolies. It is a significant coincidence that where monopolies have grown and expanded the prosperity of the farmer has diminished and farm tenancy has increased. These vast monopolies raise the prices of everything the farmer has to buy and then turn around and fix the prices of the things the farmer has to sell below the cost of production.

Take the dairy farmers, for instance, and you will find that practically all the processors of dairy products are in some kind of combination that enables monopolies to control the price of milk as it leaves the farmers' hands, with the exception of the cooperative creameries and cooperative cheese plants and other farm cooperatives which the farmers control themselves.

Look at the cottonseed industry and see how it is controlled by a vast monopoly. Measured in bushels, the cottonseed crop of the South amounts to about two-thirds of the wheat crop of the entire United States. A bushel of cottonseed has more food value than a bushel of wheat, yet the processors of cottonseed products are controlled by great monopolies that fix the price of cottonseed far below their economic value, thus robbing the cotton farmers of millions of dollars every year, and making tenants out of landowners by the thousands, while we pass a bill here to make one landowner out of one tenant in each county each year.

Look at your wheat and corn farmers and see how they are plundered by the great monopolies that control the processing agencies of those commodities. A man in Kansas looks out of his window over a vast field of wheat, while he eats shredded wheat prepared in Chicago. A tomato grower in south Mississippi sits down to a meal and eats tomato catsup invariably put up in Pittsburgh, Pa., while a corn farmer in Nebraska or Iowa eats cornflakes processed in Battle Creek, Mich.; and all of them pay at least 10 times and often 100 times or 500 times as much for the processed product as they received when they sold the raw material.

These processing establishments are controlled by vast monopolies over which sprawl gigantic holding companies, all of which reach down into the farmer's pocket with one tentacle and take from him the pennies he should receive for the raw material, while with the other they reach into the homes of the ultimate consumers and exact their enormous tributes in overcharges for the finished products in order to maintain and fatten these gigantic monopolies and the influences that control them.

In addition to all that, the farmer pays the highest utility rates that can be imposed, limited only by the amount the traffic will bear, unprotected by his Government or his State. Telephone rates have become so high that the average farmer has long since abandoned the use of a telephone. Electric light and power rates have been so high that, as a rule, it is like paying rent on his farm if the farmer even secures enough electricity to furnish lights for his home, depriving him of the use of a sufficient amount of it to operate those appliances which make his income pleasant, profitable, and attractive. If we would electrify every farmhouse in America at the standard T. V. A. rates, it would do the farmers more good than any other one thing that has ever been done or attempted.

These are the farm problems with which we must deal. We cannot cure the trouble by inducing a few tenants to buy farms on credit when the farmers who own land are unable to hold it and make a living for themselves and their families.

We can cure this trouble, but it will take a major operation. This mild ointment will not cure the cancer; we must go deeper and reach the very root of the trouble.

This is the richest country in all the world. We have the richest lands, the finest soils, an abundant rainfall, a gentle climate, and the finest rural population to be found in all the world. Yet we find that in this twentieth century, this age of education and progress, when mankind has gained the greatest ascendency over the forces of nature ever known in all the ages—with all these advantages, we see our farmers driven from their farms by abnormal prices for what they must buy, depressed prices for what they sell, exorbitant taxes compared with their meager incomes, interest rates all out of proportion, indirect taxes on everything they purchase, and their very lives regulated by remote control.

We cannot cure this situation by inducing a few people to buy farms on credit, but we must go to the root of the trouble and take from the back of the farmer those burdens which selfish interests have placed upon him and give him the benefits made possible by our modern civilization, protect him from oppressive monopolies, and permit him to share in the use of our natural resources. Then the farmer will become prosperous and independent. We will then stop making tenants out of landowners by impoverishing the man who toils, but we will make it possible for the present landowners to retain their homes and for the enterprising tenants to acquire land of their own. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, we hear men talk very assuringly about giving economic security to the farmers who are in debt. But there is no economic security for the farmers in debt under existing conditions today.

We hear men holding out the hope to the farmers, laboring under mortgage debts, of independence as home owners, but there is and can be no such independence with the farmers in debt under existing conditions.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] has offered an amendment to hold the farmers in debt on their farms by preventing the farmers from selling their property and giving them wholesome counsel and advice. But there is no way under which, by giving advice, encouragement, or otherwise to hold farmers who are in debt on their farms.

There was a farmer in my district with only a debt of two-thirds on his farm. He disappeared one dark night when love and innocence sleeps and when found later in another State, explaining the cause of his secret departure, said he was afraid that he would be made to keep his farm.

To give the farmer economic security and independence as a home owner, we must go back to fundamentals. We must go back to first principles. We must go back to the source of the evil and remedy the cause of farm tenancy, the cause which drove the farmer from his farm.

First, we must go back to 1921–22, when, in the course of less than 18 months over 2,000,000 farmers lost their farms and either became tenants on their own land or were compelled to move and to live under strange landlords.

Then following this wholesale movement of farmers leaving their farms to become wandering farm tenants, hundreds of thousands of other farmers lost their farms annually until the army of tenancy had become a threatening menace to the peace and order of the country.

It was in 1924 that the loaning insurance companies, becoming landlords of their mortgaged farms, applied to the Agriculture Department to create a farm-manager bureau to educate men as farm managers to manage 20,000-acre farms or tracts with former farm landowners as their tenants.

Then, following this and between 1924 and 1929, farm conditions became relaxed and relieved and many existing mortgages were changed, not by payment but by renewal of the old debt. And following 1929 mortgages were again foreclosed and other millions of farmers were dispossessed as owners and became tenants on their own land.

These farmers became tenants not because the Government did not loan them money, nor because they could not meet and pay the amount of the mortgage they promised to pay, but because of the fall of values and the price level which compelled them to pay back to mortgagees with two, three, or four times the farm products they had promised and obligated themselves to pay.

The farm owners became tenants because under the farm values and prices their farms fell in value until the value of the farm home mortgaged to only one-half of its value was now less than the mortgage debt, or calling for two or three times the farm products and labor to pay.

Until farm values are made stable and unchanging it is folly to put farmers back on farms under mortgages equaling their full value and expect them to pay and become owners and regain so-called economic security and become independent home owners.

But restore farm values and the price level to their former and normal state and farm laborers will again save, buy themselves a farm of their own, and pay their mortgage debts and achieve economic security without Government or other aid.

I am supporting this bill, not in the hope of giving farmers economic security but to support the principle of farm relief and to hold the farmers on the land until Congress can recover the control of the public currency of the country and thereby stabilize values and prices.

The causes driving millions of farmers from their farms and country homes to become roving tenants must be first removed and overcome before we can restore farmers back upon the land and keep them there and rescue agriculture from the menace of tenancy.

But the evils of fluctuating money values, the evil of falling values and the price level, are not the only evils to be remedied to stop augmenting the army of farm tenants increasing now year by year and creating a greater menace than ever before.

Agricultural land in the United States is fast losing the fertility of the soil by erosion and water carrying the fertility from the land, until over 50,000,000 acres of land have become worthless for cultivation and have been deserted by the farmers to become tenants upon other land.

This is not a charge against farmers, nor against farmers as a class of people. It is only an oversight, overlooked by all, which could not have been seen in advance even by natural scientists and critical students in time to be warned against and remedied. And now the loss and waste have gone too far to be stopped except by Federal aid.

And even now, with the appalling loss and waste of the fertility of our rich farmland open to be observed by the world, the Nation is standing aghast, beholding the wasted and eroded fields, and is pausing to formulate a program for conservation and reclamation of once fertile land.

The farmers living upon these 50,000,000 acres have deserted the farm homes of their ancestors with hundreds of millions more acres doomed to go, with the coming of not to exceed 3 or 4 years, and the farm owners of these lands will be likewise forced to leave their homes to join the band of wandering farm tenants.

With these evil causes still operating to drive farmers from their land, declaring economic security for the farmers, independence for the farm home owners, and loaning them the full value of their farms with interest, upkeep, and taxes to pay will not solve the problem of farm tenancy.

And there are other causes contributing to farm tenancy which must be removed and overcome, and the farmers relieved from the burdens of which, before they can assume debt obligations equal to the whole value of their farms, and pay their way to economic recovery and independence.

One of these burdens bearing upon the farmer is the inequality of the prices he receives with the prices he is compelled to pay for his supplies and farm equipment, and materials for repairs and upkeep. He must have parity of prices for what he has to sell and buy.

It is folly to loan to a farmer the whole value of a farm and expect him to pay the debt and become an independent home owner when the same farmer could not pay the one-half mortgage on his farm and was compelled to suffer foreclosure under these same conditions.

To make this legislation a success in restoring farmers back on the farm they must first be given economic stability, must be safeguarded against fall of prices, must have Federal aid in reclaiming soil fertility, and must have equality of prices for what he has to sell and buy.

Without restoring normal farm values, without stabilizing farm prices under which to pay these farm debts, and without conserving the resources of eroding land and wasting soil fertility, loaning money to the farmers to buy a farm today will be only a vain gesture or maneuver, and farm tenancy will remain a growing evil tomorrow. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I understand there will be several amendments to this section. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa now close and that we have a vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment do now close. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did I understand the gentleman from Iowa had unanimous consent to amend his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That was objected to.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture inform us whether there is any possibility of amending the Federal Banking Act so as to permit these banks with huge reserves to lend money on land? This would somewhat meet the problem. The bankers could be protected by some method of insurance such as was used in the housing program. And may I say in this connection that the country banker, more than any other individual, is usually familiar with the ability to pay and the character of the average man in his community. If we could open this great source of idle funds in this country it would help the situation very much, it seems to me.

Mr. JONES. There are, of course, various ways in which the Banking Act might be amended, but I would rather not pass judgment on that as it is within the jurisdiction of another committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as so much debate has intervened since the amendment was reported, that the Clerk may again read the amendment for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Biermann amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: On page 4, line 9, after the word "of" where it appears the second time, strike out "3" and insert in lieu thereof "1½."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is self-explanatory. It provides for reduction in interest rates from 3 percent down to 1½ percent. Many Members, especially those from agricultural sections have in recent years made speech after speech upon the stump in which they said that they believed that interest rates were too high, that the farmer was being obliged to pay too much in the form of interest; and a good many Members have said that they would support the provisions of the Frazier-Lemke bill. One of the important provisions of the Frazier-Lemke bill was that interest rates should be 1½ percent. I appeal to you Members who have made such statements in the campaign to take this opportunity, which may be the only one afforded you during this session of Congress, to reduce the interest rates. At least give this help to those who will be benefited under the provisions of this bill.

Then, too, in a recent message delivered to the Congress, the President of the United States said that one-third of our people were ill-housed, ill-nourished, and ill-clothed. He made the statement that a large percentage of our people were underprivileged. Here today we are attempting, in a very feeble way, it is true, to give some relief to a large part of that underprivileged class. If you subscribe to the President's views in that respect, if you subscribe to the theory that a large percentage of our people need this assistance and for that reason are going to vote for this bill, it seems to me you should be consistent and should support an amendment that would reduce the interest rates down to 1½ percent.

One and a half percent is enough interest to be paid to the Government to insure that the operations conducted under the bill will not cost the Federal Treasury one red cent. The Federal Treasury can get this money for less than 1½ percent, and I submit to you that they should lend this money to the farmers at this rate. If, perchance, the cost of administration should be proportionately unduly high because of our effort to do a big job with a little bit of money; if, perchance, the administrative cost is excessive, do not tie this additional cost around the necks of the people you are going to help. I submit to you that if we adopt a proper plan for the relief of sharecroppers and farm tenants, if we can do the job charging not more than 1½-percent interest, again referring to the statement of the President of the United States, the time to do that job is now.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think it is very interesting to observe that the man who has a first mortgage on his farm pays 4 percent; a second mortgage, 5 percent. The pending bill provides 3 percent on loans made under it. Other branches of organized industry get as low as three-fourths of 1 percent and 1 percent per annum. This is supposed to be social insurance, social lending, social rates. What do we call rates of interest such as one-fourth of 1 percent, one-half of 1 percent, and 1 percent?

Mr. BOILEAU. I submit to the gentleman that the cost should be 1½ percent. This bill if properly administered, as I hope it will be, can be carried out so there will not be any loss to the Treasury at that rate. I do not believe there is any justification for saddling around the necks of these people, who are practically destitute, an interest rate of 3 percent.

Oh, it will be said that these are lower than he can get almost any other place. I submit that it is lower than the farmers can get, but it is not as low as many of the privileged groups in this country can get. I submit, furthermore, that if we are going to give any help to these people it must be by way of reducing the interest rate that has been eating up all of the profits of agriculture for so many years.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was delighted to hear the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi a few minutes ago that this bill does not touch the vital question that now affects the American farm population. In reply to questions asked me by other Members while I was speaking a few minutes ago, may I say that in reality from an economic standpoint, what this piece of legislation does to those who come under its influence and effect is to decrease rather than increase their cash net income.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Members of the House to a table that has been prepared from the census of 1930, which is the last complete farm census available, and I may say incidentally in that year the farm income only lacked about 4 percent of being upon a parity with the industrial income of this Nation. This census shows that during that year the average farm laborer who labored as a tenant had a monthly net cash income of $28 per month, while the average farm operator who owned his own farm and had a mortgage on it received an average net cash income of only $20 a month, or $8 less than the tenant.

In the State of North Carolina, from whence comes the gentleman who asked me questions previously, we find that the average net cash income of the tenants in 1930 was $11 per month, while the average net cash income of the owner-operator, whose land was mortgaged, was $7 per month, or $4 less than the tenant.

Mr. Chairman, we are not putting those farmers in a position of economic independence. We are simply pauperizing and putting them deeper into serfdom if this proposal is put into operation.

There has been mentioned during the debate on this proposal the great work that has been done in the nation of Denmark under a similar proposal. I may say to the membership that for over 30 years Denmark has been following a very similar, yea, an almost identical, program. I quote from a periodical that was prepared and issued by the United States Department of Agriculture:

Beginning in 1899, and at frequent intervals since that time, Denmark has passed laws providing for Government loans to individuals for the acquisition of land and construction of buildings. All the laws have permitted the loans to cover an unusually large part of the value of the property, usually up to 90 percent, and the interest rate has been consistently low.

What did they find after an exhaustive survey?—

One of the greatest draw-backs to profitable operation of farms in Denmark is the high price of land, caused principally by heavy encumbrances.

What did they find in their summary?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I find from the discussion of this bill that we must all be kinsfolk in America. Down in Oklahoma this is a most fertile field for oratory. I find that must be true all over this Union from remarks I have heard in the discussion of this bill.

Why is it, Mr. Chairman, that all of a sudden there is a flood of oratory in this House eulogizing the farmer? This Congress has been in existence for about 150 years and we have kept the farmer outside the pale during that time. Now he has become a kind of hero in Congress. I wonder if it is not due to the fact that we have just recently discovered that we are living in a land of sleeping giants who may suddenly awake and demand recognition of their rights before the Congress of the United States?

I live in a farming district, inhabited by the very pick of the men and women of America. These folks have been demanding recognition and we have not given it to them.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this bill, not because I believe it carries any worth-while recognition of the farmers, or gives them any real service, but because it makes a crack in the wall of exclusion that has held them out for these 150 years, in the hope that crack will grow larger and after a while something will be done of substantial worth to the farm class in America.

Let me tell you something further. You go up to Detroit and that manufacturing district and you have a citizenship that is torn asunder. You do not know whether that flag that floats there is in danger in the Detroit region or not. You go to the farmers of this Union, give them a new toehold, give them a place they may call home, and then protect them with something like cost of production and a decent farm program and you have an abiding faith for the flag of this Union and America will always be safe. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska: Page 3, line 23, after the word "excess", insert "of 90 percent."

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the serious consideration of the Members of the House. The amendment lost by a small vote in committee.

We are embarking on a new program that will involve this Government in the expenditure of millions, if not billions, of dollars. The question is, If we embark on this program, are we going on a reasonable basis, or on one that no one can defend as being sound from a lending standpoint?

Under the provisions of this bill it is proposed to loan 100 percent of the value of the farm. Bear in mind there are approximately 3,000 counties in the United States, and that at $5,000 per farm it would require $15,000,000 to finance just one tenant in each county. It would require about $14,000,000,000 to finance all the 2,860,000 tenant farmers in the United States. To finance 1 percent of them would require approximately $140,000,000.

Do you want to commit the United States Government to a program where it will lend 100 percent of the purchase price, or would you prefer a more sound program which will provide for lending only 90 percent of the purchase price thus requiring the tenant to put up a 10-percent down payment? Bear in mind you are not doing a tenant a favor when you load him down with 100-percent indebtedness. If the farm owners who today are farming with mortgages of only 50 and 75 percent of the value of their farms are having difficulty financing their farming operations, how do you expect a man to succeed with a 100-percent mortgage?

By the adoption of this amendment you will help protect the credit of the United States Government. The Federal Government has been looking after the distress needs of our people for the last few years, and it is now time for the people of the country to help look after distress needs of the Federal Government. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I shall be pleased to yield when I finish my statement.

The farm tenants and sharecroppers in this country will soon realize that, even with $50,000,000 a year appropriated for this purpose, less than 1 percent of them could be financed to purchase a farm. I fully realize that very little of this money will reach Nebraska. My objective is to prevent, as far as I can, the inauguration of unsound experiments by the Federal Government that may in the future lead to such vast appropriations as to impair the credit of the Federal Government.

The farmers in my State are not asking for this legislation. They are more interested in farm prices. If farming is profitable, the owners and tenants alike are prosperous. There are in Nebraska today many tenants who, if they wanted to, could buy on reasonable terms the farms they are operating. Most of them are wise in not purchasing until they are financially able to assume the risk and responsibilities of ownership.

By requiring only a 10-percent payment, no one could contend that the Government was not offering a most liberal provision. Without this provision, many tenants will be encouraged to assume the responsibilities of ownership who will not be able to pay their taxes and interest and eventually will lose their farms through foreclosure. Had they remained as tenants until they had accumulated sufficient funds, stock, and equipment, they perhaps would have made a success of the venture. Some would undoubtedly be much better off renting the land on a share basis where the owner shared in the loss from drought, hail, grasshoppers, and other hazards that are always a threat to the farmer in many sections of this country.

There is no one more interested in assisting the farmers of this country than I am. Forty-nine percent of the farmers in Nebraska are tenants, but I am glad to say that the tenants are getting along just as well as the owners. If we make farming profitable, there will be no tenant problem in Nebraska. The tenants who want to buy a farm will be able to make the 10-percent down payment and take advantage of the liberal terms provided in this measure.

Mr. O'CONNOR or Montana. Will the gentleman yield for just a question?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I yield, briefly, for a question.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is it not a fact the Federal land bank lends money on the basis of 75 percent of the valuation of the property?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. The gentleman is correct, if the Federal land-bank loan and commissioner loan is combined. The Federal land bank is now selling to tenants most of the farms they had to take over. They will, however, not sell unless they have a substantial down payment.

In my judgment it is a mistake to authorize any Federal agency to loan 100 percent of the purchase price of a farm. We have provided under title II for rehabilitation loans which are justified. The money put into the purchase of one farm would perhaps take care of 10 rehabilitation clients.

I submit that if you want this tenant program to succeed without criticism and to have the support of the country in years to come, you will vote for my amendment. You cannot justify authorizing a Federal agency to loan 100 percent of the purchase price, but you can justify your position in authorizing loans not to exceed 90 percent of the purchase price.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAHON of Texas to the amendment offered by Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska: After section 3, page 3, strike out "90 percent" and insert "95 percent."

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], for whose judgment I have high regard, I represent an agricultural district. I represent 25 of the best farm counties in Texas. I cannot express too strongly my interest in helpful farm legislation and a wise farm program. I am especially interested in a farm-home-ownership program to combat the growth of farm tenancy. I regret to report that 61 percent of the farmers of my district have as yet been unable, largely because of adverse circumstances and low prices for farm products, to become owners of the farms they cultivate. It goes without saying that I would not favor anything I thought would be injurious to the farmers of my district. Such an attitude would be unfair to the people I represent and politically unwise.

My amendment provides that no applicant for a loan under this act shall receive a loan on land in excess of 95 percent of the value of the land. In other words, the farmer would put up 5 percent of the value of the farm which he proposed to purchase. This would be $250 on a $5,000 farm. I cannot see anything wrong with this principle of a down payment on the farm to be bought. Our farmers know the difficulties involved in buying land. They want to start out on a sound basis. They are not looking for a semirelief contract. They want a fair chance to become home owners in their own right.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. Does not the gentleman recognize that this is an experiment?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I do.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman think, if it is an experiment, that we should undertake to put it on a sound financial basis rather than on an experimental basis?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. I think we ought to start out on the soundest basis we possibly can. If we want to invite disaster and pull the mountain down upon the tenant farmers of America, we are at liberty to do so, but if we want to start right in the beginning and build well the structure in which we are interested today, we will try to proceed cautiously and wisely in the beginning of the administration of this measure. If the tenant cannot pay $250 as a down payment, how is he going to pay interest at the rate of 3 percent, which will be $150 the next year, and the taxes on the land?

I do not want to see the tenant farmers in my district go into an undertaking which from its inception is bound to fail. There are many farm families in this country who are longing for a chance to buy a home with a small down payment and a guaranty of proper credit facilities. The aims of the Government could not be directed in more worthwhile channels.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman realize that under the provisions of this bill the person who is able to make an initial payment is to be given a preference? The provision is very specific.

Mr. MAHON of Texas. There is no mandatory provision in the bill to the effect that the man who can make a down payment shall get the farm.

Mr. COOLEY. Does the gentleman realize that many people might be able to make a down payment who would be otherwise objectionable?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Certainly; and we provide that they must be first-class risks.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that if his amendment is adopted a down payment would represent some evidence of good faith on the part of the tenant and some evidence of a serious intention and purpose to make the farm a success?

Mr. MAHON of Texas. The gentleman is eminently correct.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. Chairman, this bill, of course, does not require that loans be made to the full value of the land. It permits loans up to that amount, but it specifically provides that preference shall be given to the farmer who is able to make a down payment.

Now, as has been said a number of times in the course of this discussion, this bill is an experiment, and if it is an experiment, I feel the Department of Agriculture ought to have an opportunity, under the provisions of the bill, to make it somewhat flexible. There may be some parts of the country in which it would be better and sounder to require a down payment of maybe more than 10 percent, and in other sections it might be desirable to make these loans without a down payment. I think the Department ought to have the opportunity to try out different methods and make loans on a different basis within the limits of the bill, in order to determine what policy we shall finally adopt if we find that this experiment is successful.

The greatest success that has been made in this type of project anywhere in the world has been in Ireland. They began back in 1870 in Ireland to solve their tenant problem by making loans to tenants to purchase land, and they began by making the loans on the basis of 66.7 percent, or two-thirds of the value. Then they raised it to 75 percent, but ever since 1881 they have made these loans on the basis of 100 percent. During this time they have loaned approximately $725,000,000 and have made owners or put on the road to ownership 547,000 tenants. So that whereas back in 1870, 97 percent of the farmers of Ireland were tenants and 3 percent were owners, now the percentage is just the reverse and 97 percent are owners and 3 percent are tenants. Practically all of this was done on the basis of loans at 100 percent of the value of the land.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOPE. Yes.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman mentioned the fact that preference is given to the one who can make an initial payment, also preference is given to the one who has equipment and machinery, and is it not frequently a sounder loan to lend 100 percent to a man who has equipment and machinery to operate a farm than 95 percent to a man who does not have such equipment; and the adoption of either of these amendments would make it so that the man who had plenty of machinery and plenty of equipment to farm probably would be turned down for the man who had a 5-percent payment, even though he had no equipment whatever.

Mr. HOPE. I agree with the gentleman entirely.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to talk on this bill because of the fact that the State of Michigan is not faced with the problem of tenancy, because we only have about 19 percent of tenancy, but one of the previous speakers here today mentioned the fact that the flag of our country was being desecrated in the city of Detroit.

Let us go back a few years to the days when the I. W. W.'s were out in the wheat fields and went through the farming country and burned the barns and burned the wheat fields.

Did we consider that the farmers were desecrating the flag of the United States of America? No! That same element today is in the city of Detroit. This is the element that has worked its way into the labor movement in America and it is the element that labor leaders must take out of its ranks. The city of Detroit and the good people of Detroit are not desecrating the flag of America. It is the communistic element that has crept into labor that is desecrating the flag. It is bent on destroying not only the labor movement but the very principles upon which this democracy is founded.

I have always been a friend of labor, and I well remember when the United Mine Workers of America was a real organization—and I am weighing well my words—when John L. Lewis was at the head of that organization, and when he, in no uncertain terms, condemned certain communistic leaders and drove them out of that miners' organization because he said they were there for disruptive work from within, and now where are those very Communists he condemned? They are the first lieutenants of John L. Lewis in the C. I. O. today—Phil Murray, John Brophy, Powers Hapgood, and others. He cannot deny it. Why the change of heart?

Let me say to you that while I was back in my district some of the real, honest C. I. O. labor organizers came to me and begged me to use my influence to have the C. I. O. and its leaders take these Communists as organizers out of that organization. I am not opposed to the C. I. O. or to industrial organizations, but I am opposed to the communistic, anarchistic organization that is working from within, and that is going to disrupt labor if it is allowed to go on. Yes; disrupt this Nation, but only temporarily, because real Americans accept the challenge and will never bow to communistic, irreligious slavery.

As it has been mentioned here that the crack is open for the farmer to come in, let us open a crack for labor to come into this House of Representatives and be recognized. Let us pass laws outlawing the right of any employer or employee, engaged in the manufacture of goods that will go into interstate commerce, to arm his factory. Let me suggest that we may pass legislation that will make it a crime to transport men from one place to another or from one State to another, if you please, either for strikebreaking or strike picketing excepting troops authorized by lawful authority. Lawful picketing is the right of labor. The right to strike is their only weapon; but do not let some Communist, who has not the interest of labor at heart, direct that strike. The American Federation of Labor refuses to allow known Communists within their ranks, and I congratulate them for it. When the C. I. O. enforces such a rule they will gain the respect of the American people, but until then they will continue to lose in the eyes of public opinion, and public opinion rules in America.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I did not make the point of order to the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK], but I shall hereafter when outside matters are discussed make the point of order, because we have a great many who want to discuss this particular measure. I want to see now if we cannot agree upon a time limit for discussion of this section. I ask unanimous consent that in the further discussion of this section, the speeches shall be limited to 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JONES. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that each of the amendments that are to be offered to this section be read first for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendments in the order in which they reach the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WARREN: Amend section 3 on page 3, line 25, by inserting after the word "farm" the words "and for the necessary repairs and improvements thereon."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to state that I do not wish any time on that particular amendment, because I understand it is entirely satisfactory to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES]. While I have the floor, however, because of inquiry raised by many Members, I announce that I shall offer a very important clarifying amendment to section 43 later. I understand there is no objection to the pending amendment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment, and I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by Mr. WARREN.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE: Page 5, insert:

"(7) Contain a waiver by the borrower of all rights and benefits under the terms of the act approved August 28, 1935, commonly referred to as the Frazier-Lemke Act, as against the Secretary of Agriculture until he has paid as much as 15 percent of the reasonable value of the farm."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: Page 5, line 16, strike out the figures "$25,000,000" and insert "$15,000,000."

Mr. JONES. That is to the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. We have not reached that part of the bill.

The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAHON of Texas. Page 3, line 22, and page 4, lines 1 and 2, strike out all of paragraph (a) of section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Loans made under this title shall not exceed $6,500 to any one applicant and shall not be in excess of the amount certified by the county committee to be the value of the farm, and shall not exceed the amount necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm and shall be secured by a first mortgage or deed of trust on the farm."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 4, line 1, after the words "secured by", strike out the remainder of line 1 and line 2 and insert: "instruments vesting the legal title to the farm in the Secretary of Agriculture for the use and benefit of the United States as its interests may appear, and the acquisition of title to such farm or all rights and interest therein by the borrower shall be strictly in accordance with the terms of the instruments executed in connection with such loan."

The Clerk read as follows:

Another amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: Page 5, line 3, after the word "payable", strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the borrower shall not, for a period of 5 years after the loan is granted, nor at any time until 25 percent of the loan has been repaid, have an assignable interest in the farm unless the Secretary agrees that such interest shall vest in him, nor shall he have any equitable or other interest subject to levy and sale under process in favor of creditors under the laws of any State for such period of 5 years."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: Page 4, line 6, after the word "not", insert "less than twenty nor."

Page 4, strike out lines 24 and 25; and on page 5, strike out lines 1 to 3, inclusive, and insert:

"(6) Provide that the borrower shall not voluntarily assign, sell, or otherwise transfer the farm or any interest thereunder, without the consent of the Secretary, and provide that upon involuntary transfer or sale, the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable.

"(7) Provide that upon satisfaction of the borrower's obligation but not less than 20 years after the making of the loan, he shall be entitled to the farm free of any estate or property interest retained by the Secretary to secure the satisfaction of the obligation."

Page 5, line 5, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "except that the final payment of any sum due shall not be accepted if the effect of such acceptance would be to make ineffective the 20-year limitation provided in paragraph 1 of subsection (b) of this section."

Amendment offered by Mr. FLANNAGAN to amend the Biermann amendment: Strike out the word "twenty" where it appears in the Biermann amendment and insert the word "ten."

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The discussion of this particular bill has taken a wide range, and I do not propose to go into a discussion of the bill in its entirety, but will confine my remarks to the record as it appears today, and to references which have been made to the Farm Credit Administration during this debate.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that despite every effort having been made to show that the farm tenants of America have been the forgotten people of this land, in the year 1936 this very Farm Credit Administration, which has been accused here of holding up the people and of ruthless foreclosures, put 20,000 farms into the hands of new farm owners. About 10,000 of those farms to which I refer came to the Farm Credit Administration following advances under mortgages created in 1920 under the Federal land bank. The particular 10,000 to which I refer were abandoned, and there was no real action in foreclosure, because the then owners of the farms had no interest whatsoever in retaining them, due to taxes and other matters.

In the case of the other 10,000 farms, money was advanced to the extent of over 75 percent of the value of the farms to those who could make the proper showing as proper credit risks under the Farm Credit Administration. The F. C. A., therefore, made advances of in the neighborhood of $50,000,000 toward the solution of the tenant problem in the United States. I think it is perfectly fair that this debate should keep the record clear as to the work of the Farm Credit Administration, both in refinancing and in bringing people back to farms which had no people on them, and farms that were then owned by the Government and held by the Farm Credit Administration. Those 20,000 farms bear the following ratio to the total credit extended by the Farm Credit Administration up until April 30 of this year:

Eight hundred and fifty thousand farms refinanced by the Farm Credit Administration; 10,000 of the farms sold came in by abandonment proceedings on the part of the owners, and in the case of the 10,000 other farms, credit was advanced in most instances to tenant farmers who had saved enough out of their operations to make the proper first payments and to meet the credit requirements of the Farm Credit Administration.

In connection with the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, we have rather definite evidence that there are many farm tenants in these United States, sharecroppers and tenants alike, men of sufficient ability and earnestness of desire to permit them to make a reasonable down payment, showing, first, good faith, and, second, placing the operation of this administration on a basis which would be reasonably sound and in accordance with the practice heretofore established by the present administration.

I feel very strongly about this matter. I propose to vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE], first, because I think 10 percent is not too much down payment to require during the administration of the early operations of this act, and, failing in that amendment, I will vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

In summation, the bill under consideration will provide credit up to 100 percent of the value of the farm and will furnish finances sufficient to put about 2,000 farms in the hands of now tenant farmers.

We already have evidence that the F. C. A. has done well by 10 times that number in 1 year, and will continue so to do in a sound, orderly way.

None of the farms held by the Farm Credit Administration during the aforementioned operations were acquired after 1933.

The Farm Credit Administration now has about 28,321 farms evidenced by sheriff's certificates and a very, very few of these acquired by foreclosure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] has expired.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pending amendments. My State of New Hampshire has about the lowest proportion of tenancy of any State in the Union. Nevertheless, I well understand this is a national problem and as such it commands my sympathetic interest and attention.

I want to say at the beginning of my remarks that I find myself not in accord with the gentleman from North Carolina, who by his interrogation of one of the Members a few moments ago suggested that matters of an experimental nature in government were justified in being based upon a basis which is not sound.

For either experimental or permanent legislation there is one fundamental requirement: It must be sound all the way through. Nothing will bring this country into evil days any more than setting up experimental legislation that is not sound in its provisions.

Some years ago I went to the Secretary of Agriculture and demanded the report made by Mary Connor Myers, a Government investigator, on the subject of farm tenancy. This report was made by her for the Department of Agriculture. It was not made public. It was ordered suppressed by the Department. I was granted an opportunity, however, of reading that report in its entirety and I became well aware of the terrible conditions of the tenant farmers and sharecroppers through the medium of that report.

I want to support this legislation, as a national experiment to try and do something to meet a serious situation, but I want to see it sound. To that end I would like to have the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska adopted placing only a 90-percent burden on the Government.

Some time ago when our House Committee on Agriculture had under consideration the original bill H. R. 8, we finally repudiated the bill because it would put the Government into the business of buying and selling land. The committee took this action despite the fact that its members were put under great pressure from the administration and were subject to cajolery and threats.

It was to the everlasting credit of those who resisted such methods. That is now a matter of record.

Addressing myself now to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture I need not have the gift of prophecy to realize that when this bill goes to the Senate, in all probability that body will put in the bill the original provision for the buying and selling of land by the Government. If the bill comes back to the House containing this provision, addressing myself to the chairman of my committee and to the gentleman from Nebraska, I ask them if they will support me in a resolution of the House instructing the conferees to stand against that provision for buying and selling land and to eliminate it from the bill. What do you say, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. JONES. We have not gotten this bill to conference yet. I am going to sustain the position of the House as best I can.

Mr. TOBEY. Coming events cast their shadows before them, however, sir.

Mr. JONES. I do not think the gentleman will expect me to make a commitment thus far in advance.

Mr. TOBEY. Give me a little friendly advice. What do you think, sub rosa?

Mr. JONES. I cannot see that what I might think would be governing in that respect. I know that the gentleman feels that I will do the best I can in working out the bill.

Mr. TOBEY. I want to go on record here and now that I on behalf of this House, to sustain the position of the House, will support a resolution instructing the conferees to strike out such a provision if inserted in the bill by the Senate. Will you gentlemen support me?

Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska. I am for the gentleman.

Mr. TOBEY. One thing more, Mr. Chairman. We hear a lot of statistics these days about the number and activities of Government departments. This bill would add to our already topheavy bureaucracy. The bureaucrats are often in each other's way, stumbling over each other. Often their statements are at cross purposes one with the other. Here is a bill which aims to put thousands more people on the farms of America. Many other pieces of farm legislation have that import behind them through granting more credit, and lower rates of interest—trying to get more people on the farms. Listen, Mr. Chairman JONES, of Texas, while I read an amazing statement coming from no less a man than Dr. O. E. Baker, population authority for the United States Department of Agriculture. In an Associated Press article in the Washington Post today he is reported to have said in an address at Purdue University Institute on American Policy and Technology on June 28:

> Half of the Nation's farms now operating are not needed to feed and clothe the people.

Is that true in the gentleman's judgment?

Mr. JONES. I do not think so.

Mr. TOBEY. Then I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that this is another bureaucratic incongruity.

Mr. JONES. You cannot prove a thing by newspaper statements.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I want to express to the chairman of the committee and to its members my appreciation of the work they have done in bringing this bill to the floor of the House. I am sure that but for the devoted efforts of the chairman and the members of the committee we would not today have the opportunity of considering and passing this bill.

I was greatly impressed by the very able address of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] on yesterday. I was impressed in the first place because we all recognize his outstanding ability. In the second place, we realize that he speaks with authority, having spent all of his life in the business of farming. In the third place there is perhaps no man in Congress who is a more devoted advocate of what we might term individualism, the individual liberty and individual rights of the people than the gentleman from New York. Yet, on yesterday he warned us that if the Government were to make a success out of this land purchase and farm-tenant program there had to be at least some direction by the Government of the farm tenants. I am fearful that the language in the House bill looking to that question is too indefinite and uncertain. The gentleman from New Hampshire has spoken of the conference committee. I believe that the language in the Senate bill takes care of this question in a much better way, and I hope that when this bill is in conference that some language will be worked out between the conferees that will insure the necessary direction and leadership for the tenants who are to be the beneficiaries of this act.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the two pending amendments, one permitting a loan of 90 percent of the value of the farm, and the other a loan of 95 percent of the value of the farm.

We must bear in mind that the purchase of the farm is not the only expenditure that must be made if the farm tenant is to be put on a farm and then operate it successfully. As the chairman of the Agricultural Committee suggested in his question propounded to the gentleman from Kansas, there is farm machinery to be purchased, which is expensive in itself. There is seed to be bought. There is work stock, cows, hogs, and fertilizer to be acquired. There are all kinds of things that cost money that are essential to the operation of a farm in addition to the land itself.

Many of the farm tenants have today little money or property of any kind, and most of what little they have will be needed for these other essentials. Given the proper assistance and direction by the Government, it is astounding with what success they work out their welfare. The record of rehabilitation work by the Resettlement Administration shows interesting and worth-while accomplishments among the class of farmers that we would now make farm owners.

In 1935 there were 13,259 rehabilitation clients in Alabama. This year there are about 12,000. The average cash farm income of the clients in 1935 was $91 per family. In 1936 it was $226, a gain of 148 percent; and it is estimated that this year it will be about $460. If this estimate proves to be approximately accurate, it is evident that their incomes this year will be about five times what they were in 1935. Most of the gain in income which occurred between 1935 and 1936, and which is expected to occur again this year, results from better farm-management practices and better capital equipment in the hands of the farmer.

In 1935 the average net worth of the 13,259 rural rehabilitation clients was only $3.03. In other words, the families were practically destitute. They had nothing. Today the average net worth of the rehabilitation clients in Alabama is $362. This is still low, but it is more than 100 times larger than the 1935 figures. This is a tremendous increase. The total net worth of all these clients in Alabama in 1935 was only $40,175. Today it is $4,344,000. This is a total gain in the net worth of the clients during a 2-year period of $4,303,825. This accomplishment speaks for itself.

The bill before us does not go as far as I would like to see it go. I fear that it is far too short in its monetary provisions, but in this regard it is the best that we can get under conditions today. It is at least a beginning toward the solution of the farm-tenant problem, and we have waited all too long to attack this problem, one of the most important challenging the Nation.

During the past 50 years we have seen farm tenancy in this country increase from some 25 percent to some 42 percent. We cannot have an economy of security, not to say of abundance, in a land where nearly half of its agricultural people are tenants. The problem is not sectional, as is believed by some, for although it is most acute in the South, yet the census shows that Iowa has a greater degree of tenancy than Tennessee, Indiana has passed Florida, and Minnesota's tenancy ratio exceeds Virginia's. There is nothing that makes for idleness, ignorance, shiftlessness, insecurity, soil depletion, and poor citizenship like tenancy. There is nothing that so defeats a wise balanced plan of agriculture or is so destructive of land conservation as is tenancy. It was Arthur Young, one of the earliest of our agricultural economists, who, in his Travels in France, observed concerning the French peasant that "the magic of property turns sand to gold. Give a man the secure possession of a bleak rock and he will turn it into a garden, give him a 9-year lease of a garden and he will convert it into a desert."

The late Dr. E. C. Branson, who gave a large part of his life to a study of the problems of the tenant farmer, tells us that—

> The ownership of land tethers a man to law and order better than all the laws of the statute books. It breeds in him a sense of personal worth and family pride. It identifies him with the community he lives in and gives him a proprietary interest in the church, and school, and other organizations and enterprises of his home town or home community. It enables him to hold his family together, makes him a better father, a better neighbor, and a better citizen mainly because it makes him a stable, responsible member of society.

The bill will not only prove a benefit to the tenant capable of taking advantage of the opportunities offered by it but it will benefit the landowner in the form of good neighbors, stability of land values, decline of poverty as a public charge, and a wholesome and enlightened community life.

Our Nation was founded as a nation of farm-owning, farm-loving, and farm-living people, and it was on the cornerstone of individual freedom and individual ownership that our free institutions were established. We know that Thomas Jefferson's faith in democracy was based not so much on his faith in people generally but rather on his faith in the home-owning agricultural class of the country. Farm tenancy is subversive of the American way of life. It is a type of economic serfdom which if permitted to continue and to grow will threaten and endanger our very form of government.

Other nations have attacked the tenant problem with definite success. As early as 1870 Ireland and as far back as 1899 Denmark undertook the task of reversing the tenant tide. As a result today Ireland is preponderantly a country of farm owners and Denmark has some 90 percent of its farmers owner-operators.

England, Scotland, Germany, Holland, Austria, Italy, Poland, and the Balkan countries are attempting in one way or the other to curb the evils of the problem. Surely the hour has come for us to make a beginning. Let us pass the pending bill that we may make a beginning, to the end that we may elevate the worth and the dignity of the individual, that we may recognize that property was created for man and not man for property, that we may contribute to the pursuit of the social good, that we may hold fast to the ideal of free men and free homes in which our Nation had its birth, and that commen men may own the land. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last nine words.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and the amendment thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in sympathy with the good purposes of this legislation and no Member of the House is more interested in its success than I. The bill has my active support but I want it to be sound and workable. No class of people in our country have been more neglected or need assistance so much as the tenant farmers. The living condition of many of them is pitiful.

I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague from Texas [Mr. MAHON]. I feel that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska places the amount that the tenant must pay too high, but I undertake to say, Mr. Chairman, that the tenant who is in good faith and who wants to show some evidence of his serious purpose and intention and of his determination to make a success out of his purchase, will be very happy to pay something in order that he may have that feeling and pride of ownership and responsibility. There are good tenants and sorry tenants, just like there are good and bad in every line of human endeavor.

There are some tenant farmers throughout the United States in the years since 1929 who have met with more success at farming than the landlords themselves and have not had the debts, worries, and responsibilities. If he has the animals, tools, and equipment necessary to start a farm, he can easily raise the 5 percent. That would be only $150 on a $3,000 farm and only $250 on a $5,000 farm. If he does not have it, his neighbor, his relative, his banker, his local merchant or somebody who has faith in him will assist. I claim you raise his feeling of pride, ownership, and responsibility when he makes the purchase on that sort of a basis. He will feel that it is his, that he already has some of his own money in it, that he is not on charity or relief. He will also have more incentive to work hard, economize, manage well, and pay it out.

It is stated that this is an experiment and, of course, it is an experiment, but look through the pages of the statutes of the United States and you will not find another single set-up where the Government has paid or loaned the full value for a home of any kind. Take the H. O. L. C., the Federal Farm Credit, or any Government organization, and you will not find that the Government has been Santa Claus for the full amount. It ought to be on a kind of partnership basis. There ought to be encouragement and a premium on thrift and good management. I suggest the amount of cash payment be very small, but it should be something. If the purchaser pays absolutely nothing and becomes discouraged at the end of the first year, he will throw up his hands and quit. He has no investment, nothing to lose, and has had free use of the land and improvements for a year. The thrifty, industrious, and determined tenant will not object to this. He is the kind who is entitled to preference, for he is the only kind that will make good.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAHON) there were—ayes 18, noes 37.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JONES) there were—ayes 42, noes 41.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, as close as that vote is, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. JONES and Mr. COFFEE of Nebraska to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 58, noes 62.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of my amendment, which has been previously read.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has one purpose; in fact, it has only one excuse. We have not the right to lend the Government's money to the extent of 100 percent of the value of a piece of property at less than the cost of the money unless there is a very good purpose in view. The purpose, the only valid excuse, for these unusual loans is to make owner-operators of farms. But under the bill as it is now written that purpose is obscured by the ever-present menace of land speculation.

Under this bill a beneficiary, who has borrowed 100 percent of the value of the farm, can in 3 months or 6 months, if he can make money by turning the farm over, sell it and take his profit.

My amendment provides he cannot do that for 20 years. If the Government lends him 100 percent of the value of the farm and makes a mortgage extending over a term of 30 years, at an interest rate of 3 percent, which is less than the cost of the money in spite of what the counterfeiters may say regarding paper money, the Government has a right to ask in return that the beneficiaries of the act conform to the purpose for which this bill is written, that is, they, in truth and in fact, become owner-operators. My amendment simply provides that for 20 years after the contract has been entered into the beneficiary shall continue as an owner-operator and shall not become a speculator. In case of accident or any untoward event the Secretary has the right to allow the man to sell the farm. However, when things are going along normally we expect the man to conform to his part of the bargain and make an owner-operator out of himself, which is the purpose of this amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Suppose a man in good faith moves on a farm and does the best he can, thinking himself a farmer and a manager, but at the end of 10 years has demonstrated to himself and everybody else that he just is not the man for the farm; would the Secretary have discretion under this bill to permit him to sell the farm and go into something he can do?

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes; my amendment would not prevent that at all.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of my amendment to the Biermann amendment.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment only reduces the period from 20 years to 10 years. I hope the membership of the House realizes the importance of the Biermann amendment. To my mind, it is fundamental. The object of this bill is to bring economic security to the farm tenants of America, yet under the terms of the bill we are simply picking a tenant up by the nape of the neck and the seat of his britches and putting him in the farmer-owner class by legislative fiat, without throwing around him those safeguards and protections prudent legislation demands. It cannot be done that way. If this Government is going to rehabilitate the tenants, it should throw around them every protection the Congress can give them. The tenant is not on the same footing with the farmer who has demonstrated his ability to cope with his fellow man under our economic system. The very fact the man is in the tenant class shows he has not been able under our economic system for some reason to cope with his fellow man. We are trying to rehabilitate this man, but we are leaving him at the mercy of the speculators.

If this legislation is followed by a general farm bill which will raise the price level of farm products and give the American farmer at least a parity price for the products of his soil, then farm values are going to increase. What will be the result? Here is a tenant who has been rehabilitated through a 100-percent loan. He never had over $200 or $300 in cash in his life. Here comes a speculator and offers him a $100 or $200 profit. Under this bill, the tenant can sell his farm the day after he gets his loan. You know what will happen. He will fall under the temptation of the speculator and will sell his farm. Then he will be right out in the public road the next day with his wife and children, and with about $100 or $200 in his pocket, which will not last him for 6 weeks. He will then be right back in the tenant class.

If we are going to help the tenant, if we are going to rehabilitate him, when we rehabilitate him let us make him stay rehabilitated for a reasonable period of time, in order to see if he can be elevated from the tenant class to the farmer class.

This amendment is fundamental. We need not fool ourselves. We know farm values are going up. Farm values always have gone up and down. When they go up we are turning the tenants who have been rehabilitated over to the speculators and putting them right back in the tenant class. I think a period of 10 years is a reasonable period. Keep the tenant on the farm for 10 years and he will become more attached to the farm from year to year. If he does not demonstrate in 10 years the fact he is able to be made into a farmer, he never will.

I am only trying to help the tenant. I am only trying to aid him in keeping the land he has been able to acquire through the 100-percent assistance of a generous Government. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have a very high regard for the gentlemen who have offered both these amendments; in fact, I am very partial to all the members of my committee. I have listened with interest to what they have had to say. I do feel, however, that this amendment would be unfortunate. The fact is that no law is stronger than its penalty. All the penalty that is or can be attached by this amendment is that if the covenants are violated the Secretary may declare the payments due. You could write into this amendment that if the tenant violated the covenants he should go out and hang himself, but still all the Secretary could do when the tenant violated the covenants and refused to hang himself would be to declare the payments due and payable. We do that in the present bill.

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I am sorry, but I cannot yield now.

The bill provides as follows:

That upon the borrower's assigning, selling, or otherwise transferring the farm, or any interest therein, without the consent of the Secretary, or upon involuntary transfer or sale, the Secretary may declare the amount unpaid immediately due and payable.

So long as there is a cent due the Government the tenant cannot transfer or mortgage the property without the Secretary's consent. When he has paid out the loan, if he works hard and pays it out in 5 years, for instance, why in the name of common sense not let him have the fee? [Applause.] I have seen people meet around the campfire and burn the mortgage, because they wanted to feel the deep sentiment of home ownership.

Mr. BIERMANN and Mr. FLANNAGAN rose.

Mr. JONES. I am sorry; I cannot yield. I do not have the time.

Let us look at this from a practical viewpoint. We have all the safeguards possible. The Secretary can take away every advantage. The man might just as well go out and buy an outside farm as buy this farm when the loan is declared due and payable. Therefore, if there is an increase in value, the tenant farmers can buy an outside farm and perhaps not have to pay for all of it.

Let me submit a practical proposition. Suppose a man thinks he can take one of these farms and pay it out. After he has worked on it about a year he decides he is not the man for it, and wants to let someone else pay it out. Are you going to keep him there 10 years, or let someone else who is interested in getting a farm and in owning a farm he can call his own have a chance at that farm?

We have every safeguard thrown around it. If a man gets sick and wants to give up his farm, or wants to sell it to a man who is acceptable to the Secretary, why not let him sell it?

We take away all the special privileges granted by the Government when he transfers the title, and that is all you can do, no matter what covenants you may put in the measure. Of course, if the Government bought the land they could levy conditions, but they cannot levy conditions on a loan, other than calling the loan, and we have that provision in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am very happy, indeed, to hear the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture of the House take such a firm and judicious position upon the question pending before the House in the Biermann amendment. I sincerely trust that when the conferees of the House go into session with the Senate conferees that the same type of argument and persuasion will be made in order to convince the Senate of the importance of the provisions found in title 1 of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to the amendments of the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Virginia, which seek to restrict the alienation of the fee-simple title of this land for a period of 10 or 20 years. I think it wholly unfair, inequitable, and unjust to place a limitation of that kind upon the average thrifty tenant farmer of America who may desire to take advantage of the liberal provisions of this bill. I submit in all sincerity that the type of tenant we seek to impress with the importance of this legislation will not enter into a partnership with Uncle Sam if he is thoroughly familiar with the provisions of this amendment in the event it should become a law. I have more confidence and respect for the ability and industry of the tenants who can qualify under this act.

This amendment which seeks to restrict the alienation of the fee-simple title of land is placed before the House on the further theory that it will eliminate land speculation. That may be true insofar as the individual who has borrowed this money from the Government is concerned. But I ask in the name of common justice why should this man be penalized for making a profit on his farm when his neighbors surrounding him are making a profit on theirs during a land boom? I know that the gentleman from Iowa is sincere in his fight on land speculation, but I submit in all sincerity that unless the entire field is covered we should not make fish out of one farm owner and fowl out of another.

It would seem to me that the unearned increment tax suggested by the President's committee on farm tenancy whereby a certain part of the profits on all lands sold within a given length of time would be the basic and fundamental way to cure this evil if one cares to accept the viewpoint of the gentleman from Iowa.

Again, Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to giving to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to control this land for a period of 20 years. In my judgment, this is the beginning of land socialization in America. This is the most important point in the bill, to my way of thinking. It is the initial step upon the part of the Government to ultimately acquire lands for the purpose of resale to tenants. This is the vital principle in the bill reported out by the Senate, and one which I hope will never be accepted by the conferees.

ALIENATION OF PROPERTY IS ONE OF THE INHERENT RIGHTS OF FREE GOVERNMENT

And, as I stated yesterday in a speech on the floor of this House, if this principle involved ultimately becomes the law of the land, within a period of 40 years a million tenants will be under the control and jurisdiction of the Federal Government. And when that time arrives it will be a short and decisive step to Government ownership of all the lands in this Nation. I trust that I shall never live to see the day arrive in this great country of ours when the American farmer is regimented in a way which compares with the regimentation of the farmers of the Old World. Remember well, if and when that happens, a different form of government will supplant the Government that you and I love. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendments again reported?

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, a reading of the amendments does not give very much of an idea what they mean, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may address the Committee for 1 minute to make a brief statement in lieu of having the amendments read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment provides that the beneficiary of this act cannot pay out his loan in less than 20 years. He has to be an owner-operator for 20 years before he can get rid of his farm. The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia limits the time to 10 years, but, of course, under either amendment the Secretary of Agriculture may provide otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER: On page 4, line 1, after the words "shall be secured by", strike out the remainder of line 1 and line 2 and insert "instruments vesting the legal title to the farm in the Secretary of Agriculture for the use and benefit of the United States as its interests may appear and the acquisition of title to such farm or rights and interests therein by the borrower shall be strictly in accordance with the terms of the instruments executed in connection with such loan."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Georgia will permit, I ask unanimous consent that after the presentation by the gentleman from Georgia that all speeches for the remainder of the consideration of the bill may be limited to 3 minutes. I do this because we have been very generous, and I think amendments hereafter can be presented in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all speeches on all amendments, following the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], be limited to 3 minutes on each amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, why does not the gentleman limit his request to the pending title, as this is the title to which most of the amendments will be offered.

Mr. JONES. I purposely have been liberal because there has not been a bill before the House where there has been so much interest manifested, and I wanted everyone to have an opportunity to express his views, but I believe the House now is very familiar with the bill and any amendments can be presented in 3 minutes, and in this way we will get through in a reasonable time.

Mr. HOPE. As the gentleman knows, there are some important provisions further on in the bill which may or may not cause some discussion. I do not like to object, but I shall have to object to a limitation of 3 minutes in the discussion of amendments to the other features of the bill. I have no objection to such a limitation with respect to title I, because that has been discussed.

I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all speeches on this particular title and all amendments thereto, with the exception of the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia, be limited to 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. Some of us are a little more inclined to be modest and conserve the time and energy of the House. All yesterday afternoon I waited for 5 minutes to talk on the bill. I want to talk on this title, and under the circumstances I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia is not germane to this section of the bill as it seeks to put the Government into the land business and secure the title in the Government by the provisions of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order comes too late. The point of order is overruled. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to impose on the patience of this House at this hour of the day, especially since I realize that it is hardly possible that any amendment which does not receive the approval of the committee will be adopted. However, I am fortified in the intention that I have to present this amendment for consideration by my believe that the chairman of the committee at heart approves the principle of the amendment and that if he were not bound by the action of his committee he would agree to the amendment and ask you to agree to it.

The purpose of the amendment is to vest legal title to the lands that are to be sold to the sharecropper and the tenant in the Secretary of Agriculture for the use and benefit of the Government of the United States, and with no rights or equities therein to accrue to the tenant or sharecropper except in accordance with the terms of the instruments that may be executed or exchanged between him and the Secretary of Agriculture. The purpose, I think, is manifest. It is to enable the House of Representatives, should it desire to do so by a subsequent amendment, to attach conditions to the rights secured by the share cropper or the tenant, which it cannot attach, as has been explained by the chairman in his speech regarding the proposed Biermann amendment, unless the title of the land is vested in the Government itself. When that is done, then the Government may attach to its contract with the sharecropper or the tenant such conditions as it may deem proper.

I am interested principally in providing by the amendment already offered, and which will be subsequently reached for consideration, that the equity of these tenants or sharecroppers shall not be subject to levy and sale by creditors at least for a period of 5 years, without the consent of the Secretary of Agriculture. Unless you insert a provision of that kind in the bill which now provides, in line 2, page 5, for involuntary transfer or sale, then under the laws of many States—at least, of my own State—the equity of the sharecropper or tenant in the course of a year or two, perhaps, after he buys the farm and after he has made some payments thereon, may be subjected to sale under civil process. I have explained this matter fully in my speech on yesterday and further discussion is perhaps unnecessary.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Does not every State in the Union provide homestead exemption for farms, and every tenant who buys one of these farms immediately makes it his home, and it is already exempt?

Mr. TARVER. No.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Unless the Government in the sale restricts it from exemption.

Mr. TARVER. No. My own State, for example, provides for a homestead, but provides further that the debtor may by written instrument waive his homestead rights except as to $300 worth of household and kitchen furniture, wearing apparel and provisions, so that the sharecropper buying land under this bill in my State, as to his equity thereunder, would have no protection whatever, if he had executed an instrument or promissory note in usual form to a creditor waiving his homestead rights, and that creditor for a preexisting indebtedness might come in and by civil process subject the sharecropper's equity at any time after he went into possession of the farm to levy and sale for the purpose of paying the antecedent debt, although, if a trust deed had been executed to the Government, the creditor would first have to pay or offer to pay the amount due the Government. I do not know whether the Committee of the Whole will adopt the restriction I propose in the next amendment or not. I shall not offer it unless this amendment is adopted. This amendment is necessary to give the House the right to provide for the attaching of such terms and conditions. If you adopt this amendment, then certainly you would have the right in subsequent portions of the section to consider whether or not you would attach restrictions of that kind, limiting the interest of the borrower so that it would not be subject to levy and sale for 5 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I desire for the membership of the House to understand that I am not speaking here today just to take the time of the Committee, but to impress upon you the fact that in my opinion this bill in no way offers a solution of the problem which today confronts the American farm tenant and farm population, and that there is before this House a bill (H. R. 6748) which does attack this problem in a sane, sound, and sensible manner, and which does provide a program that is in complete harmony with the fundamental principles of free government.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Not at this time. Sometime ago, while I was speaking, I was showing to the membership the hopeless plight of the farmers of the nation of Denmark where a similar program has been in existence for over 30 years under which program farmers have been permitted to borrow up to approximately 90 percent of the value of their loans.

The United States Department of Agriculture, in summarizing the plight of the farmers of Denmark, states that—

> The land has been burdened with debt to the extent that interest charges and amortization are out of all proportion to its productive powers. This situation, aggravated by restrictions of market and world prices generally, has brought the Danish farmer to a condition of real distress, from which the Government is striving to lift him by various farm-aid schemes.

Instead of leading the farm family out of the wilderness of despair, you are attempting here today to drive him deeper into a condition of real distress, similar to that which exists in Denmark. The program in Denmark, as I understand, reduced tenancy to less than 8 percent of the total farm population, but it by no means solved the problem of the farm population of Denmark.

Now, there is a sensible way out. This is not the first time in America that this problem has been discussed in these Halls. For approximately 50 years the land problem was the center around which the political storms of this Nation raged, from approximately 1820 to 1860. Previous to that time there had always prevailed a policy of free land for free labor. American lawmakers attempted, when purchasing various acreages from foreign nations, to sell those acreages then, as you are today here attempting to sell acreages to farmers. The plan was a failure, and it was only after approximately 18 years of agitation of free land that in 1862 this Nation adopted the homestead plan, which has been recognized as one of the greatest laws that has ever been written by human hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] all debate on this section and all amendments thereto be limited to 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that following the 5 minutes by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] all addresses on the pending amendment and all amendments to this section be limited to 3 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Reserving the right to object, is that only with reference to this section?

Mr. JONES. Just with reference to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, the Committee has just recently voted down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN]. I am sure everyone recognizes that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] seeks to do in another way exactly what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa would have done had we adopted it. I do not believe it is the policy of this Committee or of the House to put the Government of the United States into the land business and to give the Secretary of Agriculture the power and authority to tie up the estate of anyone who becomes a purchaser under this bill in such a way that he has no right to alienate it except under certain circumstances and after a period of years.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOPE. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman inform us whether or not he thinks that the equity of the tenant ought not to be subject to sale under civil process for a reasonable period of time after he acquires the farm?

Mr. HOPE. As the gentleman from Oklahoma remarked a while ago, most of the States of this Union protect the homestead. If the gentleman's State of Georgia will not protect the homestead of the farmers of his State, he ought not to come here and ask the Congress of the United States to do it.

Mr. TARVER. But why did the gentleman put in the bill in line 2, page 5, "or upon involuntary transfer or sale", unless it is intended to subject this equity to involuntary transfer or sale, which means sale under civil process?

Mr. HOPE. That has no application in any State which protects the right of the farmer to his homestead.

Mr. TARVER. The very bill provides for this thing which I am trying to protect the borrower against.

Mr. HOPE. If the State does not protect its citizens in their homestead rights, its Representatives should not come in here and ask the Congress of the United States to do so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there appears to be a sentiment on the part of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON], and others who have spoken, to put the Government of the United States into business and furnish every farmer with a farm.

At least, I understand that is the idea of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON], although he has refrained from telling us exactly what his plan is this afternoon. But I just want to call attention to the fact that it has already been proven in this country that that is not the way to solve the tenant problem. Beginning in 1880 and during the period from 1880 to 1900 we had the greatest increase in number of tenants and in the percentage of tenancy in this country that we ever had during any similar period in our history. We had an increase of over 1,000,000 tenants during that period of time, yet during that time our homestead laws were operating and there was brought into the farm acreage of this country more than 300,000,000 acres of land. In 1880 the average value of the farms in this country was $3,000. Today the average value of the farms is $9,000.

If in the decade beginning in 1880 with 300,000,000 acres of free farm lands we could not solve the tenancy problem but instead saw it increase; if in 1880 when you could buy a farm for $3,000 we saw the tenancy problem increase, then I say that the indiscriminate giving away farms is not the way to cure the tenancy problem. This might indicate that we are proceeding along the wrong direction in this bill; and we may be. The bill is only an experiment. We do know that in other countries, notably in Denmark and in Ireland, a plan similar to this has succeeded. Success in those countries gives us some ground to hope that through experiment we may be able to work out a plan which will be successful in this country and which would justify this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill is designed to redeem, in a measure at least, two of the pledges contained in the national Democratic platform of 1936. One relates to the farm tenancy problem and the other to the purchase and retirement of submarginal lands of such a character as to be unproductive in agricultural pursuits.

As to the first, I quote from the platform:

> We recognize the gravity of the evils of farm tenancy, and we pledge the full cooperation of the Government in the refinancing of farm indebtedness at the lowest possible rates of interest and over a long term of years.

The bill is composed of four titles. Title 1 relates to loans to enable tenant farmers to buy farm homes, and, due to my limited time, I shall only briefly discuss this one feature of the bill.

The number of farm tenants in the United States is so large, and their diminution is of such importance that the problem raises a question of national interest and importance.

The number of farm tenants has greatly increased in the whole country. Fifty years ago 25 percent of the farmers were tenants, while today approximately 42 percent of all the farmers are tenants.

In 1935 the farm tenants numbered 2,149,000, and in addition to this there were 716,000 farm tenants generally known in the Southern States as sharecroppers, making a total of 2,865,000 farm tenants in the United States.

These farm tenants are in all sections of the Nation, but New England and the North Atlantic States have fewer than the rest. The largest number of farm tenants reside in the Southern and the Central and Midwestern States of the North. According to statistics the "high tenancy area" includes seven Northern and nine Southern States. The Northern States being North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa. The Southern States include Mississippi, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. There are many in all sections, and some in every State, but these States have the largest percentage according to population.

In my own State of Texas, 57 percent of all of the farmers are tenants. There are four other States, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, and Oklahoma, where the percentage of tenant farmers is greater than Texas.

One reason for this high percentage of farm tenancy in the South is due to insufficient capital and consequent high interest rates. The East and the North, and especially the Northeast, has had an ample supply of capital and resultant low interest rates, while in the South funds available for investment have been of lesser volume, and consequently loans brought higher interest, making it more difficult for tenants to borrow funds with which to buy farm homes.

At the beginning of the present session I introduced a bill (H. R. 3590) to promote the purchase of farms by farm tenants, and the bill now being considered has a number of the features contained in my bill. One of the chief differences, however, is that my bill would have made available a much larger sum for the aid of farm tenants than the bill under consideration. The bill we are now considering authorizes an amount not to exceed $10,000,000 for the first year, $25,000,000 for the second year, and $50,000,00 for the third year, or an aggregate of $85,000,000. My bill would have made available an amount about 12 times this large. My bill provided an interest rate of 2 percent, while this bill stipulates a 3-percent rate.

The chief disappointment about the bill now being considered is that it will furnish aid to only a very small number of tenant farmers. If the average loan to each individual farmer should be $6,000, this would give aid to only one-half of 1 percent of the tenant farmers. Some member of the committee, in discussing the bill, has stated that the present bill would only afford loans to about one tenant in each county of the United States. This is grossly inadequate, but the bill does inaugurate a policy which I hope may be developed and enlarged so that the Government will still further aid and encourage in a much larger way home ownership by tenant farmers by making available a greater sum for this laudable purpose.

The committee justifies the small amount on the ground that the bill is an experiment, and that if it is found that it is workable and affords relief, that the Government will then launch a program of greater magnitude, and which will be beneficial to a substantial number of the farm tenants of America.

Home ownership by the farmers of America is of vital importance not only to the tenant farmers, who will be permitted to borrow money from the Government at 3 percent with which to buy homes, but the beneficent effect in the reduction of the number of farm tenants will favorably affect the social and economic welfare of the Nation as a whole. Worthy tenants should be given a chance to buy homes, and every encouragement should be offered them to do so.

There is no class in greater need than the tenant farmers of America, and I am glad to vote for a bill which will give recognition to the need of this worthy class. I recognize that the bill will be a disappointment in the number of farmers aided, but I feel sure that its beneficent effects will at once be recognized, and at the next session of Congress I am hoping that a larger amount may be made available.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section close in 6 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TARVER——

Mr. TARVER (interrupting the reading of the amendment). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PACE: Page 5, after line 3, insert "and shall contain a waiver by the borrower of all rights and benefits under the terms of the act approved August 28, 1935, commonly referred to as the Frazier-Lemke Act, as against the Secretary of Agriculture until he has paid as much as 15 percent of the purchase price of the farm."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly concerned in doing something for the tenants of this Nation. The fact that there are 24,000 tenant farmers in the 24 counties which I am trying to serve gives you some idea of how important it is to my people. This bill has been described as an experiment. In the hope of making it more than a noble experiment merely, but rather a successful experiment, I think we should make the bill as practical as possible. You have voted to lend 100 percent of the value of the land. My amendment proposes that if you lend 100 percent of the value of the land, 100 percent of the value of the improvements, and in some cases 100 percent of the value of the stock and equipment, that certainly the Secretary of the Treasury—that is, the United States Government—should have some protection against those few who will try to take advantage of this law. It is therefore provided in this amendment that before a person can take advantage of the Frazier-Lemke law and stay the proceedings for 3 years, he must at least have an investment equal to 15 percent of the purchase price of the land.

This bill, of course, is designed to help the tenant. The Secretary of Agriculture will be in sympathy with the tenant, but there will be a few tenants not in sympathy with the Secretary of Agriculture, and certainly we should not permit a man to borrow 100 percent, use the land for a year, and then file a proceeding under the Frazier-Lemke Act and keep the place for an additional 3 years without one dollar invested. My amendment provides simply that he must have an equity to protect, which he would not have in a 100-percent loan, before he could take advantage of the Fraizer-Lemke Act and stay the proceedings for 3 years.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized for 1 minute at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have talked with a number of members of the committee about this amendment. They are not sure about it. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing for us to accept it for the purpose of study and then determine our position before we finally pass the bill? I am inclined to believe there is some force in what the gentleman says.

Mr. PACE. I think it is proper. If the gentleman does not, then I will ask that it be withdrawn when we get back in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAHON of Texas: Page 3, line 22, and page 4, lines 1 and 2, strike out all of paragraph (a) of section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Loans made under this title shall not exceed $6,500 to any one applicant and shall not be in excess of the amount certified by the county committee to be the value of the farm and shall not exceed the amount necessary to enable the borrower to acquire the farm and shall be secured by a first mortgage or a deed of trust on the farm."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS to the amendment offered by Mr. MAHON: Strike out "$6,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$3,500."

Mr. MAHON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I so rarely ask the indulgence of the House that I am sure the membership will be willing to listen to me for a few minutes to explain an amendment which I think is very necessary to the successful administration of this bill.

I merely provide in the amendment that no loan for the purpose of purchasing a farm under this Farm Security Act shall be made in excess of $6,500 to any one applicant. Certainly that figure is high enough and certainly the Congress of the United States ought to exercise some jurisdiction over the money that it appropriates. We owe this to ourselves and to the taxpayers of the country.

Everyone seems to be calling this bill an experiment. I am afraid it is an experiment that is going to be very disappointing to the country and to the tenant farmers we represent. I should like to amend and perfect this bill and make it a successful experiment in the right direction. The fact that it is an experiment does not justify us in failing to lay down proper rules for the administration of the bill. The solution of the farm-tenancy problem is vitally important to the whole Nation, and we ought to spare no effort in our attempt to insure a proper beginning.

Every time a Member on the floor makes a speech and talks about the integrity of the Congress and the retention of our prerogatives, he gets a cheer. Here is an opportunity to vote for some control over public funds by Congress and assert our proper authority.

The easiest way to get a man into trouble is to lend him too much money. My amendment is right in principle, and certainly since we have so little to lend in each county under the appropriation provided for in this measure, we ought to adopt this amendment providing that no loan under this title shall exceed $6,500.

I have been in most of the States of the Union and I know that agricultural conditions and land prices vary in different localities, but I am compelled to say that if the Government is going to pay 100 percent of the purchase price of a farm and turn it over to an occupant without a down payment there ought to be a limit of cost fixed by the Government.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I am in thorough accord with the purpose the gentleman has in mind, but we think we have a much lower limitation than suggested by the gentleman. We discussed that in the committee. We talked about $2,500 and $3,500, but we found that the size of the farms varied so greatly we could not put on a specific limitation, because what would be fair as applied to one section is not fair as applied to another. The three resident people may put on an upper limitation and the Secretary may put more in the farm. I believe with the limitations we have provided the limit will be much lower, and I may say to the gentleman I hope the average farm will be much lower than the figures suggested by him. In some places there are truck farms. In other places there are dairy farms, wheat farms, cotton farms, vegetable farms, and they vary in value so much in different communities that it is not practical to have a rigid limit.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. If the amendment is adopted, the provisions of this bill could not be made to operate in the northern section of this country.

Mr. JONES. I may say I had the same idea until we heard the testimony of the people who represented the various areas.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCAS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, it is so obvious that my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. MAHON] does not thoroughly appreciate the value of the Corn and Wheat Belt lands in Illinois that I desire to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point, and I ask unanimous consent so to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, during the hearings upon the farm tenancy bill there were frequently injected into the testimony and discussion and statements which indicated that in certain sections of the country only a small amount of capital was necessary to transform hopeless and submerged tenants into happy, industrious, and contented landowners. As I recall, the gentleman from Tennesse [Mr. MITCHELL] asserted with confidence before the committee that many tenants in his section of the State with an operating base of $2,500 could conquer and hurdle the farm hazards of today and ultimately reach the peak of comfort, happiness, and prosperity.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON], following in the wake of such unusual optimism offers an amendment to this bill limiting the loan that any one person should receive to $6,500. Mr. Chairman, I do not question the good faith of my distinguished colleague from Texas. The gentleman begs the question when he attempts to influence this House, citing the Home Owners' Loan Corporation loans and emergency crop loans upon which there is a loan limitation. You and I know those were emergency measures, designed to aid the little fellow in immediate and dire distress. The policy we pursue today is being followed under the theory that it will become a basic and fundamental part of our law, and the chances are that it will run the gamut of centuries.

I confess that I am not entirely familiar with all the conditions which exist in the various farming communities of America. No doubt, as the distinguished Speaker of this House said yesterday, that there is a great satisfaction in knowing that you own acres of ground or that you own a lot. It may be that there is a great satisfaction in going out and building a little log house to start with. In that picture there is a lot of sentiment; there is a lot of feeling that is worth while to the future of America. But at the same time this is a cold, hard, practical world, and unless there is something more than the little log house in the woods the man who is given the opportunity to build that house with the taxpayers' money will ultimately fail, and the Government will lose.

It is obvious that the gentleman from Texas is not familiar with the corn and wheat belt of Illinois. Let me remind my colleagues that the average size family farm in Illinois is 156 acres. If the $6,000 is the limit that any individual may borrow, the committee in my section of the country would be compelled to look for farm lands selling at approximately $35 per acre. That would mean the selection of a farm in my section of the State which would materially handicap payment in full by the prospective purchaser, and it would also eliminate a certain type of high-class tenant who would not care to till that kind of soil. Our rich productive lands sell from $75 to $150 per acre even in these days of economic distress.

The records of the hearings disclose that it will take from $12,000 to $16,000 to finance adequately the purchase of the average farm in my part of Illinois, as contemplated under this bill.

If the people of my section are to be foreclosed from participating in this fund, I prefer that the matter be done through the administration agency. Let it not be said here today that by adopting this amendment practically half of this Nation would be enjoined from participating in the benefits of this bill.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is manifest, of course, but in the light of the other provisions of the pending bill, that purpose means far more than is manifest upon its face.

This bill authorizes to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the first year of the operation of the plan, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the second year, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for the third. The maximum that this could mean in appropriations would be $85,000,000, or less than $30 per tenant farmer.

There are 3,059 agricultural counties in the United States. Ten million dollars would not buy one farm in each of these counties at a cost of $3,500. Unless this bill means a start on the road to farm ownership for at least one tenant farmer in every agricultural county of the Nation, its blessings will be so rare as to be almost indiscernible. Three thousand tenant farmers benefited out of three million would be very few.

Naturally, those sections of the country where the prevailing prices of land are high, will contend that so low a ceiling as $3,500 per farm would not enable a tenant farmer to purchase many acres of their high-priced land. This would be perfectly true. But if their land prices can be justified upon the ground of real value, then a smaller number of such acres would be equal in productivity to a larger number of cheaper acres. The purpose of this bill is not to provide the tenant farmers of America with luxurious homes and splendidly improved farms. As I envision it, it is to bring to our tenant farmers the opportunity to work out their own salvation on good land, according to a fair plan, shot through with hope of independence and constantly improving surroundings and financial condition. [Applause.] With all of this I am in hearty accord, and wish to spread the benefits of the bill as widely as possible. The larger the investment in the individual project, the smaller the number of projects, is as inexorably true as mathematics.

While I am cordially in favor of the pending bill, I am not unmindful of the even greater need of the farmers of this Nation, owners and tenants alike, for a sure and ready market for their produce, at parity prices with the price curves of the commodities they must buy—prices which will assure them reasonable profit upon their investment of money, time, brawn, and brains. [Applause.]

This transcendent need of fair markets for farm products is to be taken care of in the general farm-relief bill which I hope will soon be brought before the House and passed. Without such a companion measure we will not be conferring a real benefit upon any person by giving him title to a farm. Without such provision, farms are liabilities, not assets. It is the absence of fair marketing facilities which has caused the present plight of agriculture.

Would you really help the farmer? Then insure fair prices for the products of the soil. In no other way can you enable him to buy the things he needs in a tariff-protected market, discriminated against as he is in the matter of freight rates, and paying tribute on every hand to those who demand and get high prices for the things and services the farmers must have. [Applause.]

Give the American farmer fair prices for all the things he can produce, and you have solved the farm problem. [Applause.]

In passing this bill, today, let us each and everyone resolve to hasten as much as possible the passage of the general farm-relief bill of 1937, without which the pending bill, as beneficent as its purposes are, will fail of their accomplishment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

EQUITABLE DISTRIBUTION OF LOANS

SEC. 4. In making loans under this title, the amount which is devoted to such purpose during any fiscal year shall be distributed equitably among the several States and Territories on the basis of farm population and the prevalence of tenancy, as determined by the Secretary.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from Kansas making the suggestion that I have not presented to the House today the provisions of the proposal which I am advocating for the relief of the farm population of America. I may say to the gentleman that instead of creating an entirely new agency with thousands of additional Government employees my proposal provides that the General Land Office, which is one of the oldest departments of the Government, shall proceed, not to buy new land as is provided in this bill to be given to especially favored farmers, but to buy liens on farm mortgages. It further provides that the Government shall in each instance proceed to liquidate these liens, with the consent and approval of the mortgagor. Mr. Chairman, I call attention of the membership of the House to the fact that the average farm mortgage today is approximately $3,500 and that the average size of the farm under mortgage is approximately 150 acres. Under my bill in every instance where the mortgagor so desires he may liquidate the farm mortgage and shall have the right to a free homestead.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, it is useless to try to speak adequately on a subject as broad as this in 3 minutes, so I shall confine my remarks to only two or three things.

In the first place, as has been stated so many times today, it is obvious that the problem of farm tenancy can never be solved until the general problem of agriculture is solved. The only contribution I want to make to this thought is that I doubt it will be solved until we take speculation out of the entire process of the marketing of farm products, so the gap between what the farmer receives and the consumer pays can be closed. So long as eggs, for example, sell for 15 cents or 18 cents a dozen during the heavy laying season when the poultrymen have plenty of eggs to sell and then climb to 28 cents or 30 cents a dozen wholesale when the commission men and cold-storage houses have already bought in most of the eggs—so long as this condition persists our farmers will have a hard time.

In the second place, I doubt if any class of people in this Nation has been so greatly harmed by the power of the financial interests of the Nation to create and then to destroy bank credit as the agricultural population. I believe something must be done about this question before the problem of the farmer will be solved.

In the third place, I shall vote for this bill and do it with some enthusiasm in spite of the fact it is literally only a mere drop in the bucket. I shall vote for it because it sets forth a principle of American Government, namely, that the American Government will not from this time forward be satisfied to see a large portion of our agricultural population forced out of the class of substantial owners of land into a subject class of tenants and kept there. We are, I trust, going to pursue this course until we have restored to the position of security on their own land our present tenant-farming population. It will be a big job.

Finally, for my part I shall not be sorry if the Senate bill should prevail over the bill we have before us. Since we are admittedly only making a start at this great problem it is most important that we do it right. The danger of speculation and a speculative rise in land values and the danger that the new farm owners will have a difficult time to discharge their indebtedness and make a success of their new venture must be faced. We cannot forget either the danger of the new owner being deprived of his land by action of speculators or former creditors before he has fairly got started. I cannot but believe that the straightforward way to avoid these dangers and to work out the problem with the greatest benefit to our hardest pressed people is by the simple process of direct purchase of land by the Government and resale to our tenant farmers on the easiest possible long-time terms with provisions for proper land use and the assistance of the Department should he need it. I think, at least, we should provide that all land now in the possession of the Government, and much of it is in the possession of the Government, should be disposed of on this basis, with a long-time payment at very easy terms to our tenant population.

Therefore I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] when it is offered.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 5. To carry out the provisions of this title, there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, not to exceed $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and not to exceed $50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLMER: Page 5, line 18, after the period add a new sentence, as follows: "Provided, That not in excess of 5 percent of the amount of money herein authorized to be appropriated may be used for administrative purposes."

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take the 5 minutes allotted to me in the discussion of this amendment but I call your attention to the fact that the amount of money appropriated is very limited, and that it has been estimated it will amount to only approximately $3,000 per county if distributed throughout the United States. Since we are going to have only $10,000,000 for the first year, I do not want to see any substantial proportion of this appropriation wiped out and dissipated in overhead expense.

Frankly, I do not know what it would cost to administer this bill. I have endeavored to get some information upon the subject without any success. However, I do want to limit the amount which can be expended for overhead and administration, so I address the amendment to your consideration. Certainly 5 percent is the maximum which should be expended under any circumstances. For that matter, I see no reason why 2 or 3 percent should not be sufficient.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Is the gentleman's amendment worded "not to exceed 5 percent"?

Mr. COLMER. "Not to exceed 5 percent" is correct.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is it anticipated the expense of administration of the first section will come out of this appropriation, or is there another appropriation for the administrative costs?

Mr. JONES. The administrative costs of the bill will come out of the funds appropriated in the bill. The bill is complete in that regard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: Page 5, line 16, strike out "$25,000,000" and insert "$15,000,000", and in line 17, after the word "exceed", strike out "$50,000,000" and insert "$25,000,000."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in all seriousness. I have had the privilege of studying the hearings, the report of the President's committee, and the bill. I am so much in accord with what the distinguished chairman of the committee said yesterday in his opening statement, and I feel so much that this is the creation of a laboratory for the purpose of studying a social land problem, that I do not desire to have $85,000,000 spent in the building of a laboratory. I think the bill which will have to come hereafter and which will come after some experimentation has been carried on should carry the big appropriations. When the tenant problem is adequately legislated, billions of dollars will be involved. This bill does not tackle the real factors involved.

In my State I have 37,000 farm tenants out of a total of 196,000 farmers. The greatest amount which the tenants can possibly hope to get under this bill is $60 per farm family. I have taken the floor here to indicate my willingness to go along with this bill to create the laboratory, although I disapprove of certain provisions in it, but it is only the creation of a laboratory. I do not want the people in my State, either the tenants or those who may be tenants hereafter, to get the idea that this bill is being enacted to give them relief, because it will not. That fact is too evident to claim otherwise. It is only the beginning of research.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand, this is to be a laboratory; but if it works, we have no money. We have got to get the money somewhere. Will it be the purpose then to adopt the Frazier-Lemke bill as a corollary to print the money to do the job which this bill contemplates?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have no idea what a future Congress will do in passing legislation dealing with this problem when the experimental work has been carried on and when the economic conditions relating to agriculture forces that Congress to act, but I think this Committee on Agriculture has done one of the finest jobs in connection with creating a laboratory that has ever been performed by any House committee. I do believe sincerely that the amount of the appropriation in this section is entirely too much for the work that is to be carried on. I wish that this amendment could be adopted here today, and I offer it in all sincerity. The popular thing to do would be to offer an amendment asking for greater appropriations.

Suppose you were a board of directors, would you spend $85,000,000 on a laboratory, or would you spend a reasonable amount and after that laboratory works out the problem that is before you, then proceed to build a plant to carry on the job which has been demonstrated as practicable by the laboratory? These are the things that have been done by organized industry through years of experience, and I hope we will not go ahead and squander $25,000,000 or $35,000,000 unnecessarily, when we could proceed to spend a proper amount and then come along with a bill which would tackle the problem that is unravelled by reason of the demonstration of the laboratory. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title II and III be read as titles.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—REHABILITATION LOANS

BORROWERS AND TERMS

SECTION 21. (a) The Secretary shall have power to make loans to eligible individuals for the purchase of livestock, farm equipment, supplies, and for other farm needs, and for the refinancing of indebtedness, and for family subsistence.

(b) Loans made under this section shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of 3 percent per annum, and shall have maturities not in excess of 5 years. Such loans shall be payable in such installments as the Secretary may provide in the loan agreement. All loans made under this title shall be secured by a chattel mortgage, a lien on crops, and an assignment of proceeds from the sale of agricultural products, or by any one or more of the foregoing.

(c) Only farm owners, farm tenants, farm laborers, sharecroppers, and other individuals who obtain, or who recently obtained the major portion of their income from farming operations and who cannot obtain credit on reasonable terms from any federally incorporated lending institution, shall be eligible for loans under this section.

DEBT ADJUSTMENT

SEC. 22. The Secretary shall have power to assist in the voluntary adjustment of indebtedness between farm debtors and their creditors and may cooperate with and pay the whole or part of the expenses of State, Territorial, and local agencies and committees engaged in such debt adjustment. He is also authorized to continue and carry out undertakings with respect to farm debt adjustment uncompleted at the time when appropriations for the purpose of this section are first available. Services furnished by the Secretary under this section shall be without charge to the debtor or creditor.

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 23. (a) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, the balances of funds available to the Secretary for loans and relief to farmers, pursuant to Executive Order No. 7530 of December 31, 1936, as amended by Executive Order No. 7557 of February 19, 1937, which are unexpended on June 30, 1937, are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title.

(b) The President is authorized to allot to the Secretary, out of appropriations made for relief or work relief for any fiscal year ending prior to July 1, 1939, such sums as he determines to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this title and to enable the Secretary to carry out such other forms of rehabilitation of individuals eligible under this title to receive loans as may be authorized by law and designated in the Executive order directing the allotment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, this will be positively my first and last appearance today, but I must go on record on this important legislation. I shall support this bill, because it is said to be a step in the right direction, but I am afraid it will be a very short step in a very long direction.

Farm tenancy is not the cause—and I shall not attempt to state the cause—of the present predicament of agriculture in the United States. Mortgages are not the cause of it. Some gentleman remarked this afternoon that in his opinion the trouble with the farmers is that they are overmortgaged, but I believe that we could give every farm tenant in the United States a free farm and cancel every dollar's worth of farm mortgages in the United States, and if we leave in operation the causes which have bankrupted agriculture and made mortgages and tenants, history would repeat itself, and in a few years more we would be confronted with the same conditions with which we are confronted today.

I think one trouble with the farmer is that he is now, in a highly organized society, the last survivor of ragged individualism. He is not organized and apparently he does not believe in organization. I have dumbfounded farmers by saying that, in my judgment, they could take a leaf from the book of labor and organize like labor has and like every other interest has, and agriculture in this country would begin to get somewhere. The farmers built Chicago but they do not own it. They built a lot of New York but they do not own any of it. They toiled and produced that others might own cities. It is a singular anomaly that the people of the United States who produce all of its food cannot make a living out of it. Is not that a singular thing?

One hundred years ago it is said that it took about 80 percent of the people of the country to produce food for the entire population. Today it takes only 30 percent, and even that 30 percent apparently cannot make a living out of it. Agriculture was bankrupt before the depression. Agriculture in this country struck bottom during what is said to have been the most prosperous era in this or any other country in the world. It is incomprehensible. There must be a lot of causes. I am satisfied this bill does not touch it even if it were on a much larger scale than it is. We have to go deeper than this, and outside of this, before we can arrive at the causes and find a solution for the incomprehensible thing presented in this country, that agriculture, the basic industry that produces all of the food of the people is in a condition of chronic bankruptcy and that hundreds of thousands of the farmers themselves must be fed out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. Chairman, even if I cannot lay my finger on the trouble or name the remedy, I could if my voice reached far enough, do some good by showing what the trouble is not. I am afraid that this and other farm legislation focuses too much attention or gives too much weight to farm tenancy and farm debts as causes of the decline of agriculture in the economic scale and by comparison with industry.

Take for example the great farming State of Oklahoma—and it is a rich farming State. That State was virgin territory only 45 years ago when it was thrown open for settlement and the people were given free farms. They got a start from taw, so to speak, with a clean slate. It looked like the ideal situation for a great experiment. Yet the farm census of 1935 shows that more than 61 percent of the farmers of Oklahoma are tenants, and probably the majority of the rest of them are mortgaged. It is not much different in Kansas, one of the great bread-basket States. Kansas is a comparatively new State. It has practically all been settled in my lifetime, but 44 percent of the farmers of Kansas are tenants. In my own State, Colorado, a new State, the percentage of tenancy is 39. In Iowa, the great corn State, it is 49. These States and many others did not begin with tenants and mortgages. They began with the owners of free soil, and now what is to be done about them has become a major national question.

Another puzzling feature of the unfavorable situation of agriculture is that the growth of tenancy and debt among the farmers has been contemporaneous with a period of the greatest industrial expansion and increase in material wealth generally in the history of the world. On the surface it would seem inevitable that agriculture would benefit by the growth of such a market for its products. I have already mentioned the fact that a hundred years ago it took 80 percent of the people to produce the food supply of the country. If now that percentage has dwindled to 30 and the other 70 percent are in the consumers' class, that is seemingly another factor that ought to have contributed to the prosperity of agriculture.

Yet in the face of this highly favorable combination of conditions, the decline of agriculture has extended over a long period of time. For example, in 1880, 25 percent of the farmers were tenants. In 1900 the percentage had grown to 35. During that period of 20 years the number of tenant farmers increased by over 1,000,000, although during that time 300,000,000 acres of new free land were settled. Even the giving away by the Government of a vast rich public domain did not stop the growth of tenancy among the American farmers.

From 1900 to 1935 the percentage of tenancy increased to 42 and the total number of tenants in the United States as shown by the census of 1935 was 2,865,000 out of a grand total of 6,812,000 farmers.

So it appears that for nearly 60 years, and under what would appear to be the most favorable conditions in all history, the great basic industry of agriculture in the United States has steadily lost ground. It has been progressive and continuous under all changes and conditions and apparently it has affected agriculture alone. Putting out $85,000,000 over a period of 3 years will not make much of a dent in this situation.

The growth in farm indebtedness has been no less alarming. In March 1933 farm mortgages amounted to around $12,000,000,000. This administration has put out over $4,000,000,000 to relieve the farm-debt situation with interest as low as 3½ and 4 percent per annum.

In arguing that tenancy and debt are not responsible for the economic condition of agriculture, I am not to be understood as condoning or minimizing these conditions. On the contrary, I have supported every farm-aid measure which has come within my reach through the last five sessions of Congress, and some of these measures, in my opinion, embodied ideas which were at least partial solutions. I refer particularly to the Agricultural Adjustment Act and kindred separate measures for the control of production and increase in farm prices.

In the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee on a resolution directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate farm-machinery prices, it developed that while production in farm machinery declined 80 percent at the depth of the depression the prices of farm machinery had only declined 6 percent. Translated into the terms used by the critics of crop control, the Farm Machinery Trust plowed under four rows out of five, by which means they were enabled to maintain prices. The farmers could take a leaf from that book.

Overspeculation in land prices, charged as one of the causes of the decline in agriculture, no doubt had some place, but, as I have pointed out, the process of decline has been continuous over a long period of time and when speculation could not have been a factor.

From my observation I would say that no one factor has contributed more than the inability of the farmer to protect himself from and against the markets and to successfully market his products. The major part of his crops are thrown on the market in a short period of time, overloading and breaking it down. The prices were always highest when he had the least to sell. Speculation in the price of his crops has cost him a lot more than speculation in the price of his land. Acting as an individual against the organized traders in his products he had no chance. Producing all the food in the country, he had no voice in the bargain. The buyer fixed the price of everything he sold and the seller fixed the price of everything he bought, and that tells a lot of the farmer's story in a sentence.

Surpluses, the mass-production of machinery, is another cause. Perhaps the ever normal granary would help some with the problem of fat years and lean years. In some way the farmer must handle surpluses. Marketing agreements in which he would have a voice in the distribution and the prices of his products, cooperative marketing, would help. His business must be regulated. That is the end toward which he must strive.

It is not disputed that some of the acts of Congress, like the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the cotton, tobacco, and sugar acts, did much to pull the basic farm commodities of the country out of the hole. It is a singular thing that measures which are good, which achieve such results, must be thrown in the discard. They were good for the emergency, but bad as permanent measures. I have never quite reconciled myself to that viewpoint. It is possible they required modifications, but I still have an unshaken conviction that in the farm legislation which was declared invalid by the Supreme Court, there was embodied practical methods for the regulation and stabilization of agriculture, and that no successful farm program hereafter can be wholly free from the influence of those measures.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and on all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, in order to ask the chairman of the committee one question with regard to the provisions of section 22, page 6, as to voluntary adjustment of indebtedness between farm debtors and their creditors. Does that include any class of farm debtors?

Mr. JONES. Yes; it is not limited to those involved in this bill. That is a general provision, a continuation of the present activity.

Mr. GREEVER. It means that any farm debtor who wants to compromise his debts will have the opportunity under the authority of this bill?

Mr. JONES. Yes; and some very fine work has been done along that line in adjusting farm mortgages.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the title just read and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government at the present time is spending approximately $1,000 per person for each person who is on the relief rolls of this Nation. I contend that for a small amount additional this Nation, under a sound national land program, can completely rehabilitate upon a self-sustaining basis not one individual but an entire farm family. I contend that the bill now before this membership will require an expenditure of approximately $7,500 per farm family, and they will not be in a condition of complete economic independence after it has been expended, but will be $7,500, or 100 percent deeper in debt. Under my proposal, for every $3,500 or less expended, we will completely relieve one family of its entire farm-mortgage indebtedness, and will also give a farm to an additional family.

In other words, for less than $1,750 per family we are permitted to grant complete economic independence to a complete farm family unit of this Nation. In doing so we will be going in complete harmony with the traditional Jeffersonian policies which we all claim to hold in such high regard.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the indulgence of the Committee today. I have not done this deliberately to take your time, but to tell you I firmly believe that unless we do reestablish the farm population of this Nation to a condition of economic independence our free institutions cannot survive.

I am offering to you a program that is sound; a program that is right; a program that is in harmony with the true principles of free government; a program that is in harmony with the divine laws of God and the eternal laws of Nature. This bill H. R. 6748 and the committee reports which have been prepared after months and years of laborious study and thought are now before the Public Lands Committee of this House, where they rightfully belong. I sincerely trust that we will have the cooperation of the chairman and the membership of that committee in bringing that bill before this House, where it can receive the same consideration this bill has received during the last 2 days.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III—RETIREMENT OF SUBMARGINAL LAND

PROGRAM

SECTION 31. The Secretary is authorized and directed to develop a program of land conservation and land utilization, including the retirement of lands which are submarginal or not primarily suitable for cultivation, in order thereby to correct maladjustments in land use, and thus assist in controlling soil erosion, reforestation, preserving natural resources, mitigating floods, preventing impairment of dams and reservoirs, conserving surface and subsurface moisture, protecting the watersheds of navigable streams, and protecting the public lands, health, safety, and welfare.

POWERS UNDER LAND PROGRAM

SEC. 32. To effectuate the program provided for in section 31, the Secretary is authorized—

(a) To acquire by purchase, gift, or devise, or by transfer from any agency of the United States or from any State, Territory, or political subdivision, submarginal land and land not primarily suitable for cultivation, and interests in and options on such land. Such property may be acquired subject to any reservations, outstanding estates, interests, easements, or other encumbrances which the Secretary determines will not interfere with the utilization of such property for the purposes of this title.

(b) To protect, improve, develop, and administer any property so acquired and to construct such structures thereon as may be necessary to adapt it to its most beneficial use.

(c) To sell, exchange, lease, or otherwise dispose of, with or without a consideration, any property so acquired, under such terms and conditions as he deems will best accomplish the purposes of this title, but any sale, exchange, or grant shall be made only to public authorities and agencies and only on condition that the property is used for public purposes. The Secretary may recommend to the President other Federal, State, or Territorial agencies to administer such property, together with the conditions of use and administration which will best serve the purposes of a land-conservation and land-utilization program, and the President is authorized to transfer such property to such agencies.

(d) With respect to any land, or any interest therein, acquired by or transferred to the Secretary for the purposes of this title, to make dedications or grants, in his discretion, for any public purpose, and to grant licenses and easements upon such terms as he deems reasonable.

(e) To cooperate with Federal, State, Territorial, and other public agencies in developing plans for a program of land conservation and land utilization, to conduct surveys and investigations relating to conditions and factors affecting, and the methods of accomplishing most effectively the purposes of this title, and to disseminate information concerning these activities.

(f) To make such rules and regulations as he deems necessary to prevent trespasses and otherwise regulate the use and occupancy of property acquired by, or transferred to, the Secretary for the purposes of this title, in order to conserve and utilize it or advance the purposes of this title. Any violation of such rules and regulations shall be punished as prescribed in section 5388 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 104).

PAYMENTS TO COUNTIES

SEC. 33. As soon as practicable after the end of each calendar year, the Secretary shall pay to the county in which any land is held by the Secretary under this title 25 percent of the net revenues received by the Secretary from the use of the land during such year. In case the land is situated in more than one county the amount to be paid shall be divided equitably among the respective counties. Payments to counties under this section shall be made on the condition that they are used for school or road purposes, or both. This section shall not be construed to apply to amounts received from the sale of land.

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 34. To carry out the provisions of this title there is authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and not to exceed $20,000,000 for each of the 2 fiscal years thereafter.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LORD: Page 10, strike out lines 3 to 14, inclusive, and insert:

"TAXATION

"SEC. 33. The property acquired by the Secretary to carry out the provisions of this title shall be exempt from taxation by any State or political subdivision thereof, but the Secretary shall pay, in respect of such property (except property used solely for administrative purposes), to the State or political subdivision thereof concerned, an amount which the Secretary determines to be fair and reasonable but not more than the property taxes (including special and other assessments) which would be payable to such State or political subdivision if such property were owned by a private individual. The payment of such amount shall be made on the day upon which taxes would otherwise be due and payable.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the House to section 33, on page 10. This provides that 25 percent of the profits from the submarginal lands purchased by the Government shall go to the counties as taxes. The submarginal land as purchased will not pay any income whatever, but will take out of the tax rolls and from the school districts and the highway districts land that is now on the assessment roll and paying taxes.

It will add to the taxes of all other farm lands and all other property in the district. They will have to bear the burden of taxation that was formerly assessed on these particular lands.

In the State of New York the State buys land for reforestation. The State buys the land and it is assessed for what the State pays for it, and the State pays taxes for highways and schools on the same basis as other real property in the district. I do not propose to assess the land but I have taken this language from a bill which the Secretary presented to us. I propose that the Secretary decide what is the fair and equitable tax for the Government to pay to the various counties and school districts. On this basis they will receive payment, and the extra burden will not fall upon the taxpayers for these various purposes. In other words, in this bill we are trying to relieve farmers and at the same time we are adding on to the tax rate of all other farmers in the tax district in order to do it.

In addition, in most districts where the land is purchased there is bonded indebtedness and the balance of the taxpayers will have to bear the extra burden that has been assessed against the land purchased by the Government.

This is to my mind very unfair to the farmers and taxpayers of our Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this title and all amendments thereto close in 9 minutes, 3 minutes to be allowed each of the three gentlemen now seeking recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: On page 9, line 2, after the word "purposes", strike out the period and insert "or to tenants who can qualify as such under the terms of this act."

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment to this particular title with the thought in mind that submarginal lands should be available for resale to tenants whenever the Secretary of Agriculture thinks that it is advisable that such action proceed. I do not expect to press the amendment; in fact, I intend to withdraw it because, by virtue of having discussed the situation with the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. JONES] it is my understanding that in all probability legislation dealing with the disposition of submarginal land will be forthcoming. I do, however, expect, as I originally intended, to offer an amendment to title IV with reference to the transfer of lands now held by the Federal land banks to the Department of Agriculture for resale by the Secretary to purchasers on a contract basis; and when we reach that point I desire to call the matter to the attention of the members of the committee. I believe firmly that it constitutes one of two major plans by which we can solve the problem of tenancy in the United States. This particular procedure has been followed with some degree of success in other sections of the world, and this is especially true of the Free State of Ireland. I believe that when we are experimenting with a proposition so vast as this that we should incorporate in any model project, if such it can be called, the various provisions that might prove satisfactory with a view to advancing each of them to such a point that we can decide for ourselves after that experimental period which is the most satisfactory.

Keeping in mind the fact that I shall offer this amendment to title IV when we reach that particular juncture in the reading of the bill, I ask unanimous consent at this time, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 10, line 13, after the word "both", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the words "or applied to sinking funds for the retirement of bonds or warrants legally issued and outstanding at the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is to page 10 of the bill. The sentence to be amended reads as follows:

Payments to counties under this section shall be made on the condition that they are used for school or road purposes, or both.

My amendment adds to that the authority for this money to be applied also to the sinking funds for retirement of bonds and warrants legally issued and outstanding at the time this act becomes law.

A good deal of the debate on this bill has been confined to the subject of the farm-tenancy program in title I. As far as I am concerned titles II and III are equally important in the Great Plains area.

Rehabilitation loans and the submarginal land buying program are equally important with the tenancy program. The rehabilitation grants have kept thousands of farmer families alive the past winter and the loans are giving them a chance to get going again. The marginal land-purchase program opens the way to a wiser land use. These things are continued under titles II and III and my desire is to have future operations in these fields profit from what experience has been had.

If we limit the use of this 25 percent of the revenue from these purchased lands to school and road purposes we are going to throw the entire burden of present bonds and warrants onto the remaining landholding taxpayers.

I have seen how that has worked out in two or three submarginal areas in my district. We have a constitutional limit on levies as well as total debt. In counties where those limits have been reached, it is not only unfair but impractical to throw onto remaining taxpayers the capital debts that have been based on an assessed valuation that included the lands this purchase program will remove.

It means an unbalanced tax structure that is unworkable. It will relieve the road and school funds, but where the limit has been reached on sinking fund levies, you cannot shift or adjust the situation. But if this revenue from the grazing areas or from this submarginal area can be applied to outstanding, legally issued bonds and warrants it will contribute much to the workability of the bill.

I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Chairman, as to the general philosophy of this bill, it is a "hope bill" in that we hope it will be administered in a manner that will work out beneficially to the farm-tenant class in this country.

As far as I am concerned I hope that the county committees devote their attention to the young, well-qualified people in the counties who will make good, and they do not spend too much time rehabilitating farmers who have spent 20 years as tenants and failed to make good. It seems strange to me that the Congress would authorize the loaning of this vast sum of money which admittedly will not scratch the surface of the tenant problem without first taking into consideration these things: First, the farmer who is still operating his own place and must have stable prices over a period of years to continue to operate. Second, the great number of farmers in the drought area who have been dispossessed of their property although they had demonstrated, without doubt, their ability to farm with favorable rainfall and prices. Third, sufficient and reasonable farm credit to those farmers who are able to put up margin both on the purchase of land and operation of their farm.

It seems to me that this class of farmer should receive first attention before we go into the business of setting up tenant farmers for whom the Government is required to pay the full purchase price of land and then loan the full amount necessary to start and operate the farm.

However, if the county committees pick out the best-trained and best-equipped young people in the counties to give them the advantage of this bill it can be of great benefit, because the boy and girl vocationally trained for life on the farm will make a success.

This, however, is not the reason for my taking the floor. Three years ago I started talking about the Dust Bowl and wind erosion in the panhandle of Oklahoma and in the Southwest. I introduced several bills on the subject—H. R. 5961 that provides for an appropriation for the Secretary of Agriculture to create a special "dust bowl" area in five Southwestern States and for the establishment of grass-breeding and experiment projects; H. R. 5959, authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to create a special "dust bowl" area in Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico, and Texas; H. R. 2286, making an appropriation for emergency relief in the stricken agricultural areas; H. R. 2287, that would provide for a 10-year program of purchasing pasture land under the authority of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. The distinguished and able chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has also worked on this subject during this time. At last a bill that covers the subject of buying submarginal land is before this House. The provisions with reference to the submarginal land program are contained in title III. I hope the House realizes the importance of title III.

Unquestionably the Government policy of granting homesteads and establishing small units in the western plains area was the cause of economic distress to the homesteader and destruction of land. Many Members cannot yet distinguish between the dust storms of recent years and the sand storms we have always had in the West. Sand storms are caused by high winds. The dust storms are caused by fine silty soil that has been cultivated, then dried out by months of burning sun. This dust will rise miles in the air with even the slightest breeze, and when this soil is gone the bare subsoil in this country is worthless. Not only does it destroy the land that has been cultivated, but it is more unbearable than a flood or fire to the people for hundreds of miles around. The dust cannot be extinguished like a fire nor does it reach a peak and recede like a flood. It is a constant menace day after day and when the rain clears the atmosphere it is likely to return a few days after. So I have sought legislation from the Congress for 3 years to tackle this problem. A bill that would commit the Government to buy this land, restore it to its economic use of grazing and remove this land as a menace to surrounding land and the inhabitants of the country for a radius of several hundred miles. This area is a sore that has spread and is gradually increasing in spite of all private and Government efforts made so far to stop it. And within the course of our lifetime at its present rate of expansion we could see the area between the Rocky Mountains and the Mississippi change from the greatest agricultural area in the world to a desert.

The Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. M. L. Wilson, when testifying before the Committee on Flood Control, substantiated the necessity of this land-buying program. While the testimony is not available in printed form as yet, I may quote him, in substance, as saying that several million acres in this Southwest country were so badly eroded that there is no incentive for a private individual to restore this land to economic uses. He also agreed with me that in many instances, in spite of the amount of rainfall, the soil in this area is of a type, and the velocity of the wind is so high, that once the land is denuded, regardless of rainfall, nature alone will not cover this land with vegetation. The drifts of soil along the fence lines and in hummocks in the fields must be worked into the soil. The soil must be cultivated before any vegetation can start to grow. Once you have a crop started, a vegetative cover, then the regrassing process, which will take some 10 to 15 years, according to a statement made before the Flood Control Committee by Mr. H. H. Bennett, Director of the Soil Conservation Service, can begin in earnest.

In summary, this land must be purchased by the Government under the provisions of this section of the bill: First, to save the eroded land itself; second, to save adjacent farm land that has been carefully farmed, that is now being carefully farmed, but will be ruined if these fields are not properly cared for; third, to save the people for a radius of several hundred miles from the discomfort and economic loss caused by repeated dust storms; fourth, to check the constant threat of turning a vast area between the Rocky Mountains and the Mississippi River into a desert.

This section of the bill to me is the most important not only to my district but to the Nation. I hope that it will be in the final bill as passed by the Congress and that appropriations will be made immediately to carry out the program as authorized.

Mr. Chairman, let me, in closing, urge my colleagues to support this bill containing this program of land purchased by the Government to obtain the proper utilization of land. From the wording of the section I know every effort will be made by the Department of Agriculture to cooperate with the State agencies such as have already been set up in my State of Oklahoma to carry out this program.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 48. The Secretary is authorized and empowered to bid for and purchase at any foreclosure or other sale, or otherwise to acquire property pledged or mortgaged to secure any loan or other indebtedness owing under this act; to accept title to any property so purchased or acquired in the name of the United States; to operate or lease such property for such period as may be deemed necessary or advisable to protect the investment therein; and to sell or otherwise dispose of such property so purchased or acquired upon such terms and for such considerations as the Secretary shall determine to be reasonable, but subject to the reservation of mineral rights provided for in section 44.

No officer, attorney, or employee of the United States shall, directly or indirectly, be the beneficiary of or receive any fee, commission, gift, or other consideration for or in connection with any transaction or business of the United States under this act other than such salary, fee, or other compensation as he may receive from the United States. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

EXTENSION TO TERRITORIES

SEC. 50. The provisions of this act shall extend to the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 51. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BOILEAU: Page 11, line 5, after the word "appoint", strike out line 5 and all of line 6 down to and including the word "of."

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, this amendment would knock out of the bill that language which would suspend the operation of the civil-service and classification laws. In the bill as presented by the committee there is a provision to the effect that the Secretary will have power to appoint, without regard to civil-service laws and regulations, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary. The amendment I have offered would strike out the words "without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and fix the compensation of"; so that the sentence would read as follows:

The Secretary would have the power to appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary.

The elimination of the language exempting the civil-service laws and regulations from applying to this section would mean all persons appointed and salaries paid them would be governed entirely by the civil-service laws and the Classification Act.

This amendment is the subject of a minority report signed by the minority members of the Committee on Agriculture, including the Republican members of that committee and myself. I submit there is no justification for knocking out the civil service so far as this bill is concerned. If you do not believe in the civil service, if you want to eliminate it entirely, then in the name of justice bring in a bill here that will eliminate it; but if you do believe in the civil service, or if you lack the courage to bring in a bill which would outlaw it, then in the name of fair play do not take potshots at the civil service every chance you get.

The civil service has not been perfect. No one who is interested in that system believes it has been. There is chance for improvement in the civil-service system, but the way to improve it is to perfect the system and not make it inapplicable to various bills as they come on the floor of this House for consideration from time to time.

I submit if you permit this bill to be passed in its present language, it means that the Democratic Party is against civil service, and the Democratic Party in all these years has never adopted a national platform in which it dared come out in opposition to the civil service. There was some justification a few years ago when emergency legislation was being brought before the Congress to provide that the civil-service laws should not apply, but there is no such justification now. The emergency has passed and there is no longer any justification whatsoever for providing that the civil-service laws and regulations shall not apply to this or any other bill which may be brought before the Congress.

In conclusion may I say that the American people have a right to believe because of the recent activities of the Congress that the Democratic Party is not very friendly toward civil service, and if we allow the language to remain in this bill, you cannot get away from the charge that you are not only unfriendly to the civil service but you may rightfully be charged with being an enemy of the civil service.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all speeches in connection with amendments to this title of the bill be limited to 3 minutes each.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 6 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] for the reason if we make it possible in this bill for the civil-service rules and regulations to apply that would result in sending out over the country to appraise farms and buy them for these tenant farmers some fellow who never saw a farm, who does not know anything about the value of land, and who is thoroughly incompetent. As a matter of fact, most of the civil-service employees are. They get in through some hocus-pocus and do not care very much for the Congress or the Government just so they can hold their jobs and we are kind enough to continue to make them appropriations. They are named all wrong. They are hardly civil, and for their actual service they are considerably overpaid. I think the more often we leave them out the better off we will be. So much for that, because I know the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this bill. Nearly every Member who has spoken on this bill has offered a reason for so doing or a hope it might turn out good as his excuse for doing so.

You know this country has been in the habit of subsidizing some interest that gets into distress for a good many years. I remember over 20 years ago when I was a Member of this body we subsidized the shipping industry because it was said they were not self-sustaining and could not compete with the rest of the shipping countries of the world. Then in recent years when everybody and all business concerns went down on their knees and were begging for help and their very lives and were ready and willing to give up half of all they had if the President would save the other half, we commenced a free use of legislative subsidies. We subsidized all the banks in order that the poor, prostrate things might rise on both of their feet and open their doors in safety. We also subsidized the railroads of this country in order that they could roll their cars on the railroad tracks from one end to the other. We subsidized building and loan associations. We subsidized insurance companies in order that they could have the assurance they could insure you. We subsidized mines and factories. In fact we subsidized enterprises and businesses that came begging, crying, and kneeling at our feet.

Therefore, any time any industry in this country has become distressed financially, for a good many years we have just subsidized them. These industries are the comparatively small ones. The largest industry we have in the country is farming. There are something like 10,000,000 farmers in this country engaged in that business, which is a lot of stockholders. Approximately one-third of this number are tenant farmers.

Now we come in with some little peewee program and hope we may pry in and lend some money to subsidize the broken-down farmers who went broke for the same reason the banks, the railroads, and the insurance companies, and so forth, went broke, and for no other reason.

If we will just be as charitable and as liberal to these fellows who really want to farm, who really want to engage in the largest industry in the United States, one which is absolutely indispensable to the welfare of this country, maybe this bill will be an intervening wedge which will give us the right to do so.

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding the apparent good purpose and intent of this bill, yet I am imbued with two very serious misgivings as to its complete satisfactory workability. In the first place, the amount of the appropriation in this bill is not sufficient for the farming industry to feel the entrance of this intervening wedge. I am also fearful that this may be the beginning of an expenditure that we do not here fathom, and one that at a future date we shall be called upon to check. At that time it may be difficult for us to legislate the check.

In the second place, I am not fully convinced but that this bill will call for the creation of an additional commission or bureau to administer the expenditure of the appropriation, although I was advised here on the floor today by our worthy and capable chairman, Mr. JONES, of Texas, that there would be no such expense, and I am trusting in the correctness and truthfulness of that advice.

We have heard a great deal today from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PETERSON] about a land bill in which he is interested and that he soon hopes to have before us for consideration—a bill which he says will provide for the already established Land Office of the Government to buy and sell the lands to tenant farmers with no necessity for an extra or additional bureau. That bill may do more and go farther than this one, and if so, when it comes on for consideration it may be that we shall be convinced it should supplant this one. If it does, let us not hesitate to adopt it in lieu of the present bill.

These are my misgivings, and may I now say I am unalterably opposed to the creation of any other commissions or bureaus. I should like to see this Congress abolish about 75 percent of all present existing commissions and bureaus and try to operate all the affairs of the Government at a tremendously great saving to the taxpayers. If we should now begin to conduct the business of the Government along the line and with some economy that a private individual or corporation operates his or its business, you would be surprised how quickly an out-of-balance Budget would begin to balance itself.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the provision in this bill to destroy the civil service and merit system is one of the decisions made by the Democratic Party down on Jefferson Island the other day. Is this the kind of religion that sprung from that revival meeting? It is a complete change of front since the last election. I shall read to you what the Democratic national platform had to say about the merit system last year.

> For the protection of Government itself and the promotion of its efficiency, we pledge the immediate extension of the merit system through the classified civil service—which was first established and fostered under Democratic auspices—to all nonpolicy-making positions in the Federal service.
> We shall subject to the civil-service law all continuing positions which, because of the emergency, have been exempt from its operations.

This is pretty explicit and a definite pledge to the people. Now the Democrats come in here with a new civil-service policy. It seems to me either you are for civil service or you are against civil service. If this had been the first time and was merely the exception to the rule it would be a different matter, but bill after bill is coming from the Democratic majority that undermines and destroys the civil service, protection of which your party claims you had so much to do in establishing.

I submit the time has come for a record vote on the question of civil service. There are plenty of good men left even in the Democratic Party to fill these positions under civil service. There are plenty of honest men left in the Democratic Party under civil service to fill all these jobs. Why not have a record vote with respect to where we stand on this question of merit and the civil service instead of violating the civil-service system by subterfuge and not by a record vote of the Members of Congress. That is the issue before you. This provision is merely another one of the efforts of Democratic spoilsmen to grab the jobs and to seize upon all possible political plunder and patronage for deserving Democrats regardless of the merit system. Let us be honest with ourselves. Let us take a stand whether we are for the merit system or against it. The President repeatedly gives lip service to the merit system and just as often joins with the Democratic spoilsmen in Congress to undermine and destroy the civil-service system in violation of platform promises and campaign pledges. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 32, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: On page 10, line 23, after the word "Secretary", strike out the word "shall" and insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply makes the establishment of the act discretionary. It is not a committee amendment. I think it is wise. If there is any objection to the amendment, I shall not insist on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: On page 17, line 8, after the period, insert a colon and the following: "No member of a county committee established under section 42 shall knowingly make or join in making any certification prohibited by section 2 (c)."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is simply to correct the oversight to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] called our attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: Strike out lines 11 to 14, inclusive, on page 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "(8) Collect all claims arising under this act or under any mortgage, lease, contract, or agreement entered into pursuant to this act, and, if in his judgment, necessary and advisable, to pursue the same to final collection in any court, State or Federal, upon suits brought under the supervision of the Attorney General by the United States attorneys for the districts, respectively, in which such claims arise, or by such other attorney or attorneys as may under the law be designated by the Attorney General."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, offered at the suggestion of the Department of Justice, simply provides that suits, when claims go to suit, shall be handled by the Department of Justice.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES: On page 11, line 8, before the word "shall", insert the following: "(except as to positions requiring technical training and experience for which no one possessing the requisite technical training and experience is available within such area)", and in line 24, after the word "shall", insert the following: "except as provided above."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have shown this amendment to a number of members of the committee. This simply exempts the positions requiring technical training from the residential requirements.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WARREN: Amend section 43, page 15, line 4, by adding at the end of the section the following: "Provided, That any land held by the United States under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to said Executive orders may, where suitable, be utilized for the purposes of title I of this act, and the Secretary may sell said land and make loans for the necessary improvement thereof to such individuals and upon such terms as shall be in accordance with the provisions of said title."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have consulted with the ranking minority member of the committee, and we have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIERMANN: On page 15, line 10, after the first word "of", strike out all the rest of line 10 and the first three words in line 11.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply provides that when the United States Government sells any land, that it shall retain all the coal, all the oil, all the gas, and all other minerals in the property. It seems to me there ought to be no argument about this. This land, when sold, is sold for farming purposes and not for speculative purposes. It seems to me there can be only one side to this proposition. The Government ought to retain all the mineral rights.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman that if he makes it three-fourths that it will be agreeable; otherwise, you could go on this land under a lease from the Government and destroy the surface value. There ought to be a part of such rights left in the owner of the land in some instances.

Mr. BIERMANN. No; this is the case of the Government selling the land to an individual.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BIERMANN) there were—ayes 27, noes 98.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FULLER: Page 14, lines 5 and 6, strike out the following: "The committee shall meet at least once in each month and two members" and insert "two members of the committee."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have talked with the ranking minority Member, and unless there is some objection, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is a little difficult for us to understand just what this amendment does. May I ask this question, and perhaps it will be answered by the amendment. In view of the fact that under this bill for the first year no more than one case can be decided upon in each agricultural county of the United States, is it necessary under those circumstances that the committee in every county meet once every month?

Mr. JONES. The amendment does away with that necessity.

Mr. FULLER. That is to save $30,000 a month.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Congratulations.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: Page 15, line 10, strike out the word "half" and insert "three-quarters."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, my amendment meets the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture made at the time the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN] offered his amendment. If the framers of the Constitution had seen the wisdom of providing that all coal, oil, gas, and other minerals in or under all lands belonging to the Government at the time of the adoption of the Constitution would remain the property of the United States when the land was disposed of we would never have been bothered with taxes. The revenue derived from the sale of oil, coal, and so forth, would have supported the Government for all time. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal objection to that. I would like to have the House know what it is. The committee reported a reservation of one-half of the mineral rights, and this amendment would change that to three-fourths.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COCHRAN) there were—ayes 52, noes 29.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEARIN: Amend title IV, section 41 (b), by inserting at the end of line 6, on page 13, the following: "(7) Acquire all real property in the United States that the Federal land banks now own outright without any redemption rights outstanding in former owners, which the said Federal land banks are hereby authorized and directed to transfer and convey to the Secretary of the Treasury, for which the said Federal land banks shall accept from the Secretary of the Treasury in exchange therefor Federal land-bank stock of equal value. In the same manner the Secretary of Agriculture shall acquire within 6 months real property against which the Federal land banks at the time of the adoption of this act hold sheriff's certificates or judgments. For the purposes of such exchanges, the value of such real property shall be the carrying value as it appears on the books of the said Federal land banks on the last day of the month next preceding the adoption of this act; and the Federal land-bank stock shall be valued at par. The Secretary of Agriculture shall acquire forthwith all real property so acquired by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That the conveyance of such real property may be made under any procedure adopted by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Agriculture direct from the Federal land banks to the said Secretary of Agriculture without any intermediate transfer through the Secretary of the Treasury. The provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, relating to restrictions on the acquisition of land by the United States shall not apply to such transfers and conveyances. The Secretary of Agriculture shall administer and dispose of such real property as hereinafter prescribed in this act."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on that amendment.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Texas reserves all points of order. I appreciate his doing that, but after I have discussed the amendment, then I presume I shall have have an opportunity to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. As a matter of course the gentleman would have that privilege.

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Chairman, in brief this amendment does this: It takes approximately 8,000,000 acres of land now owned by the Federal land banks and transfers it to the United States Department of Agriculture, to be resold by the Secretary on a contract purchase agreement with certain reservations pertaining to title, and the manner in which the land is operated by the tenant purchaser. At the present time that land is carried on the books of the Federal land bank at a price of approximately $123,000,000. That includes the land owned by the Federal land bank and the land in process of foreclosure, the two groups amounting to a little over 8,000,000 acres.

At the present time the Federal Treasury owns approximately $124,000,000 worth of stock in the Federal land banks that would, in effect, offset the carrying value of the land, that 8,000,000 acres; so that an exchange could be made very nicely.

I realize the fact that there might be some opposition to the procedure, and naturally so, because, as I understand it and have been informed, the Federal land bank is not now paying any interest to the Treasury on the $124,000,000 worth of stock. I believe this transfer could be made and once the 8,000,000 acres were so transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture, he would have an opportunity to begin a land-purchase and resale program operated side by side with the loan program provided in this bill, so that at the end of a 2-year, 4-year, or 6-year period the United States Congress would be better able to decide which of them was working out the most satisfactorily as far as the tenant purchaser was concerned.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the amendment. It is clearly subject to a point of order. It would authorize acquiring land from the Federal land banks and the trading of stock in the banks. These are not involved in this bill. It also provides for the Treasury to accept this stock and turn land over to this organization. There are a number of different points on which it is subject to a point of order. It also makes the provisions of section 355 of the statute inapplicable. It provides that for the purpose of exchanges the value of such real property shall be that carried on the books of the land banks. It is not germane to this bill. It brings in new subjects. As I understand the rules of the House, if it is subject to a point of order on any ground, a point of order must be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEARIN] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WEARIN. I do, Mr. Chairman. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the enacting clause of this bill, which specifies that it is an act to encourage and promote ownership of farm homes. It can be seen that the enacting clause itself, therefore, does not set out that this proposed act provides exclusively for loans. It says it is a provision to encourage and promote the ownership of farm lands, which is precisely what my amendment does.

Secondly, this bill already deals with three separate and distinct subject matters, one of which involves the purchase and resale of land, as does my amendment. The first of those separate and distinct features is the title that deals with rehabilitation loans, which have been discussed extensively today; another is the retirement of submarginal lands, and a third is an allocation of funds, or rather permission granted to the Secretary of Agriculture to use funds appropriated in this act to continue and complete projects now under operation in the Resettlement Administration, which I remind the Chair involves the purchase and resale of land, exactly as this provision in my amendment does.

I have in my hand a letter from the Resettlement Administration of the United States Department of Agriculture, setting out specifically that they have been proceeding in exactly that way; that they have been buying land and reselling that land to tenant purchasers. That is what I provide to do in this amendment, and therefore it is germane to a section of the measure under consideration.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that this particular bill involves three separate and distinct subject matters it should be within the order of this committee to include a fourth, if it were a fourth separate and distinct matter, but I would remind the Chair of the fact that resettlement projects are included in title IV of this act under section 43, where the Secretary of Agriculture is permitted to use funds for a continuation of the land purchase and resale program on the part of the Federal Government, which is precisely what my amendment proposes to do. There is no doubt, Mr. Chairman, in the light of the above facts, that it is germane.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DRIVER). The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which contains the following language:

Acquire all real property in the United States that the Federal land banks now own outright, without any redemption rights outstanding in former owners, which the said Federal land banks are hereby authorized and directed to transfer and convey to the Secretary of the Treasury, for which the said Federal land bank shall accept from the Secretary of the Treasury in exchange therefor, Federal land-bank stock of equal value—

And so forth.

The measure under consideration has this provision in title I:

The Secretary of Agriculture, herein referred to as the Secretary, is authorized to make loans in the United States and in the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, to persons eligible to receive the benefits of this title, to enable such persons to acquire farms.

It is true that this amendment seems to direct the thought to the same purpose, the acquisition of land for the purpose of placing the same in the hands of tenants, sharecroppers, and so forth, for the purpose of providing farm homes for that class of citizens; but there is a very distinct difference in the provision for the acquisition of such homes under the terms of this amendment and the provisions of the bill. One is the purchase of a home direct by the tenant and the furnishing of the money by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of enabling him to acquire the title. In this amendment, however, new machinery is set up for the purpose of operating with property that was not considered at all in the bill under consideration. New machinery is brought into life and authorized to operate in connection with the use of properties owned by a separate and distinct agency of the Government.

The Chair, therefore, is of the opinion that this amendment is not germane to the provisions of the bill under consideration.

The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FADDIS: On page 11, line 25, after the word "Territory", strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following:

"Provided hereafter, That appointment of persons to the Federal service for employment within the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act, whether such appointment be within the classified civil service or otherwise, shall be apportioned among the several States and the District of Columbia upon the basis of population as ascertained at the last preceding census.

"In making separations from the Federal service or furloughs without pay to last as long as 3 months of persons employed within the District of Columbia under the provisions of this act, the appointing power shall give preference in retention to appointees from States that have not received their share of appointments according to population: Provided, however, That soldiers, sailors, and marines, the widows of such, or the wives of injured soldiers, sailors, and marines who themselves are not qualified but whose wives are qualified to hold a position in the Government service, shall be given preference in retention in their several grades and classes where their ratings are good or better."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly to make a point of order against the amendment offered by my friend, with much of which I am in sympathy, but I think it ought to go to another committee.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the paragraph or to the bill. The second paragraph of the amendment treats with making separations from the Federal service through furloughs and otherwise, it deals with employment in the District of Columbia, and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment is germane to the bill. The portion of the amendment referred to by the gentleman from Texas as treating with separations refers to separations from the Federal service of those coming under the provisions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The bill under consideration seeks to vest in the Secretary of Agriculture, by the language beginning in line 3, on page 11, authority to employ certain persons in connection with the operation of the business, the duties and responsibilities of making acquisitions of land, and making those lands available to the classes of persons embraced in the bill.

The amendment under consideration is nothing more nor less than a mere limitation on the authority granted by the bill.

The Chair therefore rules that the amendment is germane to the bill.

The point of order is overruled.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to state to the members of the committee that this is an amendment which provides that appointments in the District of Columbia shall be apportioned among the several States according to population. The amendment is fair in all respects and should not be controversial at all. I hope it is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado: Page 15, line 10, strike out "an undivided three-quarters" and insert in lieu thereof "nine-tenths."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment has been acted upon.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a half a minute?

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government, as the gentleman from Texas well knows, reserves all mineral rights and has reserved all mineral rights on the public domain for more than 30 years, so that an entryman gets nothing by his patent but surface rights. I do not see any reason on earth why a tenant farmer, for whom the Government buys land, should be given one-half, as the bill originally proposed, or one-quarter of the mineral rights, as amended, and I offer the amendment if for no other purpose than to prevent this point passing unnoticed and to preserve the matter in the record for possible consideration in the other body. The absolute owner of the mineral rights gets only a one-tenth royalty and the Government should in no event surrender more than this.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I renew my point of order that this undertakes to amend an amendment already adopted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado desire to be heard?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much I did not have the opportunity to offer the amendment when the matter was up for consideration before, because it ought to be in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: Page 17, line 14, after the period, insert: "In the case of Alaska and Puerto Rico ,the term 'county', as used in this act, shall be synonymous to 'Territory' or any subdivision thereof as may be designated by the Secretary, and payment under section 33 of this act shall be made to the Governor of the Territory or to the fiscal agent of such subdivision."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alaska has explained this amendment to several members of the Committee on Agriculture. We think it is a desirable amendment and have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. DIMOND].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IGLESIAS: On page 17, line 14, after the word "Hawaii", insert "and to Puerto Rico."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, that amendment is all right and fits in with the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Delegate from Puerto Rico.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I promised the chairman of the steering committee, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], some time in general debate, but through oversight I neglected to reserve sufficient time for him. He has been very helpful in this matter, and I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

HELP FOR LANDLESS FARMERS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I deeply appreciate the request of the chairman of the Agricultural Committee that I be permitted to close this debate on the farm-tenant bill. I have not had the opportunity of hearing all of the discussion this afternoon, but I did hear some of it. Two of my committees have been in session most of the afternoon. However, I did hear the discussion on the pending measure yesterday. I heard some of the distinguished Members of this body make speeches against adoption of the rule to bring up the bill and then admit they were going to vote for it. I heard my distinguished friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], make a very convincing speech against this measure, then he closed that address by stating he was going to support the bill.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, my good friend from Texas [Mr. JONES], gave us a very interesting and detailed explanation of the provisions of the Farm Security Act of 1937 on yesterday, and I shall not take up the time of the House in going back over the ground that he covered so ably.

It is my feeling that in the years to come this legislation, regardless of what may be the final provisions of the law when finally enacted, will be remembered as the most important accomplishment of this session of Congress. We are making history here today. When this legislation is finally enacted the 3,000,000 landless farmers of America will have a new hope.

STEERING COMMITTEE ENDORSED BILL

The last time I addressed this House, on June 15, I gave a brief report of a very interesting meeting that the Democratic steering committee had just held. At that meeting we had the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] and Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD, author of the Bankhead farm-tenant bill. At that time it was my happy privilege to report to you that the committee found the gentleman from Texas and the Senator from Alabama anxious and willing to cooperate in getting farm-tenant legislation enacted at this session. I was also able to report to you that the steering committee had pledged its active and enthusiastic support to this legislation of such vital importance to nearly half of our farm population.

Permit me to congratulate the gentleman from Texas upon the courageous fight he has made for this legislation, and also to thank the Rules Committee for making it possible to bring the Farm Security Act up at this time.

BILL NOT ENTIRELY SATISFACTORY

This bill is by no means satisfactory to me. I am sure it is not altogether satisfactory to the chairman of the committee, to the Speaker, or others who are fighting for it. As our distinguished and beloved Speaker stated yesterday, it is freely admitted that this bill does not go very far. We are not going to accomplish much by appropriating $10,000,000 the first year, $25,000,000 the second year, and $50,000,000 the third year, as proposed in this bill. But it is an opening wedge—it is a start—and if properly administered this bill will convince us of the necessity of going ahead with a real, effective, and serious attack upon the farm-tenancy problem.

I was especially interested in what the Speaker told us about the early efforts of his distinguished father to get Federal aid for highways; how the idea was considered a dream, unconstitutional, and impossible, but how an experimental appropriation of $75,000 was finally made. I am pleased, also, that he reminded us that rural free mail delivery started as an experiment on a very short route.

Like the Speaker, I would prefer to have at least $50,000,000 appropriated now to start this farm-security program; but if that is impossible, I am willing to take what we can get and continue to fight for an adequate program. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the distinguished chairman with pleasure.

Mr. JONES. I want to express my appreciation for the gentleman's fine, unselfish work in connection with this measure, and I wish to say the gentleman has done exceptionally good work as chairman of the Democratic steering committee.

PROBLEM LONG NEGLECTED

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman. May I say that Congress needs more men of the caliber, vision, and courage of the gentleman from Texas.

Congress has not realized the seriousness of this problem nor considered where it is leading us, or something would have been done about it a long time ago, I am convinced.

Tenant farming is taking an alarming and costly yearly toll in human and natural resources. The 1935 farm census revealed that 52 percent of the farmers in the United States rent all or part of the land they farm. There were 2,865,000 tenant farmers in 1935. In the spring of 1935, 34.2 percent of the farmers had occupied their farms less than 1 year. This annual and continuous moving of farm families from farm to farm each year has a disintegrating influence upon rural social institutions—schools, churches, lodges, cooperatives, and various farmers' organizations.

A study published by the Oklahoma A. & M. College indicated that at least "half of this moving is of no economic or social benefit to the moving farmer, the owner of the land, or to the State." The report also states:

Children of the less-frequent movers averaged around one-fifth more educational progress per school-age year than did the children of more frequent movers.

SOIL RESOURCES THREATENED

This constant shifting from farm to farm is not only hampering the development of good rural schools and churches but it is destroying our soil. Tenant farmers are not in a position to maintain the soil and prevent erosion. Many times inestimable loss occurs from negligent farming. But how can this be prevented when the tenant has little or no permanent interest in his farm? Once a ton of soil is washed down into the sea, it is gone forever, and there is nothing this or any future Congress can do to get it back.

I want to warn Members from the industrial centers that they have a vital interest in this problem of farm tenantry and soil erosion also. If the day ever comes when the soil resources of this great land of ours are so depleted that we cannot produce enough to feed the Nation we shall all suffer, if not from scarcity, at least from a sharp increase in the cost of living.

I ask you to consider the alarming increase in the number of farm tenants in this country since the turn of the century. If you do this, I am sure that this bill will pass by an overwhelming majority.

FIGURES ARE ALARMING

The figures are alarming. The proportion of tenant farmers in Oklahoma, a new State, increased from less than 1 percent in 1890 to over 60 percent in 1935. At present some 130,000 tenants in Oklahoma operate almost 17,000,000 acres of land. Sixty-five percent of the farmers in the Sixth Congressional District of Oklahoma are tenants.

The following table indicates the importance of tenancy in the Sixth Congressional District in Oklahoma, which district I have the honor to represent in Congress. It shows the number of owners and tenants and the percentage of farm tenancy by counties for 1935.

Number and percent of tenants in the Sixth Congressional District of Oklahoma

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DRIVER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that, the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7562) to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 261, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BOILEAU. I cannot qualify in that respect, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I qualify, and offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies, and the Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. In the event a member of the minority or any other Member of the House desires to offer a motion to recommit and seeks recognition, in the absence of any statement that he is opposed to the bill, is not the Member who seeks recognition entitled to recognition for that purpose?

The SPEAKER. The rule is that a member of the minority is entitled to recognition to offer a motion to recommit. In order that the member of the minority may qualify, upon inquiry by the Chair he must state that he is opposed to the bill. The Chair inquired of the gentleman if he was opposed to the bill and the gentleman stated he could not qualify in that respect. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] was on his feet seeking recognition as a member of the minority.

Mr. BOILEAU. I submit the gentleman from Massachusetts was not on his feet, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Massachusetts was preparing to offer a motion to recommit in the event I was not granted recognition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again qualify members of the minority who desire to offer a motion to recommit.

Is there any member of the minority who desires to offer a motion to recommit?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr BOILEAU. I cannot qualify in that respect, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture with instructions to report the same forthwith with the following amendment: Page 11, line 5, strike out the following: "(without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations) and fix the compensation of."

Mr. MAPES rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Michigan rise?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I should like to pursue a little further the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], inasmuch as the question has been raised.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman from Wisconsin's inquiry had to do with a situation where no one asked for recognition who was opposed to the legislation. Would the gentleman from Wisconsin not have been entitled to make the motion to recommit if no one opposed to the bill had asked for recognition to make the motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, in view of the present status, the gentleman's inquiry is a hypothetical one. The Chair undertook under the rules to qualify Members who were entitled under the rules to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MAPES. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAPES. Inasmuch as this question has been raised, it seems to me that now is a good time to have the rule clarified. My own thought is that if no one else asks recognition, a person should be recognized to make a motion to recommit, although he does not qualify as being opposed to the entire legislation. I know the impression has got around the House that this cannot be done. I think this is a wrong impression. I think now is a good time, inasmuch as the question has been raised, when the Speaker might well clarify the atmosphere in that respect.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will kindly state his point of order.

Mr. MAPES. I have stated a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has answered the gentleman's parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAPES. If the Chair will permit, I do not think it has been answered definitely.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will kindly restate his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAPES. Following up the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin with respect to the situation where no one cared to ask for recognition who was prepared to say he was opposed to the bill, my inquiry is, Was not the gentleman from Wisconsin entitled to recognition to make a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has undertaken clearly to state the rule with reference to qualification for offering a motion to recommit. The Chair is of the opinion the record made in this matter clearly states the proper position with reference to this parliamentary situation.

The Chair asked the gentleman from Wisconsin, who first arose and desired to offer a motion to recommit, if he was opposed to the bill. The gentleman stated he could not qualify in that he was not opposed to the bill. The Chair then inquired if there was any Member of the minority who desired to make a motion to recommit who was opposed to the bill. Thereupon the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] qualified and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts, under the circumstances, for the purpose of submitting a motion to recommit.

The gentleman from Texas moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts and Mr. TOBEY), there were—ayes 62, noes 165.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 231, not voting 99, as follows:

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LUCKEY] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. LUCKEY of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker and colleagues, I want to address my remarks to this House in the interests of the American wheat grower. The general public and especially the city dweller is laboring under the misapprehension that the farmer is making stacks of money. They reason that, since food prices are high to the consumer, the farmer must be making huge profits.

That is not the case. The wheat growers of the United States are confronted today with a very serious situation. Within the last 60 days the wheat market has fluctuated about 30 cents per bushel entailing a loss to the farmers of more than $216,000,000. This will not redound to the benefit of the consumer. The processor will base his price of flour, bread, or breakfast cereals on the peak price of wheat, and the consumer will not benefit one penny by the loss the farmer is sustaining.

In view of the world wheat situation this huge drop in the wheat market is uncalled for and apparently is solely due to speculative influences. We have today the smallest wheat stocks in the history of this country. The present world crop prospects do not indicate that a huge surplus or carry-over is in sight. For the first time in many years domestic wheat prices are nearing world prices. Under these conditions we should be able to export our surpluses of the present crop.

This should be possible, especially in view of the fact that export subsidies for wheat have been practically eliminated in foreign countries. Poland, one of the normal wheat exporting countries has removed its subsidy on wheat exports and has actually placed an embargo on the export of wheat. Tariff barriers against imports of United States wheat have been removed or greatly lowered in many of our greater markets. The Irish Free State has abolished its tariff on wheat. Germany has reduced her tariff from 93 to 11 cents per bushel; Spain from $1.37 to 10 cents. Sweden and Belgium have reduced their license tax on wheat imports. Sweden from 10 to 3½ cents per bushel and Belgium from 9 cents to practically nothing. In Denmark the surtax on imported hard wheat and wheat flour has been abolished where formerly it amounted to 18 cents on a bushel of wheat and 84 cents on a barrel of flour. The Netherlands has reduced its monopoly tax on wheat from 30 to 15 cents per bushel.

The nationalistic efforts of many European countries to step up wheat production has fallen flatter than a pancake. The big push of the Russian Soviet to double their wheat production has collapsed. The efforts of the dictator countries, Germany and Italy, to force adequate domestic wheat production has increased costs of living in those countries so rapidly that they have been forced to abandon their policies.

At this point I wish to introduce a table showing the United States and world wheat production, carry-overs, and prices paid to American producers by crop years from 1922 to date.

United States and world wheat production, stocks, and price paid to producer in the United States

1936–37 [1]	626	3,531	138	762	[2] 89.9
1937–38 [2]	825–850	3,800	90	530

[1] Preliminary. [2] Estimate.

From those figures it is obvious that if the bumper world wheat crop of 3,800,000,000 bushels is produced this year it will not restore world supplies to the 1922–28 level. It is equally obvious that a domestic production of 825,000,000 bushels will not restore the American stocks to normalcy. The third conclusion to be drawn from those figures is the dependency of the price paid to the producer upon the world and domestic stocks on hand. Therefore it is with every reason that I say the current depression of wheat prices is not based upon supply and demand, but is obviously based upon speculative manipulation of the market.

All these factors should work to the benefit of our wheat growers. But what is the picture confronting the American wheat grower today? First, the farmer is heavily indebted and must sell his crop as soon as harvested. In the years when he did raise a fair crop he received ruinously low prices. Then he encountered a series of drought years, when he had little or nothing to sell. His overhead—taxes, interest, repairs, seed, and other fixed expenses—went on just the same. As a result he is now forced to sell his crops for whatever the speculator and processor are willing to pay him, and they are taking advantage of his predicament with a vengeance.

Within the short space of 2 months the price for wheat on the Chicago market dropped from a little over $1.30 a bushel to less than $1.06 per bushel. In cold figures, this means a loss to the wheat growers of this country of over $204,000,000. Just think what that decline means in loss of farm purchasing power. The farmers will buy fewer automobiles, less clothing, less farm equipment, less paint and repair material for his buildings, less of the things that contribute to the "more abundant life" about which we hear so much today. Yes, it will mean slowing down the production of factories and reducing the number of men employed to the extent required to manufacture the products which farmers would buy with that money. Do you know what a loss of 1 cent per bushel or a loss of 25 cents per bushel will mean to the wheat grower? I have prepared a table showing the loss in farm income suffered by each of the principal wheat-raising States.

Losses sustained by farmers in principal wheat-growing States due to decreases in the wheat market

[Losses figured upon the basis of average production, 1928–32]

United States total	860,570,000	8,605,700	215,142,500

According to the latest estimates the wheat production of this country will be between 825,000,000 and 850,000,000 bushels this year. That is just about the average production of wheat over the period from 1928 to 1932, inclusive. Upon the basis of that average production it is easy to figure the loss in farm income sustained by such a falling market. My native State, Nebraska, has sustained a loss of $14,134,500; the neighboring State of Kansas, $44,357,750; Oklahoma, a loss of $13,786,250; Texas, a loss of $10,270,750, and Ohio, a loss of $7,620,000. The loss by States is given on the chart. Just think what a loss that is for each individual State. Present indications are that the market will fall even further and every time it drops 1 cent per bushel it costs the American farmers $8,605,700. Each 1-cent drop costs the farmers of my own State $565,380. A falling market during the marketable period is truly an American tragedy. The bitter part of the whole thing is that it is unnecessary and can be avoided.

But I want to show you another phase of the picture that the general public and the consumer does not know. I refer to the cost of production and parity price of wheat. Right now the parity price of wheat is figured at $1.21 per bushel. The market price for wheat, July delivery, is at present $1.13 per bushel. That indicates that the farmer, if there is no further decline, would receive about $1.01 per bushel for his wheat. If the farmer receives $1.01 per bushel he receives 20 cents less than the parity price. Let me show you just how far we have failed to achieve cost of production and perhaps you can figure why the American farmers do not constitute the vast purchasing power that is necessary to keep factories and industrial production at peak outputs and thus keep American labor off the relief rolls. A table has been prepared which shows the 12 leading wheat States since 1930 with the cost of production and price received in each State for those years.

Wheat—Cost of production and price received by producers in 12 leading wheat States, 1930–35

From that chart you will see that over a period of 5 years there were only three States—Illinois, Ohio, and Indiana—that were ever able to break even. Those three States did make cost of production in 1 year, 1933. The State of Ohio was the only State to make cost of production in 2 years during that period, and Ohio did it only in 1933 and 1934. This bare cost of production does not include anything to compensate the individual farmer for the labor he expended. On that chart you see 12 great States engaged in raising wheat, engaged in feeding the peoples of this country, and doing it at a loss. Now, after years of adversity, we have a wheat market collapsing again right at the very moment when the crop comes to the elevators. The chances of parity and cost of production, so nearly within reach of the farmer, go glimmering just when the goal is in sight.

The present decline of the wheat market is nothing new. It is the regular reenactment of that great American tragedy which forces the American farmer every year to sell his wheat on a falling market.

I have prepared a table and chart showing the monthly rise and fall of wheat prices during the calendar years of 1920 to 1935, inclusive:

Those figures show that the highest prices paid to the producer are during the months of January to May, inclusive. By mid-June the decline is on in full force. Now, remember that wheat is a cash crop and finds its way to market from the time threshing begins until the end of the year; thus, during the months when the farmer has wheat to sell the price is low. When he no longer has wheat to sell the price skyrockets. That is a speculator's market. The consumer who buys the wheat, flour, and cereals 6 months later buys them at a cost based upon the peak of the market. Thus the farmer's cash income is slashed and the consumer's dollar buys a minimum of farm products.

There you have the picture of the farmer's predicament. It is a problem of tremendous importance, not only to the farmers but to the entire Nation. It has a far-reaching significance, both from an economic and sociological standpoint. When the income of 33,000,000 of our farm population is reduced, there is corresponding reduction in the purchasing power of the largest economic group in this country. A proper solution must be found if we are to have a balanced economy. We cannot enslave the farmer for the benefit of the speculator and the processor.

What are we going to do about it, and what are the approaches to the problem?

That question can be divided into two points: First, the course of immediate action to meet the existing situation; second, the long-range or permanent program to restore agriculture to a basis of equality with industry and labor.

There is only one possible way by which we can stabilize the price of this year's wheat crop and by which we can guarantee to the farmer at least a fair chance of securing an equitable price for his wheat. That is by the immediate inauguration of a system of wheat loans similar to those previously carried on by the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. These agencies, through the authority and powers vested in them and in pursuance of the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the National Industrial Recovery Administration, the soil-conservation program, and the Domestic Allotment Act, are in a position to begin such a lending program immediately. The only thing necessary is for Congress or the President to give the necessary impulse to set the wheels in motion. Let us see that they are started and that these hundreds of millions of farm dollars are saved for the farmers and not allowed to fall into the hands of the speculators.

I have shown the market conditions for the present wheat crop. I have shown that this year we should be able to attain cost of production if we will only protect the farmers' rights. If we loan $1 or $1.10 per bushel to the farmer under terms similar to those made on the corn loans we will prevent the present harvest from becoming a glut on the market. We will establish a system of orderly marketing and we will maintain a fair-price level.

Some of you may say, "What if we make these loans and the market falls below $1.10? Won't that leave the Federal Government holding the bag?" Some may even raise the cry that this is a subsidy to the American farmer. My answers to you are simple. In the first place, due to the existing world and domestic market conditions, there is little likelihood that the price to the producer cannot be maintained at $1.10. In the second place, let me say that if the market should fall slightly below $1.10 to the producer, the ultimate good that would be attained by maintaining farm-purchasing power would far outweigh the material loss sustained. To those who raise the cry of subsidies, let me say that a subsidization of a large economic group is far better than the subsidization of a few powerful merchant princes and privileged operators of big business.

We have been and are now subsidizing everything under the sun in the way of special interest and groups. The big newspapers and publishing companies of this country are being subsidized to an extent of $75,000,000 per year through low postal rates on second-class mail. Air lines, railroads, shipbuilders, ship operators, and big businesses are being regularly subsidized. Certainly the farmer who has always been forced to pay the major portion of these subsidies should have an equal opportunity for assistance. Reciprocity is certainly nothing more than the fair and American way of doing things.

A permanent, long-range farm program is an absolute necessity. The American farmers do not want anything more than equality of opportunity with industry and labor. They have a right to such equality. For more than 2 years the legislation and policies of this administration have been concentrated upon the improvement of labor conditions and upon social security. Such legislation and policies inevitably increase the cost of industrial products, but they do not bring about an upward revision of farm prices. This legislation, worthy as it is, destroys any semblance of balance between farm and no farm income. Those of us who represent agricultural districts believe in labor legislation and in social-security legislation, but we do demand that the forgotten farmer be given equal aid and assistance.

There is no lack of proposed farm programs. Offhand I can think of five which have been submitted to this Congress. My good friends and distinguished colleagues, Mr. EICHER, of Iowa; Mr. MASSINGALE, of Oklahoma; and Mr. COFFEE, of Nebraska, have submitted measures designed to meet the existing needs. The American Farm Bureau has prepared an extensive program which has been given some study by our House Agricultural Committee. The able and distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Henry A. Wallace, has submitted his ever-normal granary and general farm program.

At this time I do not wish to discuss the relative merits of the various proposals, nor do I wish to advocate one plan against the others. However, I do earnestly urge that the Members of this House insist that one or the other of these measures be brought out of committee and submitted to open discussion and amendment upon the floor. In that way the House of Representatives can express its views and can work out the best possible solution to the problem.

The opportunity for action is here, and we must avail ourselves of that opportunity if we are to have a balanced national economy and a free and prosperous farm population. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK] is recognized for 20 minutes.

PERMIT THE DISTRESSED MILLIONS TO RETURN TO A STATE OF SELF-HELP, INDEPENDENCE, AND FREEDOM

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, there are 12,500,000 people out of employment who can work and want to work. Besides this, there are 40,000,000 people who, because of low wages or who work a few days per month, are eking out an existence by using up what savings and property they have accumulated during their lives. There are, in addition, about 8,000,000 aged and crippled people who ought not to be compelled to enter the ranks of the laboring class to supplant younger people but who are destitute. There are 20,000,000 more people who today are making ends barely meet but who are in constant fear of falling into the class with the 40,000,000 who are using up their savings to live. In all, there are 80,000,000 people either in actual distress or living on the borderline of distress. About 40,000,000 have enough or too much.

The following table may be of interest on the question of employment and wages:

Number of possible workers in Nation	48,250,000
Number now employed	35,750,000
Number unemployed	12,500,000

Average wage is less than $500 yearly, or 25 cents an hour.
Lowest wage recorded is $1 a week (for a 63-hour week).
The legal annual interest rate is as high as 42 percent.
The United States Government itself has borrowed money at 43 different rates of interest, ranging from three-fourths of 1 percent to 4 percent. (See U. S. Treasury daily reports.)

Let us see the other side of the picture. This is a great Nation. Our natural resources of soil, the forests, the mines, and the fisheries are inexhaustible. Properly managed, we are capable of supporting 500,000,000 in this country. Bread, meat, clothing, cotton, and wool, we have in abundance. We have so much of all of the staple necessities of life that this administration has put forward a program to limit our production of foodstuffs. This program is in operation in spite of the fact that we have millions without proper food, proper clothing, and proper homes.

On one side of this imaginary line we have hungry, unclothed, unhoused millions; on the other we have in abundance or the possibilities of the things they need. These millions cannot get the things they need and of which, we, as a Nation, can produce more than enough for all.

The job to bring relief to these millions is so simple that we have failed to understand what to do. We have been looking for some complicated formula; we have absolutely shut our eyes to the evidence all around us. The solution of relief is right before us, and still we either do not have any ability to perceive and interpret, or we purposely do not want to admit that we have blundered so long.

The whole solution is simply this: Permit the distressed millions on the one side of the line to obtain their share of the necessities of life we have on the other. In other words, connect the hungry, the poorly clad, the homeless, with food, clothing, and homes. Give them a chance to consume, and when that day arrives we will not have to curtail production. Let them wear shoes, and in 6 months every shoe factory will be busy instead of closed; let them have enough to eat, and in 6 months we will not have to drive our farmers to cut down production of bread and meat; let them be clad, and the cotton and wool crops will find purchasers; let them live in decent homes, and the lumber mills, the steel mills, and the tradesmen will find work, and manufacturing plants will reopen. Yes; more than that will happen; new industries will spring up and the Nation as a whole will begin to produce goods to an extent never known before.

In applying this remedy, I am presupposing, of course, that every patriotic citizen in this Republic, is willing to do his share—yes; more than his share—to bring about this program not only of relief but of actual prosperity of the country. If that be our purpose and our aim, then no citizen should want to make profits out of a situation that has reduced two-thirds of our population to poverty, but all should be willing to forego some of their activities in the past that has been the proximate cause of the suffering in this country.

All these distressed millions need to again assume a position of self-support is credit. They must be permitted to use the millions and millions of acres of land which is now owned, but not used. They must be allowed to attach themselves to the soil and there produce the necessities of life. Not only that, but the efforts of their toil must not be taken from them in interest charges and by confiscatory taxation. Those who once owned land, with infinitesimal exceptions, would still own that land if they had never had more than they could use, and the interest sharks had all been executed. Let us try this again, profiting by our sad experience of the past.

Mr. Louis F. Post, in his book entitled "Ethics of Democracy", published in 1903, has given the best analysis of the relations between labor and land as the foundation of all prosperity that I have had occasion to examine. I quote here from that book:

> Human labor is the rock bottom of economic research. It supports all the super-incumbent layers—artificial objects, serviceability, value, trade, and money.
> But labor can produce nothing without natural resources. Tools it does not need. For labor, considered as a cooperative whole, makes all its own tools. They are artificial objects—wealth. But it does need raw materials and working places upon the earth. To use the inclusive economic term, it does need "land."
>
> Labor is fundamental and land is fundamental. They are the prime factors of all economic processes; labor being the initial or active force and land the responsive or passive condition. Thus labor produces wealth from land, and land yields wealth to labor.
> Land is the natural storehouse from which man draws all his supplies, and the one foundation upon which he rests all his structures. It includes everything except the human family, and such objects as the human family have altered in condition so as to adapt them to human desires. Not only the soil, but the water, the atmosphere, the sunlight, building sites, railway sites, mineral deposits, forests, and even the birds of the air, the fishes of the sea, and the wild animals that roam the earth, are included in this economic category.
> Without labor, however, land would yield no artificial thing. Labor is the other indispensable factor. As land is the passive economic condition, so labor is the initial economic force. It is labor applied to and operating upon and in conjunction with land that causes every other economic process.

Private enterprise, the champion of interest, cannot help these millions because when interest is demanded, it must be made secure, and the people, or at least these 80,000,000 people, have no security. They have lost all they had under our present interest system. They have been cast aside by private business as unworthy of any more credit. They have fallen victims of the interest system that now, in their extremity, says that they have nothing to offer to make secure not only the principal, but above all else, the interest.

I am sure we are all convinced that private business will not extend credit to these millions; I am also sure private business would rather see every business plant in America close because of relief taxation before it would consent to begin business operation with all interest barred. If businessmen would just stop and think for one moment, they would realize that they themselves have been victimized by the same institution of interest.

Since private business will not help those millions who have no security and no credit, then this Government, in the interest of the general welfare of all the people, must extend this credit. No nation can continue to hand out the billions annually for relief purposes. The people must become self-supporting, and it therefore becomes the duty of this Government to act. The Supreme Court has made it very certain that the general-welfare clause of the Constitution means what it says.

The need for credit has been fully established and that credit must be extended by the Government. The next step is important. What shall be done with this money we are about to loan the people? Where will we get it, and what will be the cost? When will it be repaid, and what risks are we taking? When I have answered these questions I will assume that I have thought this entire program through to a completion, and that it will appeal to those who have steadfastly insisted that private business interests will provide for the people if this Congress will leave them alone. The glaring fact is that through our faith in private business enterprise and willingness to submit to that system we have landed where we are today.

There are 50,000,000 homeless people in the United States. Taking the average in a family of five, it would require 10,000,000 homes in the United States to accommodate these people.

As a matter of principle, every man who is willing to work is entitled to a home. We went on that theory when we created the homestead law and the people started out all right, but we did not provide them protection against interest. Our slogan now, or at least the progressive Republican slogan, will be in the next election "A home for all; work for all who want work."

In the building and repair of homes for 50,000,000 people, it will require the labor for the next 5 years of 5,000,000 workers who can constantly, during that period, find work. This is valuable and self-liquidating work, which will cost the taxpayers of this country not one cent. From this it will be seen, that with this program in operation, emergency work paid by taxes will disappear as fast as this home-building program can be developed. In 6 months there should be no emergency work.

When these homes are completed, the entire cost will be spread over a period of years, not as long as the debts due us from foreign nations, and without interest the cost will be paid back to the Government. A service charge of not over one-half of 1 percent will be sufficient to cover the cost of extending this credit.

One hears many objections to this program, the principal one being that land cannot be obtained. As a fundamental proposition, no one has the right to own land who cannot use it or permit others to do so. Let us take a look at the insurance companies in this country and see if they, perchance, have any land.

The following is a list of the land holdings in 1936 of insurance companies according to the Insurance Year Book:

This ownership has gotten away from those who occupy and use our agricultural lands. Of those who till the soil, only a small percentage of them in many States actually own the land. The following is a list of States showing actual ownership of those who occupy and use the lands:

No one will question but what there is an abundance of land which can be obtained for the purpose of a home-building program. When all the lands owned by the Government, States, and municipalities, already belonging to the people, have been utilized, private lands can be obtained through purchase and condemnation proceedings. There is not the shadow of a doubt but what insurance companies and other corporations and individuals owning large tracts of land (usually obtained through foreclosure) will be glad to sell these lands to the Government. In case they refuse, these lands can be condemned for public use by right of eminent domain. If a railroad, a city, or State can condemn private land for public use, then the people have the right to condemn land for the same public use. The general welfare clause of the Constitution provides plenty of authority, and the Supreme Court has come forward in support of that principle.

The next proposition to which objection is offered is this: These people have nothing; their property is gone; their credit has been entirely wiped out. Let us examine this objection in the light of the ultimate goal of this plan of "a home for everyone who desires to work and is able to work." The aged and the incapacitated will be given a home as a matter of right under a sane social-security program. These people have a great latent asset. They will work. There are only two fundamental elements of prosperity—land and labor. In fact, life itself depends upon these two factors. Land is valueless without labor, and labor cannot attach itself unless there is land. No force in any free government should be permitted another day to prevent labor from attaching itself to land. Land in a country like ours is the most common thing we have. It is all around us, and as we look we find it unoccupied or partly occupied with millions of acres idle and undeveloped capable of sustaining millions of people. The State of Maryland alone is capable of supplying homes for 2 million more people without in the slightest degree interfering with those who now occupy it. The Southern States can supply homes for 30 million people without the slightest degree of interference with the rights of those who now inhabit that area. Everywhere we turn we find the same condition.

The next objection is one which the objectors to this program announce with a satisfied emphasis. Where are we going to get the money? The answer is simple. We are not obtaining it from borrowing it and paying interest on it. We have come to the end of the interest road. We will issue the money by stamping the Government's promise to pay on paper that we call currency, and issue enough to do the business we need to do. It will circulate, and while circulating, will cost the people nothing. It will not be delivered until labor is performed for it. Hence, every dollar in circulation is backed by labor already performed. We have in the past been slaves to a standard of money called the gold standard. Everything we do, everything we want is measured in terms of gold. The results of this blind folly ought to be plain to all. Over half of our population has nothing, not even credit, which has been privately controlled since the Civil War.

Until we discard all spurious standards of money and base our circulating medium on the very basis of all prosperity—labor, we will not accomplish the release of millions from the bondage of "money." When an hour's labor means a dollar and every dollar means an hour of labor, never changing, but eternal, and all commodities measured in terms of labor, there can be no financial disarrangement in this country.

To give just a glimpse of the situation developed in this country, through our ignorant and blind financial policy, let me here insert the wages paid for labor in this country today:

Approximate 1936 wage rates—Estimated number of workers
Idle (no wages)	12,500,000
Wage rate:
5 cents an hour or less (farmers)	1,500,000
6 to 10 cents an hour	3,500,000
11 to 15 cents an hour	6,000,000
16 to 25 cents an hour	10,000,000
26 to 50 cents an hour	8,000,000
51 cents to $1 an hour	3,250,000
Above $1 an hour	3,500,000

Glancing at this table, you are not surprised that our purchasing power has disappeared and people go hungry, ragged, and poorly housed, while, in fact, we cannot dispose of our mountains of food, our cotton, and our mills are shut down which are capable of manufacturing clothing, building material, tools, and instruments of trade.

There are not too many factories in this country—there are not nearly enough. The fact that many of them are idle is not because we do not need the products, but because we cannot buy them. This table shows why we cannot.

There are many who say that to fix labor itself as the basis for issuance of money cannot be done, but that the basis or standard should be the results of labor, the commodities produced. That standard, obviously, is better than a metal standard, but if it is logical to fix commodities as a money standard, it is equally as logical to go a step further and fix the labor hour as the standard. There is an added reason why this should be done, and that reason comes home to us with added force just at this time. We must stop labor troubles. Strikes must be eliminated, and they cannot be as long as private industry can fix the standard of wages. This program fixes a Government standard of wages, and while the Government is not primarily interested in engaging in private industry, it is concerned with fixing a standard of wages which private industry must meet. If it does not meet this standard, the workers will continue in Government work. This will eliminate every strike because there will be no reason to strike.

Private industry has just about ruined the Nation with its standard of wages and has been the proximate cause of bringing the country to the verge of civil war.

Then, again, if in these strikes organized labor was granted every demand it makes, that would not put the millions to work who are not now working. We must think of the men and women who are not the beneficiaries of any income whatever. As each year passes those who are now working in the trades will find less of that work to do on account of inventions and the progress of science. They must turn to other fields and when they want work this Government must be in a position to furnish it if private industry cannot.

When private industry fails to furnish work, what right has it to say that the Government shall not engage in business? This Government was not established to protect business—it was established to protect people, and when the rights of the people to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness comes in conflict with the proceedings of private business, then the public concern is paramount. The general welfare of all the people is of more Government concern than the success of any individual. Stated in another way, the individual has the right under the Constitution to proceed in any lawful enterprise in a way that best suits him until his right to individual direction conflicts with the general welfare of all the people. When that point is reached the private right ceases and the public interest begins.

Under these general principles, with a monetary system based upon labor, and operating under the larger duty of Government as herein set forth, it must be apparent to all that this Republic can restore its citizens to the greatest era of prosperity ever known in the history of the country. Finally, the greatest self-defense a country can have is the prosperity and happiness of its citizens. Make a country worth fighting for, and its defenders will rise again as they did at Concord and Lexington. Spend billions on national defense and leave our citizens in want, suffering, and embroiled with strikes, and it will take more to preserve internal peace and feed the hungry than it will to defend this Nation against all the powers of the earth combined.

Under the provisions of H. R. 3297, providing for the issuance of money based upon a labor hour, many hold that this plan would offer an opportunity for a period of wild inflation. Obviously, they do not know what inflation means. There never was and there never can be any inflation when money is issued and delivered only when labor has been performed for it. Inflation only operates when created by a debt, or a mortgaging of the future. When every dollar of money in circulation has been paid for in labor, it becomes good money. The possessor of it knows that it has already been paid for before he received it and that, while he holds it, no interest is being charged against it.

What about our money today? It is highly inflationary. It is based entirely upon a debt. The Government issues bonds for it—the Government goes in debt—obligated to pay principal and interest. As long as it circulates, interest is being charged on it. While I hold $20 in my pocket, the interest goes right on and will keep on until retired.

How will this labor-hour money be retired? The emergency-work currency, issued to carry on emergency work, will be retired through taxation, the same way that relief funds are paid for today. The only difference on that score is as follows:

First, no interest will attach to this money.

Second, it will not be issued at all as soon as the general works program of building homes and necessary public works can be inaugurated, or until private industry can take on more labor. No degree of guesswork is necessary to satisfy the worst conservative in the country that, as soon as buying power is returned to the people, private industry will revive—not only that, but it will actually increase. The more private industry is forced to live up to a Government standard of wages, the more buying power will be put in the hands of the people, and the more business private industry will do. In other words, private industry must be forced, apparently, to pay a Government standard of wages in order to be saved itself.

Permanent improvement work will be paid for from returns from the work itself. The 50,000,000 people who will own homes under this bill, will pay for them over a period of years. Trees planted will be harvested in the forests; work on dams will be paid for in the sale of hydroelectric power.

As this bill operates, there can be no inflation and no one need be alarmed at the amount of circulation. Not a dollar will circulate that is not paid for, and every dollar will be retired—in fact, must be retired as the income from the enterprise comes into being. Time is of no vital consequence, since interest is to be eliminated. Time alone gives vitality to interest. Time and interest will wreck any civilization. History demonstrates this beyond argument. When any civilization reaches a point where the people are in want and endure suffering to the breaking point, that civilization has always been destroyed. Every debt wiped out—every development destroyed, and the people begin over again from the bottom.

After this great democracy has continued 150 years with the most marvelous development in the world's history, have we developed sufficient intelligence to direct our ship of state through the dangerous waters that has brought disaster to nation after nation through all the history of the world? Every ship of state, thus far, has been wrecked upon the rocks of debt and interest. Will we profit by the experience of mankind in the past? Will we now chart our course through the known waters ahead and save for the people of this great Republic the blessings of liberty, and the right to continue to live in a land of the free, or will we shut our eyes to all that is known and permit this greatest experiment of free government to perish from the earth?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BIGELOW. Mr. Speaker, a Member of this House yesterday rebuked the Secretary of Labor for calling on the Governor of Ohio to institute certain allegedly high-handed proceedings against one Tom Girdler, forcing this person into a conference with certain labor leaders.

According to a newspaper story, the Ohio Governor was shocked at the proposal of Mme. Perkins and characterized the requested action as a species of kidnapping.

Now, the truth is that in the year 1913, when I was a member of the Ohio Legislature, the Industrial Commission of Ohio was created, which was to absorb the function of a preexisting board for the arbitration and settlement of industrial disputes.

On page 102 of the Ohio Laws of 1913 there is this language of section 8 of this act, enumerating the duties of the commission:

SEC. 8. To do all in its power to promote the voluntary arbitration, mediation, and conciliation of disputes between employees and employers and to avoid the necessity of resorting to lockouts, boycots, blacklists, discrimination, and legal proceedings in matters of employment.

In pursuance of this duty it may appoint temporary boards of arbitration, provide the necessary expenses of such boards, * * * conduct investigations and hearings—

And so forth.

On page 106, section 30 of this act reads as follows:

Each of the commissioners and the secretary of the Commission for the purposes mentioned in this act shall have power to administer oaths * * * issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, books, accounts, documents, and testimony.

The section proceeds to define the manner in which persons refusing to respond to subpoenas shall be dealt with by the court of common pleas.

Obviously what Mme. Perkins did was to ask the Governor of Ohio to invoke this law, in the attempt to bring about a settlement of the steel strike.

It was for just such occasions that the law was passed. The Governor might well have deemed it hopeless, in view of what is now known of the brutal bully type of person representing capital in this controversy. But I should say that, if the situation was serious enough to send troops to Youngstown, it was serious enough to try out every legal means of settlement that the law provides.

If a Republican had presented this episode in an unfavorable light, it might have been discounted as politics. But it is surprising to find such detractors among Democrats. To hear some of us Democrats talk, one might suppose that we had come in on a Landon landslide.

Conservatives on both sides of this House have been vocalizing on the strike situation, and Democrats have joined Republicans in their attacks on the course the administration has pursued. Some of these attacks have been excited and emotional to the point of hysteria. I would like to interpose a few sober comments on the situation.

Organized employers are trying to keep labor in a helpless state of disorganization. I not only believe that labor has the same right of organization as employers of labor, but that the democratic organization of labor is in the interest of the general public, and is especially important in the case of the mass-production industries.

We owe something to the frankness of the Tom Girdlers. Their spokesman has said that they buy labor as they buy scrap iron, and that the only kind of labor organization they propose to tolerate is the kept kind, that will eat out of their hand. This attitude is bad enough in the case of an employer of a small labor force, when personal relationships are possible, but in the case of the management of a plant of thousands of workers, this dictatorial attitude is intolerable. Such industrial feudalism fairly swears at political democracy.

Political democracy and industrial feudalism cannot exist side by side; one or the other must go.

I want to thank President Roosevelt and Governor Murphy, of Michigan, especially, for their patience and moderation in meeting the critical situations that have arisen. I hope the administration will continue, in spite of attacks from the Democratic and Republican Members of this House, to show its sympathy for the toiling masses, as against the blustering economic royalists who declare, between oaths, their undying hostility to union recognition. I am glad that not all employers are of this ilk; that there are employers who are wise enough to encourage organization and who are pursuing this better American way of industrial democracy and good will.

As a Member of Congress I would vote to use the last limit of constitutional authority in the attempt to compel the large employers of labor to concede the right of organization and to treat with free and independent unions of labor.

And, were I governor of a State, I would go just as far as the law and Constitution would permit, in so directing the civil and military power of the State, as to help labor in extending to these great industrial plants the same democracy that we practice in the State itself. These plants, with thousands of employees, are vested with a public interest. The day is past when the hard-boiled industrialist should be permitted to say: "This plant is mine, and I will do with it as I please." These plants are ours, and we the public have a right to say that they shall be operated with due regard to the rights of labor and to the public welfare.

I invite you to recall the words of the message which Abraham Lincoln, in the year 1865, sent to this House:

> It is assumed that labor is available only in connection with capital; that nobody labors unless somebody else owning capital, somehow by the use of it, induces him to labor. Labor is prior to and independent of capital. Capital is only the fruit of labor and could not have existed if labor had not first existed. Labor is the superior of capital and deserves much the higher consideration. I bid the laboring people beware of surrendering the power which they possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to shut the door of advancement for such as they, and fix new disabilities and burdens upon them until all of their liberty shall be lost.

Mr. Speaker, this labor struggle is the present phase of the age-old struggle to substitute democracy for arrogance and autocracy. We have a long way to go to get rid of our master-slave implications.

It is one of the deep mysteries of life that men can be so blind to the glaring stupidities of society and so indulgent of glorified wrongs.

I honor a certain Englishman of my acquaintance for his scorn of the coronation shams for which our would-be American royalists crossed the ocean and donned knee breeches to see. I had asked this English correspondent of mine what he thought of the coronation, and here is his answer:

> You wondered what I thought about the coronation show? Well, I wondered what God thought of it all. For rarely, if ever, can He have looked down upon human imbecilities and canting hypocrisies so efficiently massed and organized. I am proud, in many ways, of my heritage as an Englishman and count myself fortunate that my earthly pilgrimage has been spent in "England's green and pleasant land."
> But because I am proud of my heritage, I blush with shame when I ponder upon the blots and stains which mar the pages of my Nation's history.
>
> We have the worst land system of any of the leading nations. Indeed, it was the manner in which England's soil was stolen from the many by the few which gave birth, in the minds of the cunning, to the idea of stealing, through the might of right, other Nation's territories. And we rewarded them, or rather we allowed them to reward themselves, with hereditary peerships, who, until but a few years ago possessed the right, at their pleasure, to veto the people's will as expressed by the members of the House of Commons.
> Thus we have not only the throne occupied by the accident of birth, but also the barons of the soil, and let us look at the cost. The land barons take somewhere between 300,000,000 and 400,000,000 sterling. The new estimates for the succor of the royal family (small "r" please) is 410,000 pounds sterling for the King and his houses, and 70,000 pounds sterling for his Queen, 40,000 pounds sterling for his mother, 35,000 pounds sterling for his brother (the Duke of Gloucester), 25,000 pounds sterling for the Duke of Kent, 6,000 pounds each to the King's eldest child (a girl not yet in her teens) and several uncles and aunts—a total of over 600,000 pounds sterling per annum, for figure-heads who may only say, "yea" and "nay", according to the instructions from the Cabinet Ministers of the Government and who only recite parrot-like speeches made by his Ministers.

I wish more Americans had the gift to see through the absurdities of our own society. One of our millionaires, by taking advantage of the loopholes in our tax laws, will cheat our Government out of enough tax money in a single year to support all these royal paupers of England.

Some of us Americans may laugh at this puppet show of English royalty, but can we see what "fools we be" on our side of the ocean?

Our own economic history may be reduced to allegory. There was a shipwrecked crew that sought refuge on an unknown island. They found but one inhabitant of the island. He claimed to be the owner of the island. The owner met the survivors and said: "This is my island. You cannot land, except on my terms." Right here these immigrants made a fatal mistake. They should have challenged this claim to a monopoly of the island. But they had lived in such countries as England and America and their minds were perverted by unsound property laws. So they said: "Of course the island is yours. What are your terms?"

"You may land", said the monopolist, "if you will till the island and give me in rent all your produce beyond what you must have to sustain your own life."

That wage scale was agreed to. At first, however, their tools were so crude and their labor so unproductive that they needed all they earned to keep themselves alive. So there was little or no rent for the monopolist—or, in other words, the island had not begun to take on value.

But these foolish people said: "We are poor because we are not productive enough." So they invented tools and became more productive. But the bargain was that all beyond their absolute necessities was to go to the monopolist. Consequently, their increased productiveness, intsead of abolishing their poverty, merely raised the rent that the monopolist got, or, in other words, they did not grow richer but the island grew in value.

The time came when these people became so productive that the value of the island became worth $200,000,000,000, but 40,000,000 of the workers were in poverty.

In fact, the workers with their splendid tools became so productive that some two-thirds of them could work the whole island and the other third became permanently unemployed and had to live on charity or die of hunger and disease.

This is the allegorical description of the economic history of America. This is the law of wages that prevails. The fruits of progress go to rising land values and to the dividends of other forms of monopoly.

I am all for organized labor, but one thing I hope from organized labor is that, through the self-education that labor will get in its unions, it will come to see that organizing a labor monopoly against a monopoly of capital is not enough. We must have an intelligent democracy that will liquidate our vast economic illiteracy and learn the meaning of economic freedom to be gained by observance of economic law.

I want labor organized into self-respecting unions, because labor unions are schools of democracy.

Organized labor is not the final answer. An intelligent democracy is the final answer.

But labor disorganized, labor eating out of the hand of capital, labor heedless and incapable of any sense of solidarity, such labor cannot make its contribution to democracy. Such labor is meat for exploitation in time of peace, and cannon fodder in time of war, pawns of the princes of privilege, door mats for the autocrats.

Labor organized, disciplined, schooled in unions, more than the churches, more certainly than chambers of commerce, or boards of trade, is the hope of democracy.

Brothers of toil, I salute you. Courage to you and victory.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 714. An act relating to the eligibility of certain persons for admission to the civil service.

GOVERNMENT INSURANCE

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6635) to dispense with the necessity for insurance by the Government against loss or damage to valuables in shipment, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain what the amendment is?

Mr. COCHRAN. For the benefit of the Members of the House I may say that I have consulted the minority members of the committee and they consent to my motion. The changes are minor.

One change provides that regulations shall be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General instead of by the Postmaster General alone.

The second change provides that the Post Office Department shall not be included in the bill, because it already has its own protection system.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What departments are included?

Mr. COCHRAN. It includes the shipment of valuables by the Government by all departments with the exception of the Post Office Department and Government corporations.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman give us an idea of the general purpose of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, on June 7 the House passed this bill, without objection, which is designed to save the Government the $200,000 to $400,000 which it now spends annually in insuring shipments of Government valuables with private insurance companies. This is accomplished by establishing a self-insurance procedure. The Senate made a number of changes in it, all of which, as I said, are minor in character and do not materially affect the major objectives of this constructive economy legislation.

The changes made by the Senate in the House bill are as follows:

First. The Senate provided that the regulations governing the shipment of valuables by the various governmental agencies with a view to minimizing risks of loss, destruction, and damage, which regulations are authorized by section 1 of the bill, should be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General jointly instead of by the Postmaster General alone, as the House bill provided. This would make the regulations the joint effort of the agency of the Government which ships the most valuables and the governmental agency which actually carries the bulk of all Government shipments of valuables.

Second. The Senate added a proviso to section 3 of the bill that the revolving fund set up to pay losses should not be available with respect to losses of valuables insofar as the Postmaster General has authority to adjust such losses under the act of March 17, 1882, as amended. Since the Post Office Department already has this self-insurance practice, it was felt that there was no occasion to make the fund available to replace losses covered by existing self-insurance procedure. This proviso is in harmony with the proviso in the same section, as it passed the House, denying the Public Debt Service of the Treasury Department access to the fund to the extent that it is self-insured by existing law.

Third. The Senate struck out the word "disbursing" in that portion of section 3 of the bill, as it passed the House, which provided that replacements of Government valuables lost in shipment should be made out of the revolving fund set up by the bill for that purpose through such "disbursing officers" as the Secretary of the Treasury may designate. This amendment is in the interest of efficient administration, since it will permit payments to be made directly from the fund by the Treasurer of the United States, who is not regarded as a disbursing officer.

Fourth. The Senate struck out section 4 of the bill, as it passed the House. Section 4 was eliminated because of its possible effect upon those wholly owned Government corporations whose obligations are not fully guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States. The credit of such corporations might be adversely affected, in the event of a substantial loss of valuables in shipment, as a result of the creation of an obligation to repay to the United States the entire amount of such loss and the creation of a priority in favor of the United States in case of dissolution, as was provided by section 4. Any such impairment of credit would be reflected in higher interest rates, which ultimately would adversely affect the interests of the United States, the sole stockholder in such corporation.

Fifth. The elimination of section 4 necessitated renumbering the remaining sections of the bill. The Senate made several other inconsequential amendments involving form only and corrections of printing errors in the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman really thinks that this will save some money, does he?

Mr. COCHRAN. I have investigated the matter fully, and I know that as soon as this bill passes the Government will save over $1,000 a day. I will insert a letter from the Treasury confirming this statement.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If this bill will result in the saving of any money, let it be passed.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I see now you have added authority for the Secretary of the Treasury to give instructions to the Postmaster General. It shows that you have not got a lot of confidence in the gentleman who is now running the Post Office Department of this country. It seems as if the committee did a good thing.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does this cover the shipment of currency by the Federal Reserve System or by the Comptroller of the Currency to the Federal Reserve banks?

Mr. COCHRAN. It covers the Federal Reserve System in part, but not Government corporations. They take care of their own shipments, as does the Post Office Department.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand that we are spending millions of dollars annually as insurance on the transfer of currency, whereas the loss is practically nothing.

Mr. COCHRAN. H. R. 6635 will cover shipments of any valuable which is of, or similar to, a class or kind which it has been the practice heretofore of the United States—which for the purposes of the bill is defined to mean the United States or any of its executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations officers, or employees—to insure against loss, destruction, or damage in shipment. Thus, the bill will cover shipments of valuables by the Federal Reserve System when acting as fiscal agent or depositary of the United States and all shipments of valuables by the Comptroller of the Currency, since an insurance policy for the fiscal year 1937 was taken out with private insurance companies on behalf of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Reserve banks, and agents and branches acting as fiscal agents or depositaries of the United States, as well as many other agencies of the Government which are itemized in the committee reports on the bill. The bill would not, however, cover shipments between Federal Reserve banks or branches when they were acting privately and not as fiscal agents or depositaries of the United States.

The letter I referred to follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 28, 1937.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
Chairman, Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: The Senate today passed H. R. 6635, the Government losses in shipment bill, with a number of minor changes, none of which materially affect the major objectives of the bill as it passed the House. I am enclosing a memorandum explaining these changes for your use on the floor of the House.

Because of the necessity for prompt replacement of losses and the uncertainty as to whether the present legislation would be enacted in time, it has been necessary to renew the present private insurance policy which expires on June 30. The new policy, however, contains an express provision that it shall terminate at the hour and upon the date the regulations governing shipments of Government valuables to be prescribed under section 1 of the bill become effective. These regulations are now in process of preparation and will be issued promptly after the enactment of the bill. The new policy goes into effect on July 1 and will cost the Government approximately $1,000 a day for each day it remains in force. It is apparent, therefore, that the immediate enactment of the bill is very desirable from an economy standpoint so that regulations can be promulgated thereunder and the private insurance policy terminated.

The amendments made by the Senate (which, as I have indicated, are minor in character) meet with the approval of the Treasury Department, and we were hopeful, therefore, that in view of the circumstances you would deem it advisable to urge the House to concur promptly in the amendments.

Cordially yours,

C. M. HESTER,
Assistant General Counsel.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate amendment?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That as soon as practicable after the approval of this act the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General shall, jointly, with the approval of the President, prescribe regulations governing the shipment of valuables by the executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, and employees of the United States, with a view to minimizing risks of loss and destruction of, and damage to, such valuables in shipment. After the effective date of such regulations, which shall be not more than 30 days after their issuance, it shall be the duty of every such executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly owned corporation, officer, and employee, and of every person acting for him or it, or at his or its direction, to comply with such regulations in making any shipment of valuables.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000 to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the replacement of valuables, or the value thereof, lost, destroyed, or damaged in the course of shipment effected pursuant to the regulations prescribed under section 1. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated annually, beginning with the fiscal year 1939 and ending with the fiscal year 1948, inclusive, the sum of $200,000 for the said purposes, and from time to time such additional sums as may be necessary for the said purposes. There shall be in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund, to be known as "the fund for the payment of Government losses in shipment" (hereinafter referred to as "the fund"), to be constituted of the said sum of $500,000 and the sums hereafter appropriated for the said purposes, together with all recoveries and repayments credited to the fund as hereinafter provided. There is hereby further authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000, for expenditures under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be used for the payment of administrative expenses, including personal services, necessary to carry out the provisions of this act for the fiscal year 1938.

"SEC. 3. In the event of loss or destruction of, or damage to, valuables of which shipment shall have been made pursuant to the regulations prescribed under section 1, a claim in writing for replacement shall be made upon the Secretary of the Treasury, who, if he shall be satisfied that such loss, destruction, or damage has occurred and that shipment was made substantially in accordance with such regulations, shall cause replacement to be made out of the fund through such officers as he may designate. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury that such loss, destruction, or damage has occurred or that such shipment was made substantially in accordance with such regulations shall be final and conclusive and shall not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States: Provided, however, That where the Secretary of the Treasury determines that such replacement can be effected, in whole or in part, without actual or ultimate injury to the United States, by a credit in the accounts of the executive department, independent establishment, agency, officer, employee, or other accountable person making the claim, he shall not resort to the fund, except to the extent that such replacement cannot be so effected by such credit, but shall certify such determination to the Comptroller General and, upon receipt of such certification, the Comptroller General is authorized and directed to make such credit in the settlement of accounts in the General Accounting Office: Provided further, That the fund shall not be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables of which shipment shall have been made by or on behalf of the Public Debt Service of the Treasury Department, insofar as such loss, destruction, or damage is chargeable against the indefinite appropriation 'Expenses of loans, act of September 24, 1917, as amended and extended' (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 31, secs. 760, 761): And provided further, That the fund shall not be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables, insofar as such loss, destruction, or damage may be adjusted by the Postmaster General under the provisions of the act of March 17, 1882, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 39, sec. 49); nor shall it be available with respect to any loss, destruction, or damage affecting valuables of which shipment shall have been made at the risk of persons other than the United States, its executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, and employees. All recoveries and repayments on account of loss, destruction, or damage to valuables of which replacement shall have been made out of the fund shall be credited to it and shall be available for the purposes thereof.

"SEC. 4. On and after the effective date of the regulations prescribed under section 1; no executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly owned corporation, officer or employee shall expend any money, or incur any obligation, for insurance, or for the payment of premiums on insurance, against loss, destruction, or damage in the shipment of valuables except as specifically authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury may give such authorization if he shall find that the risk of loss, destruction, or damage in such shipment cannot be adequately guarded against by the facilities of the United States or that the circumstances are such that adequate replacement cannot be provided under this act.

"SEC. 5. Every officer and employee of the United States and every person acting on behalf of a wholly owned corporation who makes a shipment of valuables in good faith pursuant to and substantially in accordance with the regulations prescribed under section 1 shall be deemed, insofar as there may be concerned the propriety with respect to such shipment of any act or omission governed by such regulations, to be acting in faithful execution of his duties of office and in full performance of the conditions of his bond and oath of office, if any.

"SEC. 6. The Secretary of the Treasury shall have power, with the approval of the President, to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary for the execution of the functions vested in him by this act, and may for such purpose require persons making shipment of valuables or making claims for replacement to make such declarations or to furnish him with such other information as he may deem necessary.

"SEC. 7. For the purposes of this act—

"(a) The term 'valuables' means any article or thing or representative of value in which the United States has any interest, or in connection with which it has any obligation or responsibility, direct or indirect, and which is of, or is similar to, a class or kind of article or thing or representative of value which it has been the practice heretofore, of the United States to insure as the insured party, against loss, destruction, or damage in shipment, and includes, but is not limited to, coin, specie, bullion, currency, bonds, coupons, debentures, bills, notes, certificates of indebtedness, certificates of deposit, mortgages, assignments, certificates of stock, warehouse receipts, checks, trust receipts, warrants, stamps, and any other securities, papers, or materials of value, whether complete, incomplete, mutilated, in definitive form, or represented by interim documents; the term 'United States' as used in this subsection means the United States or any of its executive departments, independent establishments, agencies, wholly owned corporations, officers, or employees;

"(b) The term 'shipment' means the transportation, or the effecting of transportation, of valuables, without limitation as to the means or facilities used, or by which the transportation is effected, or the person to whom it is made, and includes, but is not limited to, shipments made to any executive department, independent establishment, agency, wholly or partly owned corporation, officer, or employee of the United States, or any person acting on his or its behalf or at his or its direction;

"(c) The term 'wholly owned corporation' means any corporation, regardless of the law or laws under which it is incorporated, the capital of which is entirely owned, directly or indirectly, by the United States, and includes the duly authorized officers, employees, and agents thereof;

"(d) The term 'replacement' means payment, reimbursement, replacement, or duplication, or the expenses incident thereto.

"SEC. 8. (a) Whenever it is clearly proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury—

"(1) That any interest-bearing security of the United States, identified by number and description, payable to bearer or so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, has been wholly or partly destroyed, or so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to the owner, or has been lost or stolen under such circumstances, and such a period of time having elapsed after it has matured or has become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, as in the judgment of the Secretary would indicate that it has been destroyed or irretrievably lost, is not held by any person as his own property and will never become the basis of a valid claim against the United States; or

"(2) That any interest-bearing security of the United States, identified by number and description, which is not payable to bearer, and which has not been so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, has been lost or stolen, so that it is not held by any person as his own property, or has been wholly or partly destroyed, or so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to the owner;

"the Secretary, upon receipt and approval by him of a bond of indemnity, if and as required by subsection (b) hereof, shall, in the case of a security which has not matured or become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, issue a substitute marked 'duplicate' and showing the serial number of the original security; or shall, in the case of a security which has matured or become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption, make payment thereof to the owner, with such interest only as would have been paid had the security been presented when it became due and payable: Provided, That in the case of an interim certificate relief may be given by the issue of a definitive security, whether before or after maturity, rather than by the issue of a substitute or by payment: And provided further, That no payment shall be made on account of interest coupons claimed to have been attached to such original security unless the Secretary is satisfied that such coupons have not been paid, and are in fact destroyed or can never become the basis of a valid claim against the United States.

"(b) Except as hereinafter provided, the owner of such lost, stolen, destroyed, mutiliated, or defaced security shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury a bond, to indemnify the United States, in such form and amount and with such surety, sureties, or security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require: Provided, That in case of securities payable to bearer or so assigned as to become, in effect, payable to bearer, the destruction of which has not been proved, a corporate surety, qualified under the provisions of the act of August 13, 1894, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 6, secs. 6–13), shall be required on such bond of indemnity: And provided further, That a bond of indemnity shall not be required in any of the following classes of cases, except as hereinafter provided:

"(1) If the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the loss, theft, destruction, mutilation, or defacement, as the case may be, occurred without fault of the owner and while the security was in the custody or the control of the United States (not including the Postal Service when acting solely in its capacity as the public carrier of the mails), or of a person thereunto duly authorized as lawful agent of the United States, or while it was in the course of shipment effected pursuant to and in accordance with the regulations issued under the provisions of this act;

"(2) If substantially the entire security is presented and surrendered by the owner and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied as to the identity of the security presented and that any missing portions are not sufficient to form the basis of a valid claim against the United States;

"(3) If the lost, stolen, destroyed, mutilated, or defaced security is one which by the provisions of law or by the terms of its issue is transferable only by operation of law;

"(4) If the owner is a State or political subdivision thereof, a corporation the whole of whose capital is owned by the United States, a foreign government, or a Federal Reserve bank:

"Provided, however, That in any of the foregoing classes of cases the Secretary of the Treasury may require a bond of indemnity if he deems it essential to the public interest.

"(c) The term 'interest-bearing security of the United States' or 'security', wherever used in this section, means any direct obligation of the United States issued pursuant to law for valuable consideration and which by its terms bears interest, or is issued on a discount basis, and includes (but is not limited to) bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, and Treasury bills, and interim certificates issued for any such security.

"(d) The Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the administration of this section.

"(e) Sections 3702, as amended, 3703, 3704, and 3705 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 31, secs. 735, 736, 737, and 738) are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 9. Section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 31, sec. 528), as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"'(a) Except as hereinafter provided, whenever it is clearly proved to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that any original check of the United States is lost, stolen, or wholly or partly destroyed, or is so mutilated or defaced as to impair its value to its owner or holder, persons authorized to issue such checks on behalf of the United States are authorized, before the close of the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which the original check was issued, to issue to the owner or holder thereof a substitute, marked "duplicate" and showing the number, date, and payee of the original check, upon the receipt and approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of a bond, to indemnify the United States, in such form and amount and with such surety, sureties, or security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require; but no such substitute shall be payable if the original check shall first have been paid: Provided, however, That the authority herein conferred to issue substitute checks may, in the case of checks issued on account of public-debt obligations and transactions regarding the administration of banking and currency laws, be issued without limitation of time.

"'(b) A bond of indemnity shall not be required under subsection (a) of this section in any of the following classes of cases except as hereinafter provided: (1) If the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the loss, theft, destruction, mutilation, or defacement, as the case may be, occurred without fault of the owner or holder and while the check was in the custody or control of the United States (not including the Postal Service when acting solely in its capacity as the public carrier of the mails), or of a person thereunto duly authorized as lawful agent of the United States, or while it was in the course of shipment effected pursuant to and in accordance with the regulations issued under the provisions of the Government Losses in Shipment Act; (2) if substantially the entire check is presented and surrendered by the owner or holder and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied as to the identity of the check presented and that any missing portions are not sufficient to form the basis of a valid claim against the United States; (3) if the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the original check is not negotiable and cannot be made the basis of a valid claim against the United States; (4) if the amount of the check is less than $50 and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that the giving of a bond of indemnity would be an undue hardship to the owner or holder; (5) if the owner or holder is a State or political subdivision thereof, a corporation the whole of whose capital is owned by the United States, a foreign government, or a Federal Reserve bank: Provided, however, That in any of the foregoing classes of cases the Secretary of the Treasury may require a bond of indemnity if he deems it essential to the public interest.

"'(c) The Secretary of the Treasury shall have the power to make such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary for the administration of the provisions of this section.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLDEN asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report on House Resolution 248 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 248

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the House of Representatives all facts which he may possess, or which may be available in the Labor Department, and which will show or tend to show—

(a) Whether one of the issues to be decided by, or on which advice is sought from, the Mediation Board recently appointed and consisting of Charles P. Taft, II, Lloyd K. Garrison, and Edward F. McGrady, is the signing of a contract between labor organizations and employer.

(b) Whether a book written by the said Charles P. Taft, II, contained the statement that "fuel is added to the flames by the silly refusal of employers to put such agreements as they may reach in writing."

(c) Whether Lloyd K. Garrison made the statement: "The establishment of satisfactory relations between labor and management depends upon the frank acceptance of collective bargaining and the reduction of these agreements to writing."

(d) Whether, Edward F. McGrady, of the Labor Department, being a member of the Mediation Board, it is the policy of the Labor Department to close factories where the employer refuses to sign a written contract and a labor organization threatens to either close the factory or make demonstration in force against the workers who may remain within.

(e) What, if any, written agreement, verbal agreement, gentlemen's agreement, or implied agreement, the Labor Department has with John L. Lewis, or any other person, firm, corporation, or organization, with reference to the closing of any factory, where such factory is picketed in force by individuals or labor organizations.

(f) What plans, if any, the Labor Department has made looking toward the securing for workers in industry the opportunity to work, when a majority in any particular industry, plant, or factory desire to work.

(g) Where plants are picketed or where demonstrations against struck plants are made in force, whether it is the policy of the Labor Department to close such plants.

ADVERSE REPORT TO ACCOMPANY HOUSE RESOLUTION 248

The Committee on Labor, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 248) requesting information from the Secretary of Labor, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The action of the committee is based upon the following letter from the Secretary of Labor.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 26, 1937.

The Honorable MARY T. NORTON,
Chairman, Committee on Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MME. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter of June 24, 1937, requesting my comment on House Resolution 248, submitted by Congressman HOFFMAN, and requiring the Secretary of Labor to furnish the House of Representatives certain information.

The resolution provides that the Secretary of Labor be directed to furnish the House such information as may be in my possession or available to me with regard to certain issues relating to the appointment of the mediation board for the steel industry and the current labor dispute in that industry.

With regard to paragraph (e), which reads as follows:

"What, if any, written agreement, verbal agreement, gentleman's agreement, or implied agreement the Labor Department has with John L. Lewis or any other person, firm, corporation, or organization with reference to the closing of any factory, where such factory is picketed in force by individuals or labor organizations?"

The answer is—no agreement, actual or implied, has been made nor will be with anyone.

For your convenience I shall analyze the resolution paragraph by paragraph.

The first question upon which information is asked is whether one of the issues to be decided by or upon which advice is sought by the Board is the signing of a contract between labor organizations and employer. I enclose a copy of the order appointing the Board. You will notice that neither the order nor the statute upon which it is predicated gives the Board authority to decide any issues unless the parties voluntarily agree to arbitration and submit issues to it. Thus far this has not been done. (One of the issues reported by the press to be involved was the question of signing a contract. This, however, upon later examination proved to be too limited a description of the issues which, according to the testimony of certain employers in the steel industry, was as to whether they would make any agreement, written or oral.)

The next two questions are as to whether Mr. Charles P. Taft, Chairman of the Board, and his colleague, Mr. Lloyd P. Garrison, have either written or published statements indicating their position with regard to this controversy or issue. I have no personal knowledge of any such statements on their part, and in appointing the Board my only desire was to select men who had already demonstrated their success as mediators in disputes of national significance and whose integrity and fairness was beyond question.

The paragraphs numbered (d), (e), and (g) ask the question as to whether the Labor Department has a policy in favor of closing plants where a factory is being picketed. The Department of Labor has no jurisdiction to close factories, and such factories as have been closed during the current strike have been closed by State or local officials, acting upon their police powers to preserve health and safety. I have no authority, either expressed or implied, to pass upon the legality or propriety of such orders, nor have I done so. The Labor Department has no policy whatever in this respect.

Paragraph (f) asks what plans the Department of Labor has made toward the securing for workers in industry "the opportunity to work when a majority in any particular industry, plant, or factory desire to work." The Department of Labor has no function with regard to referring applicants for employment to suitable jobs except such as are vested in the United States Employment Service under the Wagner-Peyser Act (act of June 6, 1933, 47 Stat. 113). You will notice from the language of this act that Congress did not wish the Service to be used as a strike-breaking agency, since section 11 (b) of the Wagner-Peyser Act provides that regulations shall be issued requiring notice of strikes or lockouts to be given to prospective applicants.

Yours very truly,

FRANCES PERKINS.

ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER

Whereas an emergency has arisen as a result of the labor dispute in the steel industry which tends to obstruct and interrupt the free flow of raw materials, semifinished and finished steel products in interstate commerce; and

Whereas the effects of such dispute have affected commerce among several States; and

Whereas it is desirable to provide an additional means of accomplishing a reasonable solution to this controversy, and since, in my judgment, the interests of industrial peace require it to be done:

Now, therefore, I, Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, by virtue of and pursuant to the authority vested in me by section 8 of the act of March 4, 1913 (37 Stat. 738; U. S. C., title 5, sec. 619), do hereby appoint Charles P. Taft, Lloyd K. Garrison, and Edward F. McGrady as commissioners of conciliation, to mediate the said labor dispute which has arisen in the steel industry. Such commissioners of conciliation shall jointly be referred to as the Federal Steel Mediation Board (hereafter referred to as the Board), and said Charles P. Taft shall act as chairman of such Board.

The Board is further authorized (a) to investigate issues, disputes, facts, practices, and activities of employers and employees that are burdening or obstructing, or threatening to burden or obstruct the free flow of interstate commerce; (b) to conduct hearings, take testimony under oath, and to make findings of fact and recommendations for settlement; (c) to act as voluntary arbitrator on request of the parties to the dispute and render awards with respect to the subject matter of such disputes as are submitted to it as shall be binding upon the parties to the submission.

The Board shall have its headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio, and shall make a weekly report to the Secretary of Labor and shall have authority to recommend to the said Secretary of Labor the appointment of additional employees necessary to the performance of the duties of the said Board. Each Commissioner of the Board shall receive the necessary traveling and subsistence expenses and each Commissioner who prior to the issuance of this order was not an officer or employee of the United States shall receive $25 per diem in addition thereto. All such expenses, together with the expenses incurred for rent, supplies, and employees appointed by the Secretary of Labor, shall be paid from the act of May 15, 1936, making appropriations for the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937 (49 Stat. 1347, 1348) which enables the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority conferred upon the Secretary by law to appoint commissioners of conciliation and shall be disbursed upon vouchers signed by the acting director of conciliation.

JUNE 17, 1937.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The understanding was that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] might have several minutes in which to talk about his resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan may submit such a request.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the thought behind this resolution, House Resolution 248, which I introduced on June 21, was to get the policy of the Department of Labor and also of the administration, for the Labor Department speaks for the administration, with reference to the question of collective bargaining, about which there is so much dispute.

If my information is accurate, the Secretary of Labor a few days ago called upon the Governor of Ohio to, by the use of some sort of subpena, call in Tom Girdler, president of Republic Steel Corporation, and Frank Purnell, head of Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., compel them to meet with those representing the C. I. O. and hold them in conference.

The attempt was to be similar to that which was made when the negotiations were pending in Michigan between General Motors and the C. I. O. representatives—that is, to hold them in session, of course, not forcibly, because that is absurd, but by invitation and by persuasion—until an agreement was reached.

It will be recalled that when the General Motors strike was on in Flint, Mich., Governor Murphy was in direct communication with the President. The President had stated, in substance, that it was a mistake on the part of Sloan to refuse to meet and negotiate with C. I. O. representatives.

Governor Murphy insisted, for a period of something like 40 days, that those gentlemen meet from time to time and continue their conferences. With the assistance of Mme. Perkins and of the President, Governor Murphy, who had in the meantime neglected to enforce the laws of the State, forced an agreement.

It may be remarked in passing that he took a great deal of pride in the accomplishment of his purpose. Subsequent events have demonstrated the futility of such a course of conduct.

An agreement obtained by intimidation is of but little value, especially when made, as that one was, with an organization which so quickly and frequently violated its terms.

Not long ago the President said, in substance, that he could see no reason why if a man made an agreement he should not be willing to reduce it to writing and to sign it. This was the statement of an obvious truth but it ignored the fact that the independent steel companies had not made an agreement with the C. I. O.

There has been a great deal of misunderstanding about what the Wagner law required. High Federal officials have intimated, if they have not stated directly, that even though the law did not in terms require a written agreement, nevertheless, those called to collective bargaining, if they acted in good faith, would come to an agreement and would sign a written contract.

Such a conclusion is unjustified. The law itself does not require a written agreement. Senator WAGNER so stated in a letter to the New York Sun.

The truth of the matter is that this act never was intended to compel the making of an agreement between employer and employee, and those who criticize steel or any other employer for not signing such an agreement evidently either know nothing of the history of the enactment of the law or have forgotten it.

The attention of the House is called to a statement which I put in the RECORD the other day—page 6467—which was taken from the report of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, when this law was being considered by the Senate.

The confusion which exists about this law, its terms and its purpose and what can be accomplished under it, can be avoided if this statement in the report be read. Let me quote it again (S. Rept. 573, 74th Cong., 1st sess., p. 12):

> The committee wishes to dispel any possible false impression that this bill is designed to compel the making of agreements or to permit governmental supervision of their terms. It must be stressed that the duty to bargain collectively does not carry with it the duty to reach an agreement, because the essence of collective bargaining is that either party shall be free to decide whether proposals made to it are satisfactory.

You will note that the Senate was advised, through its Committee on Education and Labor, which reported the bill, that the committee did not have the slightest idea that men could be called in by the Government and forced to enter into an agreement, either verbal or written.

This being true, it is hardly fair to criticize either party for failing to comply with a procedure never contemplated by a committee, House or Senate, when the bill was under consideration.

With this report of the committee in mind, it is apparent that the effort on the part of the Secretary of Labor and the administration to force the C. I. O. upon industry has no justification in law. It certainly has none in morals.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. Has the gentleman read the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not think it would make much difference under present conditions whether I have read either the thirteenth amendment, any other amendment, or the Constitution itself, for the rights guaranteed under the Constitution are not protected at the present time by this administration.

Mr. FORD of California. I would suggest the gentleman read it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR, 1939

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 379, authorizing Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas there is to be held in the city of New York during the year 1939 a world's fair and celebration commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States of America and of the establishment of the Federal Government in the city of New York; and

Whereas the State and city of New York have provided a site and permanent public improvements adjacent to the site at an estimated cost of $18,000,000, and New York World's Fair 1939, Inc., proposes to make available for such world's fair, through the sale of its debentures to the public or otherwise, a sum not less than $25,000,000; and

Whereas such world's fair and celebration are worthy and deserving of the support and encouragement of the United States; and the United States has aided and encouraged such world's fairs and celebrations in the past: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the United States New York World's Fair Commission, and to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce; which Commission shall serve without additional compensation and shall represent the United States in connection with the holding of a world's fair and celebration in the city of New York during the observance in the year 1939 of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States of America and of the establishment of the Federal Government in the city of New York.

SEC. 2. There shall be a United States Commissioner for the New York World's Fair, who shall be appointed by the President, and who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, and one Assistant Commissioner for said New York World's Fair, who shall be appointed by the Commissioner with the advice and approval of the Commission herein designated and shall receive compensation not to exceed $7,500 per annum. The salary and expenses of the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, and such staff as the Commission may require, shall be paid out of the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution, for such period prior to the opening of the world's fair as the Commission may determine, for the duration of the world's fair, and for not more than 6 months after the official closing thereof.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall prescribe the duties of the United States Commissioner and shall delegate such powers and functions to him as it shall deem advisable in order that there may be exhibited at the New York World's Fair by the Government of the United States, its executive departments, independent offices, and establishments, such articles and materials and documents and papers as may relate to this period of our history and such as illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government in the advancement of industry, science, invention, agriculture, the arts, and peace, and demonstrating the nature of our institutions, particularly as regards their adaptation to the needs of the people.

SEC. 4. The Commission is authorized to appoint, without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as may be necessary; purchase such materials, contract for such labor and other services as are necessary, including the preparation of exhibits plans: Provided, That the Commission may delegate such powers in its discretion. The Commissioner may exercise such powers as are delegated to him by the Commission as hereinbefore provided, and in order to facilitate the functioning of his office may subdelegate such powers (authorized or delegated), as may be deemed advisable by the Commission, to the Assistant Commissioner or others in the employ of or detailed to the Commission.

SEC. 5. The heads of the various executive departments and independent offices and establishments of the Government are authorized to cooperate with said Commissioner in the procurement, installation, and display of exhibits, and to lend to the New York World's Fair, with the knowledge and consent of said Commissioner, such articles, specimens, and exhibits as said Commissioner shall deem to be in the interest of the United States and in keeping with the purposes of such world's fair and celebration, to be placed with the science or other exhibits to be shown under the auspices of such New York World's Fair; to appoint without regard to civil-service laws and regulations and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, such draftsmen and other assistants as may be necessary; to contract for such labor or other services as shall be deemed necessary; and to designate officials or employees of their departments or branches to assist said Commissioner. At the close of the world's fair, or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases, said Commissioner shall cause all such property to be returned to the respective departments and branches concerned, and any expenses incident to the restoration, modification, and revision of such property to a condition which will permit its use at subsequent expositions and fairs, and for the continued employment of personnel necessary to close out the fiscal and other records and prepare the required reports of the participating organizations, may be paid from the appropriation authorized therein; and if the return of such property is not feasible, he may, with the consent of the Commission and the department or branch concerned, make such disposition thereof as he may deem advisable and account therefor.

SEC. 6. The sum of $3,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this joint resolution, and shall remain available until expended; except that, upon the termination of the Commission, any unexpended or unobligated balance shall be covered back into the Treasury of the United States. And, subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to erect such building or buildings, or other structures, for its own use, and such other buildings and structures as will further the trade and good will between the United States and the other nations of the world, and to provide for the landscaping of the site or sites thereof; to rent such space without regard to the provisions of section 322 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as the Commission may deem adequate to carry out effectively the provisions of this joint resolution; to provide for the decoration of such buildings or structures, and for the proper maintenance of such buildings or structures, site, and grounds during the period deemed necessary by the Commission. The Commission may contract with the New York World's Fair 1939 Inc. or otherwise for the designing and erection of such building or buildings, structure or structures, improvement or improvements, the rental of such space and for such other services as shall be deemed necessary and proper. The appropriation authorized by this joint resolution shall be available for the operation of the building or buildings, structure or structures, improvement or improvements, including light, heat, water, gas, janitor, and other required services; for the rental of space in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; for the selection, purchase, preparation, assembling, transportation, installation, arranging, safekeeping, exhibition, demonstration, and return of such articles and materials as the Commission may decide shall be included in such Government exhibit and in the exhibits of the New York World's Fair; for the purchase of uniforms, for the compensation of said Commissioner, Assistant Commissioner, and other officers and employees of the Commission in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, for the payment of salaries of officers and employees of the Government employed by or detailed for duty with the Commission, for actual traveling expenses, including travel by air, and for per diem in lieu of actual subsistence at not to exceed $5 per day: Provided, That no Government official or employee detailed for duty with the Commission shall receive a salary in excess of the rate which he has been receiving in the department or branch where regularly employed; for telephone service, purchase or rental of furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, duplicating, and computing machines, their accessories and repairs, books of reference and periodicals, maps, reports, documents, plans, specifications, manuscript, newspapers, and all other appropriate publications, and ice and drinking water for office purposes: Provided further, That payment for telephone service, rents, subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and other similar purposes, may be made in advance; for the purchase and hire of passenger-carrying automobiles, their maintenance, repair, and operation, for the official use of said Commissioner and Assistant Commissioner in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as required; for printing and binding; for entertainment of distinguished guests; and for all other expenses as may be deemed necessary by the Commission to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution. All purchases, expenditures, and disbursements of any moneys made available by authority of this joint resolution shall be made under the direction of the Commission: Provided further, That the Commission, without release of responsibility, as hereinbefore stipulated, may delegate these powers and functions: Provided further, That the Commission or its delegated representatives may allot funds appropriated herein to any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government with the consent of the heads thereof, for direct expenditure by such executive department, independent office, or establishment under such regulations as the Commission may promulgate, for the purpose of defraying any proper expenditure which may be incurred by such executive department, independent office, or establishment in executing the duties and functions delegated by the Commission. All accounts and vouchers covering expenditures shall be approved by said Commissioner or by such assistants as the Commission may designate except for such allotments as may be made to the various executive departments, independent offices, and establishments for direct expenditure; but these provisions shall not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit, and permit any obligations to be incurred in excess of the amount authorized to be appropriated herein: And provided further, That in the construction of buildings and exhibits requiring skilled and unskilled labor, the prevailing rate of wages, as provided in the act of March 3, 1931, shall be paid. Subject to the provisions of this joint resolution, the Commission is authorized to make any expenditures or allotments deemed necessary by it to fulfill properly the purposes of this joint resolution.

SEC. 7. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Commission, may receive contributions from any source to aid in carrying out the purposes of this joint resolution, but such contributions shall be expended and accounted for in the same manner as the funds authorized to be appropriated by this joint resolution. The Commissioner is also authorized to receive contributions of material, or to borrow material or exhibits, and to accept the services of any skilled and unskilled labor that may be available through State or Federal relief organizations, to aid in carrying out the general purposes of this joint resolution. At the close of the world's fair and celebration or when the connection of the Government of the United States therewith ceases the Commissioner shall dispose of any such portion of the material contributed as may be unused, and return such borrowed property; and, under the direction of the Commission, dispose of any buildings or structures which may have been constructed and account therefor: Provided, That all disposition of materials, property, buildings, etc., shall be at public sale to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States: Provided further, That the Commission may, if it deems it desirable and in the public interest, transfer without consideration and title to the Federal Exhibits Building erected or constructed to the city of New York.

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Commission to transmit to Congress, within 6 months after the close of the world's fair, a detailed statement of all expenditures and such other reports as may be deemed proper, which reports shall be prepared and arranged with a view to concise statement and convenient reference. Upon the transmission of such report to Congress the Commission established by and all appointments made under the authority of this joint resolution shall terminate.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the resolution offered by the handsome, persuasive, and able gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT] will have the support of all the Members of the House. I recollect, however, that the President vetoed a former measure carrying $5,000,000, and one of the reasons given was the fact that the Congress of the United States had encroached upon the powers of the Executive. It is a case of the pot calling the kettle black. In other words, we had written our own legislation and we had put something in it that the President did not like. The so-called rubber-stamp Members of Congress had all of a sudden become iron men and had decided for once to write their own legislation, and that evidently displeased the Chief Executive.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this legislation as written is far from acceptable to me. The President claimed that the appropriation previously carried of $5,000,000 was excessive, and gave that as an additional reason for his veto. His contention is not based on facts, and amounts to false economy. This fair will bring in three or four times as much in Federal taxes as the $3,000,000 appropriation carried in the present resolution. The $3,000,000 is not sufficient to carry out the purposes of the world's fair at New York, which will be the greatest world's fair in all history. We will have to come back to Congress and, mark my words, ask for $2,000,000 additionally if we are to carry out our obligations made to erect the buildings of foreign nations on the fairgrounds in New York. This is not an ordinary exposition. This fair will so transcend any other world's fair in history that no real comparison can be made. We will spend at least $130,000,000. No other fair on record has spent over $30,000,000. We expect 50,000,000 people, Republicans and Democrats alike, to visit the fair.

Furthermore, we expect that $1,000,000,000 will be put into circulation, not merely spent but put into circulation and turned over a number of times, which will help to stimulate prosperity throughout the United States. The fair will employ a large number of people, not only on the fair grounds proper but in the handling of exhibits and for the material that goes into the exhibits, the development of the grounds, and the erection of the buildings. It has been estimated as high as 200,000 on a temporary basis and 50,000 during the duration of the fair.

This is no new venture. Thirty-five years ago on the floor of the House of Representatives 4 hours were allotted in which to determine where the world's fair, which then went to Chicago, should be located. New York claimed the fair at that time. Each of the following cities, St. Louis, Chicago, New York, and Washington, had Representatives on the floor of the House who spoke for 1 hour in favor of locating that world's fair in one of these four cities. New York failed to get the fair at that time, and since then Chicago has had another, San Francisco is about to have a second, St. Louis received seven millions from the Government for her fair, and we have had none at all and received nothing. The Federal Government donated over five millions to the two Chicago fairs.

The reason New York failed to get the fair at that time is that Thomas C. Platt, the Republican boss of New York State, decided the commission for the world's fair in New York City should be packed with Republicans. It so happened, and I am proud to state it as long as we have this matter before us, that my father was then the Republican leader in the Assembly of New York State.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. I am proud of the fact that my father refused to go along with this plan to pack the commission which the boss, Mr. Platt, wanted. The result was that my father put through in the New York Legislature a commission composed of Democrats and Republicans alike, members of Tammany Hall, independent Democrats, and Platt and anti-Platt Republicans, with a majority, however, of Republicans. The fight became so bitter—to show that this was a real issue 35 years ago—that my father, the Republican leader of the assembly, and Fred Gibbs, who afterward was Republican national committeeman, were read out of the party by the Republican State committee because they would not go along at the dictation of Mr. Platt and pack the world's fair commission and make it a political and partisan agency.

I am pleased to state to the Democratic Members of the House that this New York World's Fair resolution as about to be passed provides for minority representation. It provides for three Members from the House of Representatives and three from the Senate. Three members are to be appointed by the Speaker and three by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and naturally one of each will be a Republican. The bill also provides there shall be two assistant commissioners with salaries of $7,500, but they must not belong to the same party. Therefore we will have minority representation, and as long as we have minority representation you can rest assured that this money will be honestly and efficiently spent and the Commission will carry out the wishes of the Members of the House, whether Republican or Democratic, to make the New York World's Fair the greatest and best ever undertaken. It will be a credit to the Federal Government, whose constitutional establishment by the inauguration of President Washington at New York City will be commemorated on its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary in 1939.

Above all, I want it understood that reducing the amount to $3,000,000 is false economy. The amount should be $5,000,000. We will be forced to come back for $2,000,000 more if the fair is carried on another year through 1940, as we expect it will be.

I congratulate the Members of the House on writing and passing this kind of nonpartisan legislation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, we have presented a complete agreement as to all items having a place in the War Department appropriation bill under the arrangement initiated by the House to divorce from such bill items of a civil character which are administered by the War Department.

We have been assured that the War Department civil functions appropriation bill will be reported to the Senate as a separate measure, and that the Senate will be asked to recede from its amendments to the pending bill looking to continuing a single War Department bill consisting of a military and a nonmilitary title. Therefore we may be reasonably sure, if this conference report be adopted and disposition is made in accordance with the recommendations we shall make as to the six amendments we were required to report in disagreement because of our rules, that the War Department appropriation bill will be quickly sped on its way for Executive approval.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate added to our bill $1,058,863. It made additions of $5,540,237 and it made reductions of $4,481,374, resulting in the net increase I have stated.

The major propositions contributing to the gross Senate increase are these: The addition of 478 commissioned officers—50 Medical, 25 Dental, 228 Air Corps, and 175 other branches—primarily to permit of the establishment of additional R. O. T. C. units. This proposition meant an addition of $1,345,197, and would not be the full cost because it would not be practicable immediately to commission that number of additional officers.

On this proposition we compromised on 175 additional Regular Army officers and 100 additional Air Corps Reserve officers to be employed on continuous active duty. The regular officers are to be assigned—50 to the Medical Corps and 25 to the Dental Corps, as proposed by the Senate, and 100 to other branches, with view to making available officers necessary to the establishment of 51 or 52 additional R. O. T. C. units, which the Department was authorized to establish the present year, but which it could not do because of insufficient officers. The 100 Air Corps Reserve officers will increase the number to 650, or 350 more than are on continuous active-duty detail the present year. Our compromise results in a reduction of $333,163.

The next proposition involves Regular Army enlisted men. The House bill carried an amount sufficient to pay an average of 162,000 enlisted men. Our thought was that there may be as many at times as 165,000 or more men in the service during the next fiscal year, and a considerably lesser number at other times, so that the average probably would not exceed 162,000. It is next to impossible to maintain a constant number. The Senate felt that the money should be available in the event the maximum average number of 165,000 should be maintained, and added $1,028,750 for that reason. The Senate receded from its position on this matter.

For construction at military posts the Senate added to our bill $2,347,240, all for authorized projects, but none with Budget support except the Edgewood Arsenal project, which the House already had refused.

We have agreed upon two projects—one at Fort Niagara, N. Y., to replace buildings destroyed by fire, and another at Camp Stanley, Tex., toward providing modern and adequate ammunition storage facilities. Members of the War Department subcommittee inspected that establishment in the late summer of 1935 and were impressed with the need for early remedial measures, and so stated in the report of the inspections which they made. Therefore, from its increase of $2,347,240, the Senate has receded from $1,715,190.

While a relatively small amount, the Senate added $281,000 to our bill for the acquisition of land at West Point. It also added contractual authority up to $638,000, so that, including the sum previously appropriated, the bill, including the contractural authority, exhausts the authorization of $1,500,000 for expanding the land area of the Military Academy reservation.

I shall later submit a recommendation to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment repealing existing authority to purchase parcels of land on the easterly side of the area at present authorized to be acquired. This is highly valuable property and such repeal no doubt will result in a saving of several hundred thousand dollars.

Next, the Senate cut in two the $800,000 provided by the House for the procurement of mobile antiaircraft guns and mounts for assignment to seacoast defenses in the United States, Panama, and Hawaii. We persuaded them to yield on this proposition. We are woefully lacking in this sort of equipment.

An item in which the Members of the House are greatly interested is giving training for 1 year to Reserve officers under the provisions of the so-called Thomason Act. That act authorized 1,000 Reserve officers to be employed on active duty with the Regular Army for 1 year, and the commissioning of 50 of such officers in the Regular Army after such period of active service after competitive tests. The House provided for full compliance and the Senate provided for only 500. The closing date for applications for this assignment occurred just a few days ago and the number was approximately 800. Our information is that of this number not more than 600 will qualify. We have agreed upon making provision for 650 to be on the safe side. This solution permits of a reduction in the amount proposed by the House of $460,023.

These are the major matters we had before us. Partly to offset its increases, the Senate proposed the following reductions or methods:

Acquisition of land at Mitchel Field: Substitute contract authorization for direct appropriation	$250,000
Air Corps: Substitute contract authorization for direct appropriation	2,754,700
Seacoast defenses, mobile antiaircraft guns: Allow half of House proposal	400,000
Reserve officers under Thomason Act: Make provision for one-half compliance	942,400

The Mitchel Field change we have permitted to stand. The seacoast defense and Thomason Act proposals I have already explained. As to the Air Corps, we have reduced the increase under contractual authority by $873,106 and have put that amount back into the direct appropriation.

Mr. Speaker, this bill as it passed the House carried appropriations totaling $415,751,531.

That sum was $734,930 below the Budget estimates.

As we bring it to you from conference, the bill carries a total of $415,269,154.

This sum is $482,377 less than the bill carried when it left the House and is less than the Budget estimates by $1,217,307.

If we charge in the one item of reappropriation, we are still below the Budget $699,457.

The bill carries in contract authorizations $21,887,394, or $873,106 less than it did as it passed the Senate. These have no relation, however, to the appropriations for the fiscal year for which we are appropriating.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I am pleased to yield to the senior minority member of the subcommittee on the War Department, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. The gentleman stated in his presentation that the bill carries in contract authorizations $21,887,394, or $873,106 less than it carried as it passed the Senate. I want the RECORD to show the contract authorization in the bill as it left the House was $18,347,800.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. WILCOX. I am interested in amendment no. 28, and I note from the conference report that the general appropriation for the Air Corps was reduced by the conference committee from $60,500,000, as provided by the House, to $58,618,406, or approximately a reduction of $2,000,000. I am informed by the Air Corps that under the appropriation as agreed to by the conference committee the Air Corps will be short 276 Regular officers and 104 Reserve officers, necessary to actually man the planes now under contract by the War Department. I would like to know of the gentleman whether this is true or not.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. In the first place, let me say to the gentleman that the amendment to which he refers has nothing at all to do with officer money; it is all for matériel.

Mr. WILCOX. Oh, no; I am speaking now of the general appropriation. I am not speaking of the contract authorization.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. But the amount the gentleman has referred to has to do with matériel and not with personnel.

Mr. WILCOX. Does the gentleman mean to tell me that the amount of $58,618,406 is entirely for matériel and not for personnel of the Air Corps?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Absolutely so, except civil employees.

Mr. WILCOX. Then at what point in the appropriation bill is the appropriation for the personnel of the Air Corps, and what reduction was made in that amount which makes it necessary for the Air Corps to be short 380 officers necessary to man the planes under contract?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That all comes under pay of the Regular Army and under pay of the Organized Reserves.

Mr. WILCOX. Did the conference committee agree upon a reduction in the appropriation for personnel?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. We are providing for about 400 more air officers for the coming year than they have this year.

Mr. WILCOX. Did the conference committee agree to a reduction in the amount of the appropriation for personnel as it passed the House?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No; not as it passed the House; as it passed the Senate, yes.

Mr. WILCOX. Is there any reduction in the amount appropriated for officer personnel for the Air Corps now below the amount provided in the bill at the time it passed the House?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No; there is an increase, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman, briefly and succinctly, summarize what was done with reference to additional officers for the Army, not only for the Air Corps but for the ground troops, and also what was done from the standpoint of Regular officers and from the standpoint of Reserve officers on active duty?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I shall be pleased to do that.

The Senate made provision for 478 additional Regular Army officers. We compromised on 175 additional Regular Army officers and 100 additional Air Corps Reserve officers, to be employed on continuous active duty. The Regular officers are to be assigned—50 to the Medical Corps and 25 to the Dental Corps—as proposed by the Senate, and 100 to other branches of the service, with the view to making available officers necessary to the establishment of 51 or 52 R. O. T. C. units.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Then, as I understand it, there will be 25 additional officers for the Dental Corps?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And 50 additional officers for the Medical Corps and 100 additional officers to be used with R. O. T. C. units?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is right, and 100 additional officers of the Air Corps Reserve.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. They are not to be Regular officers?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. They are to be Reserve officers?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. For how long a tour of duty?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Five years.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. How many Reserve officers will the additional 100 officers make on duty with the Air Corps during the coming fiscal year?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Six hundred and fifty.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Looking to a 5-year tour of duty?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. A 5-year tour; yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. With respect to the additional 100 officers for the Air Corps, inasmuch as the War Department reports it has not had an unusual number of applications for duty as commissary officers, I am wondering if the Air Corps is faced with any difficulty in getting Reserve officers.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL] knows, we are working toward a goal of 1,350 Air Corps Reserve officers to be on continuous active duty. I just said that we will have 650 during the next fiscal year. So far as I am aware, there has been no testimony that difficulty may be experienced in getting the men of the right type to fill these places.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman means these Reserve officers?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am wondering whether or not the Air Corps could get this additional number of Reserve officers for active duty of the type and character they would want?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. From inquiries I have made I am inclined to believe that they can.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Frankly, I say to the gentleman I think it would have been perhaps wiser to have given at least some of the additional 100 Regular officers to the Air Corps, and, if need be, put some of the Reserve officers on some of these R. O. T. C. units.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Of course, we can get 50 more Regular Air Corps under the Thomason Act.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Provided you took all of your Thomason officers from the Air Corps.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That was done in 1936.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. You did it last year because you had not had 1,000 young men on active duty, all of these young men having been given hope of getting a Regular commission, these young men being in all the different branches. You could not now, under the present circumstances, take away all those 50 commissions and give those 50 commissions to officers for the Air Corps without doing a great injustice and really breaking an obligation to all of these other officers out of the thousand who are in the ground forces. In that connection, this question of getting Reserve officers for the Air Corps naturally leads into the matter of the Thomason officers. My understanding is that the reason you accept a reduction from 1,000 Thomason officers to 650 is because the War Department reported that it had only 800 applications for the 1,000 places.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. So it would seem to me if they had trouble in getting these Thomason officers where they can go and get them from the Infantry and the Signal Corps and the Intelligence and all of these branches, the chances are that you would not get the type you wanted from these 100 places for the Air Corps. Let me ask the gentleman another question. I notice that the amendment numbered 25 appropriates $952,000 for acquisition of land, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $1,200,000 as proposed by the House. Will the gentleman advise the House as to what land is involved in those appropriations?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The War Department asked for additional land at Mitchel Field, because, when Mitchel Field was established, being one of the first fields on Long Island, it was built to take care of small planes, for which a runway of 2,000 feet was ample. Now the runways must be around 5,000 feet for some of these large bombers.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman is speaking with reference to amendment numbered 25. I notice that on page 6 of the printed report amendments numbered 24 and 26 deal with Mitchel Field as well as with West Point. Do all three of those amendments deal with Mitchel Field?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Amendment no. 25 relates to Mitchel Field alone.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Do 24 and 26 relate to Mitchel Field?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Twenty-four does, but 26 does not.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The report on its face does not show in respect to those two amendments. Will the gentleman give us the picture as to those two amendments?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Twenty-five applies to a transfer from direct appropriation to contract authorization of $250,000.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman tell us how much cash is made available and how much contract authorizations is made available for Mitchel Field?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Five hundred thousand dollars cash and $1,020,000 contract authorization.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. For Mitchel Field?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. How much did the House carry for that?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Which was cash alone?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. And carried no contract authorization?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Will the gentleman give us the same picture with reference to West Point?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. We carried $150,000, to be used in conjunction with a prior appropriation of $431,000 for the acquisition of a certain defined area.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. No contract authorization?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No contract authorization; $150,000 in cash.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. The gentleman means that much in cash?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. What does the conference report carry?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The Senate bill carried $431,000 by way of appropriation and $638,000 by way of contract authorization. The conference report contemplates concurrence in the Senate action in these respects.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. I am interested in noting that some of these amendments with reference to Mitchel Field and West Point are carried in disagreement under clause 2 of rule XXI. I suppose that is the contract feature?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Because a contracting provision is not an appropriation?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is correct.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. So far as the Chemical Warfare Service is concerned, it is left as it was?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman has made no comment with reference to the appropriation for flood control. Did the conferees finally dispose of that matter?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Under the instructions of the House we were not permitted to agree to amendments numbered 1, 47 to 77, and 80. We had such instructions from the House. We have reason to believe that the Senate will pass the separate bill, which the House passed, containing the matters encompassed by such amendments, which include, among others, appropriations for flood control.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Then, as I understand, this report only applies to the War Department appropriation bill?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Absolutely.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It has nothing to do with the other appropriation bill that was a companion bill to the regular War Department appropriation bill?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Nothing at all to do with it. I am glad to say to the gentleman from Ohio that I think we shall be able to bring back a report with which he will be pleased.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Not to violate any confidence, how does the gentleman come to that conclusion?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is just an opinion of my own, not without foundation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is this the fact, that the Senate has practically receded from their determination to combine the two bills?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The Senate itself has not finally passed upon the matter. We have reason to believe that the Senate Appropriations Committee will make such a recommendation to the Senate.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That they recede from that position?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is the prospect?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. That is the prospect.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I am naturally interested in the statement the gentleman makes about the reduction of the young Reserve officers from 1,000 to 650.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. May I say to the gentleman right there that we should keep in mind that the House complied with the terms of the law 100 percent? It was the Senate that proposed the reduction.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Of course, I regret that the conferees did not stand pat on 100 percent, because I think that is one of the finest activities the War Department has carried on, as it has provided us with a year's training for 1,000 young military men in the country, as well as providing 50 officers each year.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. We went along 100 percent as far as we could get any assurance from the sources where we look for assurance, that trainees would be available.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I am glad to know that the House committee is committed to the policy involved in that act.

I want to ask the distinguished chairman this question: Now that you propose to reduce that from 1,000 young officers to 650, does it still mean that 50 of the 650 will receive their permanent commissions just the same?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes; it does, I am happy to say.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. One other question, please. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain the effect of the proviso put on the post-exchange amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma relative to the operation of post exchanges and the indiscriminate selling of all kinds of merchandise in competition with local merchants?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I shall be pleased to discuss that when we take that amendment up separately.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In regard to sections 21, 22, and 23 at the Savanna Ordnance Depot, Ill., a great emergency exists out there for the storage of ammunition and things in general under the Ordnance Department. What I would like to know is the justification for taking that out of the bill. The Secretary of War, the Chief of Ordnance, the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, all say that a great emergency exists out there for the storage of ammunition. The Bureau of the Budget also authorized it. Will the gentleman kindly explain why it was taken out?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes. I may say to my colleague that there was no Budget estimate whatever for the proposition he has mentioned. There was no Budget support for the item whatever.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That is merely the reason why it was taken out?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Primarily. Furthermore, the committee had no knowledge of its place on the War Department's priority list of matters or projects awaiting appropriation.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That passed the Military Affairs Commitee unanimously and was authorized by the House.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I may say to the gentleman that I know how he feels about it, but there are 30 or 40 other posts in the same shape as the one to which the gentleman refers. There is about equal pressure from every angle to have something done about every other post.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Was there a Budget estimate at Fort Niagara?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. No; there was no Budget estimate; but there is an emergency situation there caused by fire.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Is the gentleman acquainted with the Ordnance Depot at Savanna, Ill.?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I am not, I am sorry to say.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. I would like to ask the gentleman a question along the same line.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman stated with reference to the Savanna ordnance depot that there was no Budget estimate. I would like to know why the gentleman disagrees with the Senate in striking out Edgewood Arsenal, for which there was Budget approval, as distinguished from Camp Stanley and some of these others which I understand had no Budget approval? The only items directly authorized by this Congress were eliminated.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I may say for the same reason we had when we did not include the item in the bill when it passed the House, which was, in the main, that after the committee looked over the situation at Edgewood Arsenal—we are not saying we are 100 percent right—we decided that it would be unwise to build these additional buildings so close to the munitions plant, and that further study should be given to this situation before anything was done.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Knowing the situation as I do, I am surprised that those reasons had any weight with the Senate conferees.

Mr. McCORMACK. My understanding, in response to the question of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is that this confines itself to the military aspects of the War Department appropriation.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I am glad to state to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts that it does.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I simply want to make a brief observation. I was presiding over the War Department appropriation bill, both aspects of it, and I listened with deep interest, as did all Members, to the very fine, and properly so, complimentary references made by the chairman of the subcommittee to the other members of the subcommittee, both Democratic and Republican, and to the distinguished clerk of the subcommittee, John Pugh, with all of which references the Members on both sides of the aisle agree. It is my desire to make a brief reference to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]. This is his first year as chairman of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for the War Department. I presided over the bill, as I have stated. I want to state for the RECORD that I have never seen any bill more admirably handled than were the appropriation bills of the War Department by the chairman of the subcommittee. It was a pleasure to see all the members of the subcommittee, both Democrats and Republicans, backing up the chairman of their subcommittee on the floor and manifesting deep interest in fighting for the report of the subcommittee. It is a fine spirit to see. It is a nice thing to see a committee, no matter what their differences may be in executive session, when they have ironed them out, come on the floor and battle for the report of the committee. It is evidence of fine leadership on the part of the chairman of any committee or subcommittee when such a situation exists. It is an inspiration and example to the other committees of the House. I congratulate the members of this subcommittee, and particularly do I congratulate the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER], chairman of the subcommittee, on the very diplomatic and able manner in which he handled both aspects of the appropriations for the War Department when both bills were in the House. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, June 28, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] arose in this House and stated that the Secretary of Labor of the United States had suggested to the Governor of Ohio—

> That he use the subpena power of the State to put certain steel-industry officials under duress and to close their plants by the State militia and maintain that status until the C. I. O. had extracted from them such contracts as they might desire.

The gentleman from Georgia described this as "one of the most shocking incidents that has taken place in some time." The distinguished gentleman closed his remarks with this statement:

> Mr. Speaker, this is no time for the suspension of public laws, but it is a time for rigid enforcement if this Government is to live.

Now, my friends, I do not know where the gentleman got his information. Probably from the press. Probably he was taking the statement of the Governor of Ohio seriously. Be this as it may, however, the only thing that is wrong with the statement is that, like the comment of Mark Twain upon reading of his own demise, it is greatly exaggerated.

The Secretary of Labor, who has had long years of experience with industrial disputes, happens to be familiar with the laws of the various States that deal with this class of disputes. It so happens that the Ohio Industrial Commission has authority, conferred upon it by section 871–30 of the Ohio General Code, to make inquiry into industrial disputes, and that in order to make this inquiry effective the commission is empowered to issue subpenas.

The able Secretary of Labor, knowing of this provision in Ohio law, in the most friendly and cooperative manner, suggested to the Governor of the State of Ohio that he call the industrial commission's attention to the power it possessed and call not just the steel officials but all parties to the controversy and ask them to sit around the table and attempt to ascertain if, after hearing both sides, some common ground could not be found to settle the dispute.

I am assured at first hand that no mention was made of calling militia, and knowing the Secretary's well-known aversion to the employing of force as a substitute for reason, am forced to assert that I will accept her word without question.

Now, my friends, I see nothing shocking in the Secretary's suggestion. It was a very natural and, I believe, a very wise suggestion, and I am sure that had the gentleman from Georgia been in possession of the facts, not the garbled newspaper accounts which went to the extreme of asserting that one of the officials was to be legally kidnaped, would not have made the statement he did.

Now, as to the gentleman from Georgia's last paragraph (p. 6423, June 28, RECORD)—

> That this is no time for the suspension of public law, but it is a time for its rigid enforcement if this Government is to live—

Let me offer this comment: I fully agree with my distinguished friend, and I most cordially invite his cooperation in the rigid enforcement of the terms of the Wagner Act not only as it applies to organized labor but as it applies to organized, truculent, law-defying employers of labor.

If the Governor of Ohio had followed the Secretary of Labor's friendly and wise suggestion and employed the legal means at his command, it is entirely within the realms of possibility that a friendly meeting could have been arranged and the differences, if not wholly adjusted, at least brought to a point where the general public would have had something on which to crystallize its opinion as to the facts.

If the Governor of Ohio refuses to utilize the legal means at hand, he is derelict in his duty, and if the citizens of that State, employers and employees, have violated the law, it is the Governor who has shown the way.

I herewith give a brief history of the case which has stirred up all the controversy:

The Federal Steel Mediation Board tried repeatedly to bring the steel and union men together for a joint meeting, but failed. Then it reported:

> We cannot but believe that the bitterness and suspicion which separate the two sides would be allayed by a man-to-man discussion around the conference table and that the only hope of settlement lies in such a meeting.

The Ohio Industrial Commission under the authority conferred upon it by section 871–30 has the power to subpena witnesses to appear at the same time and place for the purpose of testifying in one another's presence in answering questions on the cause of strikes, the facts in the particular case, various opinions held with respect to them and the feasibility of different proposals for settlement. It is believed that out of such testimony and rebuttals understanding and method of settlement would grow naturally, as recommended by the Mediation Board.

The use and meaning of a subpena is clear and lawful. It is a court order to appear in person and/or with papers and records before a properly constituted judicial or Government agency to give evidence on matters within the jurisdiction of the agency or court and recited in the subpena.

Its purpose, of course, is to insure the presence and testimony of all witnesses and to give them the protection of the court in matters relating to their testimony. It is a protection to witnesses against legal action and many careful persons will not give important evidence except under subpena.

Its purpose also is to enable a court or Government agency having jurisdiction to cause opposing witnesses to testify in the presence of each other and so bring about the corrections in factual testimony, and restraints in opinion testimony which are so necessary to calm appraisal of the situation and wise and lawful decisions by the court or agency.

Any individual subpenaed by a Government agency or competent court has a right of appeal to higher court on the validity of the order or of any penalty for contempt.

It is an ancient, carefully safeguarded, lawful method necessary to the administration of justice and law. It has not been abused. It can only be used by Government under constitutional safeguards of the individual subpenaed and is not at the disposal of private persons.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio is specifically given by law the power to issue subpenas for witnesses in the mediation of strikes and industrial disputes and for their prevention—section 871–22, paragraph 9, Ohio General Code. If Mr. Girdler and Mr. Purnell testified in the presence of Mr. Lewis and Mr. Murray, and Mr. Lewis and Mr. Murray in the presence of Mr. Girdler and Mr. Purnell, all might learn something to their advantage about union responsibility, employers' doubts and suspicions, ability and integrity of union leadership, and ability and integrity of industrial direction. Also, both groups might learn something about the state of mind and desires of those workers who are not organized. And having heard each other's testimony and answers under questions and examination, their mental understanding of the situation would almost certainly bring the meeting of minds on some subjects out of which mutual agreements in regard to a settlement might rise.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio may some day have cause to use subpena to bring in as witnesses members, officers, and leaders of unions who are charged with violation of agreements, breach of the peace, acts against the interest of the industry, go-slow or sit-down movements, misrepresentation, coercion, all of which would require real investigation by the Industrial Commission of Ohio in order to prevent strikes or lockouts and to keep industry moving and to justice to those under contract, as well as others.

The desirability of settling industrial disputes by reason, not by force, by an orderly process of an authorized public body is obviously very important, and it is the duty of the Government, State, Federal, and local, to facilitate this method. It is also the duty of employers and workers to participate fully in such a method. The Secretary of Labor's suggestion to the Governor of Ohio was that he advise the Ohio Industrial Commission to proceed to make inquiry with regard to this strike under the authority conferred upon it by section 871–30 of the Ohio General Code.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BIERMANN].

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to oppose this committee and my distinguished friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]. I know it is futile to oppose any of these Army or Navy appropriations, but I do want to call to the attention of the House some figures that I think are worthy of their thoughtful consideration.

We have been passing "neutrality" legislation to keep us out of war. At the same time we have been passing appropriations that cannot be defended on any ground except that we are going to some foreign country to engage in war. I have directed the attention of the House a number of times to the fact that there is not an Army or Navy officer in this country who will contend for one minute that it is possible to invade this country. The matter of transportation alone is something that every Army or Navy officer knows would prevent this country's being invaded; yet in the fiscal year 1935 we appropriated $1,000,000,000 for the Army and the Navy; in 1936 we appropriated, roughly, $1,060,000,000; for the fiscal year 1937 we appropriated about $1,035,000,000; and for the fiscal year 1938 we are appropriating more than $1,100,000,000. During the past 4 fiscal years the War and Navy Departments were allotted more than $900,000,000 of relief money in addition to the appropriations.

This bill carries an appropriation of $415,000,000 for the so-called military activities of the War Department. The nonmilitary activities bring the total appropriations for the War Department up to $609,000,000 for the 1938 fiscal year.

For the year 1904 the total appropriations for all activities of the United States Government were $464,000,000; for 1905 they were $467,000,000; for 1906 they were $489,000,000; for 1907 they were $549,000,000; for 1908 they were $555,000,000. I will skip some years. For the year 1916 they were $678,000,000. Up until 1917 this Government had never appropriated in any single peacetime year as much as $700,000,000 for the entire running expenses of the Government.

For the past 3 fiscal years we have been appropriating each year more than $1,000,000,000 for Army and Navy activities, while at the same time we were passing legislation to keep ourselves out of war. The proponents of these huge appropriations cannot defend them on the plea of "defense", because they are confronted with the incontrovertible fact that not an Army or Navy officer will put his name to a statement that it is possible to invade this country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD a table by the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department showing the cost of all the Government buildings in this city occupied for office purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIERMANN. As will be seen from the table, the cost of the land on which the buildings are erected, the real estate alone, is $37,012,008; the cost of the buildings themselves amounts to $228,138,286. This makes a total cost for real estate and improvements owned by the United States in the city of Washington and utilized for offices by our executive departments and independent establishments of $265,150,294; in other words, we are appropriating this year for the Army of the United States military and nonmilitary activities nearly $100,000,000 more than twice the cost of all the land and all the buildings occupied by the Government of the United States in the city of Washington. The 1938 appropriations for the War and Navy Departments combined are more than four times the cost of all the land and all the buildings thereon owned by the United States Government and occupied for office purposes in the city of Washington.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman does not speak against the nonmilitary appropriations, does he, at this time, but just the military appropriations?

Mr. BIERMANN. I am not acquainted with all the details of the nonmilitary appropriations for the War Department. I think some of them might be classified as military appropriations. The fact of the matter is that the War Department and the Navy Department during the coming fiscal year are going to take out of the taxpayers a good deal over $1,000,000,000. I do not think these appropriations can be defended.

I call the attention of Members of the House to the fact if we are ever going to balance the Budget of the United States, and if we are ever going to relieve the taxpayers of the United States, we have to make the cuts where the big expenditures are made. The big expenditures are made for the Army and Navy and, of course, temporarily for relief. While the expenditures for relief are declining, the Army and Navy appropriations steadily increase.

The other day I secured figures with reference to the total contribution of the State of Iowa to the Federal Treasury. For the year 1936 the total contribution of the people of Iowa in income taxes, corporation taxes, excise taxes, liquor and tobacco taxes, and all others, to the Federal Government was twelve and one-half million dollars. Compare that twelve and one-half million dollars with the enormous appropriations we make for the Army and Navy and you will see what a burden it is on the taxpayers of the United States. At the present rate the Federal taxes of the people of Iowa for 88 years would not quite pay what our War and Navy Departments will consume in 1938.

May I renew my request to any of the Members who are in favor of these enormous expenditures to insert in the RECORD the name of a second lieutenant or of an ensign in the Navy who will make a statement and sign his name to it that it is possible to invade the United States?

Mr. WEARIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIERMANN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WEARIN. The gentleman has mentioned the total amount of the Army and Navy appropriations for 1 year, which, as I understand it, was $1,100,000,000 plus.

Mr. BIERMANN. Yes.

Mr. WEARIN. That would be more than enough to move the United States Capital out to the central section of the United States where it would be safe from attack?

Mr. BIERMANN. It would be more than four times enough.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BIERMANN) there were—ayes 90, noes 8.

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty gentlemen present; not a quorum.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 300, nays 42, not voting 89, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 2: Page 7, line 17, after the word "proper", insert "and his determination thereon shall be final and conclusive upon the accounting officers of the Government."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this is an item, while it does not involve much money it does involve a very important principle. Such funds as this have been known to have been misused and the privilege abused very considerably in times past. In my experience with committees having to do with military activities, I have found that kind of authority is not a good thing to allow. This puts the absolute control of this secret fund with reference to the contingencies of the Army in the hands of the Secretary of War without any auditing by the Comptroller General, which is not a good thing to do.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from New York this question was under consideration by the conferees for a long time. The Senate conferees maintained that if we could not trust the Secretary of War to the extent of $17,500 we would better close shop, and that is no doubt true. Of course, it is inevitable that there are times when the Department must have a little reserve fund to draw upon to pay certain items of an unforeseeable character not provided for under other appropriation heads.

Mr. TABER. Well, those are just the things that we should not do. Nowhere else in the Government is there any such secret fund as this, which is outside of the control of the auditing office, and I think it is a very bad precedent to establish. Is it not a fact this item was considered by the subcommittee which considered this bill and the subcommittee refused to put in the item?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TABER. And it ought not to be put in here.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The Senate would not yield. I feel that the Department should have some way of meeting little expenditures that bob up in the War Department here and there.

Mr. TABER. What are they? For instance, like sending flowers to somebody?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Possibly so.

Mr. TABER. That is just the kind of thing we ought not to permit and we have not any business doing so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER] that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 95, noes 30.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. (After counting.) Two hundred and twenty Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 5: Page 10, after the figure in line 16, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That on and after July 1, 1937, there shall be authorized 1,083 officers of the Medical Corps and 208 officers of the Dental Corps, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 30, 1922 (42 Stat. 721), and the authorized commissioned strength of the Army is hereby increased by 75 in order to provide for the increase herein authorized in the number of officers in the Medical Corps and the Dental Corps."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 16: Page 16, after line 14, insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the appropriation 'Travel of the Army' current at the date of relief from duty station of personnel traveling under orders shall be charged with all expenses properly chargeable to such appropriation in connection with the travel enjoined, including travel expenses of dependents, regardless of the dates of arrival at destination of the persons so traveling."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 24: Page 28, strike out lines 11 to 15, inclusive, and insert the following: "For the acquisition of land, as authorized by the act of August 12, 1935 (49 Stat. 610): Vicinity of Mitchel Field, N. Y., 342 acres, more or less, $500,000: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of War may acquire by condemnation or may enter into contracts for the acquisition of the above land in the vicinity of Mitchel Field to an additional amount not in excess of $1,020,000, and his action in so doing in either case shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment thereof."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 24 with an amendment, as follows: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment, before "$500,000", insert "to be used exclusively for runways."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 26: Page 29, beginning in line 14, strike out down to and including line 24, and insert the following:

"For the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, N. Y., as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1491), $431,000, and such sum, in conjunction with the appropriation of $431,000 for a like purpose contained in the War Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937 without regard to the proviso attached to such former appropriation, shall be available until expended: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of War may acquire by condemnation or may enter into contracts for the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point to an additional amount not in excess of $638,000, and his action in so doing in either case shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment thereof: Provided further, That no land shall be acquired east of the west boundary of the Highway 9–W, or east of the west boundary of the Highway 9–W as it may be relocated by the State of New York prior to the acquisition of this land."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 26 with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, N. Y., as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1491), $431,000; and such sum, in conjunction with the appropriation of $431,000 for a like purpose contained in the War Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937, without regard to the proviso attached to such former appropriation, shall be available until June 30, 1939: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of War may acquire by condemnation or may enter into contracts for the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, as authorized by such act of March 3, 1931, to an additional amount not in excess of $638,000, and his action in so doing in either case shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment thereof: Provided further, That authorization is hereby repealed to acquire any land east of the west boundary of the Highway 9–W, or east of the west boundary of the Highway 9–W as it may be relocated by the State of New York prior to the acquisition of any land west of the present west boundary of such Highway 9–W."

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 79: Page 84, strike out, beginning in line 19, down to and including line 9, on page 85, and insert the following:

"SEC. 4. No part of any appropriation made by this act shall be used in any way to pay any expense in connection with the conduct, operation, or management of any post exchange, branch exchange, or subexchange within any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, save and except for real assistance and convenience to military personnel and civilians employed or serving at military posts and to retired enlisted naval personnel in supplying them with articles of small personal needs, not similar to those furnished by the Government: Provided, That the commanding officer of the post at which any such exchange is situated shall certify on the monthly report of the post exchange council that such exchange was, during the period covered by such report, operated in compliance with this section."

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania moves to recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 79 with the following amendment: Restore the section number proposed by the House, and before the period at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That at posts isolated from a convenient market the Secretary of War may broaden the nature of the articles to be sold."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remaining amendments in disagreement may be dispensed with and that they may be considered en bloc.

Mr. AMLIE. I object, Mr. Speaker, because we are unable to secure copies or find out what is being done. I have asked for copies but they are not available.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 79 with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I should like to interrogate the chairman of the subcommittee about the amendment which has just been agreed to, relating to post exchanges.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Just what change, if any, is made in the amendment now offered by the conferees from the amendment as it passed the Senate covering the sale of merchandise by post exchanges? I should like some explanation of the amendment, because I thought the Senate amendment was a very good one. Merchants in many towns and cities where there are Army posts are complaining about unfair competition from post exchanges. There is no objection to the sale of necessaries and small articles but it should stop there.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The present provision applying to the conduct of post exchanges provides for supplying patrons "with articles of ordinary use, wear, and consumption not furnished by the Government." In lieu of such class of articles, the Senate proposed to substitute "with articles of small personal needs, not similar to those furnished by the Government."

The change is quite obvious. The purpose is to take post exchanges out of the business of virtually running department stores in competition with local merchants.

The Senate stood out stoutly for its amendment, but the House conferees felt that if the change were generally effective a real injury might be done to patrons of exchanges at isolated posts. As a way out, it was suggested that, in order to avoid the imposition of any hardship upon service personnel, the Secretary of War should have authority to pursue a more liberal policy as to exchanges conducted at posts isolated from a convenient market, and the action we are now proposing looks to the acceptance of the Senate amendment with such modification.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Then is the House to understand it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of War, or perhaps the different corps area commanders, whether or not the sales shall be limited to small personal articles which are needed by officers and enlisted men?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes; I should say that is true, but, of course, much depends upon the interpretation that is placed upon small, personal articles.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Then it does resolve itself down to a question of fact, within the discretion of the local corps area commander as to whether or not it is restricted to small, personal articles which the men and officers need or whether they shall carry on a general merchandise business in competition with the local merchants.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. This provision was designed to take care of the very situation the gentleman complains of.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Then it does mean that promiscuous sale of large merchandise in competition with local merchants is to be stopped?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is right.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. POWERS. May I suggest that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in his own way, explain to the gentleman from Texas the discussion we had in the conference committee, and I think then the gentleman from Texas will be satisfied.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for his suggestion, but I think the gentleman from Texas is now satisfied.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the remaining amendments in disagreement be dispensed with and that they be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House adhere to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 6692, the military appropriation bill, 1938, nos. 1, 47 to 77, inclusive, and 80, and the amendment of the Senate to the title of said bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANNON of Missouri, a motion to reconsider the vote by which action was taken on the various motions with respect to the military appropriation bill, 1938, was laid on the table.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE FIRST HALF OF JULY 1937 FOR CERTAIN OPERATIONS OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 7726) making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations, and ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, the Senate has adjourned until tomorrow, so that it is absolutely impossible to have all the appropriation bills passed before the 1st of July. I have never known of this kind of a situation arising before.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for defraying during the first half of the month of July 1937 all expenses of the necessary operations of the Federal Government, which, on July 1, 1937, remain unprovided with appropriations through the failure of enactment on or before such date of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations, there are hereby extended for and during such period all appropriations available for obligation for such expenses during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, in the same detail and under the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations as such appropriations were provided for on account of such fiscal year.

SEC. 2. To make effective the appropriations extended by section 1 there are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of certain revenues, receipts, and funds, respectively, as such apppropriations available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, were appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such first half of the month of July 1937.

SEC. 3. No greater amount shall be expended out of any appropriation provided by this act than an amount equal to one twenty-fourth of the appropriation available for like purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937.

SEC. 4. The total expenditures for the entire fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, out of the appropriations made by this act and the appropriations in the several pending supply bills, shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated, respectively, in such pending supply bills when they shall have been enacted into law.

SEC. 5. This act shall not be construed as authorizing the duplication of any special expenditure or providing for the execution of any purpose which was intended to be accomplished only once or done solely for or during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937.

SEC. 6. (a) This act shall not apply to any expenses of operations of the Federal Government the annual appropriations for which for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, have been made on or before July 1, 1937.

(b) On such date or dates subsequently to July 1, 1937, as the several pending supply bills shall, respectively, become law, the appropriations made by this act and applicable to the expenses of operation covered by such pending supply bills shall no longer be available for obligation.

(c) Any appropriations in this act for such first half of the month of July 1937 for any expense of operation for which an appropriation is proposed in, but not finally made by any of, such pending supply bills when the same shall have become law shall cease to be available for obligation on the date upon which the supply bill in which such appropriation was proposed becomes a law; and any expenditure under any such appropriation in this act shall not be included in computing the total of expenditures under section 4 hereof.

SEC. 7. The terms "supply bill" and "supply bills", when used in this act, mean one or more of the regular appropriation bills customarily enacted annually, and for the purposes of this act title II of the War Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937 shall be deemed such a supply bill.

SEC. 8. This act may be cited as the "Extension of Appropriations Act, 1938."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the fiscal year ends at midnight tonight, and all departments for which supply bills have not been enacted by that time are without authority to operate. They can spend no money; they cannot enter into contracts; they cannot employ assistants, rent quarters, buy supplies, or legally transact business of any character.

All of the supply bills have been enacted with the exception of two War Department bills and the Interior bill.

It is our hope that they will be ready in the next day or two, but in the meantime, in order to provide for the maintenance of the War Department and the Interior Department, it is necessary to pass a continuing resolution.

This is the usual bill, prepared in the regular form, and has been submitted to, and approved by, the Comptroller and the Director of the Budget.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. If the Senate should adopt the conference reports on the Army bill and the Interior Department appropriation bill tomorrow, would there be any occasion for the passage of this resolution?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. If the remaining supply bills should be adopted tomorrow, the appropriations could be dated back and this legislation would not be required, but in the event they were not adopted tomorrow, this emergency legislation would be necessary and, of course, we have no assurance of their passage within the time limit. As a matter of fact, the Senate has added to the Interior bill a provision under which appropriations can be dated back to the first of the fiscal year, and, evidently, has in view some considerable delay which might carry the bill past the first pay day. However, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan, I may say that if they are passed and become law within the prescribed time, then this bill does not go into operation. If they are not passed and no provision is made for the operation of the two departments, then this proposed legislation, if passed, will become effective.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MAPES. As the gentleman states, it is not an infrequent thing for Congress to pass so-called continuing resolutions somewhat similar to this.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. That is true.

Mr. MAPES. I have never given any particular attention to the wording of the continuing resolutions, but it seemed to me, as the pending resolution was read, that it was longer and contained more than the usual continuing resolution. Will the gentleman from Missouri tell us whether there is anything in the pending resolution that has not been in the usual continuing resolution?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. As a matter of fact, it is shorter than some of the continuing resolutions of previous sessions. For example, the continuing resolution passed in the Sixty-fifth Congress had to take into consideration provision for the extraordinary circumstances attending the prosecution of the war which was in progress at that time. This bill omits some of the paragraphs in that resolution, of course, and is to that extent shorter than the resolutions of the war Congress. Otherwise it is the routine legislation adopted on such occasions. One or two minor changes have been made in verbiage which render it a little more restrictive than some previous resolutions of this character, but the change is slight.

Mr. MAPES. Is this resolution retroactive so that it will take care of the interim from 12 o'clock tonight on to the time of its passage?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Whenever signed by the President, even after a delay of 2 or 3 days, it will become effective as of midnight tonight.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to my colleague from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I think the House should commend the Committee on Appropriations for bringing in this resolution. It will enable us to properly consider the outstanding appropriation bills. The Interior Department appropriation bill came back from the Senate in such condition that in my opinion the House should spend at least a week on it before it should ever agree to the Senate amendments. The Senate has inserted in that bill numerous items authorizing public-works projects which have never been authorized by our legislative committees, and while the amount involved is not so much at the present time, yet before the completion of these projects, if the House agrees to the Senate amendments, they will cost the taxpayers of this country several hundred million dollars. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] should give the House assurance now, in view of the fact that there are so many Members who have gone home to remain away until the 5th of July, that the Committee on Appropriations will not bring back to this House any conference report upon the Interior Department appropriation bill until next Tuesday at the earliest. I do not think the conference report should be brought back tomorrow. I understand the conferees are meeting at the present time. Further, I understand there is absolutely no chance of an agreement; but even if an agreement is reached, it should not be brought back tomorrow, because so many Members of the House are away, leaving with the expectation that nothing of importance would come up tomorrow or Friday, and they will be home to visit their families over the Fourth. Therefore I think the Committee on Appropriations should insist that the Senate pass this legislation tomorrow, and that the conference report on the Interior Department appropriation bill be held in abeyance until at least next Tuesday.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman may be assured that no precipitous action will be taken, and that due consideration will be given all amendments before reported to the House. Of course, it is always to be regretted that we have to resort to temporary stopgaps of this character but it is sometimes unavoidable. We passed the War Department appropriation bill and messaged it over April 30. It has been lying over there more than 2½ months. And we sent over the Interior Department appropriation bill on May 20, nearly a month and a half ago. Now that we have failed to secure final consideration, there is nothing left for us to do but to propose this legislation, without which any action by the two departments would be illegal.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Is the bill general in character or does it cover the specific appropriation bills that have not been passed?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It is a general bill. It provides for the activities of all the departments otherwise unprovided for on the 1st of July 1937. If one of the bills should be passed, it would then apply to the other. If neither should become law within the next 2 or 3 days, it would be applicable to both.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Does not the gentleman think the House should expedite the consideration of these conference reports, in view of this bill and the unsatisfactory manner in which many of the departments will have to operate under the bill? Does not the gentleman think we should expedite the consideration of the conference report, as soon as convenient and possible?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I can assure the gentleman that the committee will make every effort to secure enactment before it becomes necessary to invoke the provisions of the pending bill.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York, the ranking minority member of the committee.

Mr. TABER. The bill provides that these departments shall run along on the basis of the 1937 appropriations?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Yes. It is merely an extension of the current law.

Mr. TABER. And they cannot go ahead and operate under the new appropriations that are under consideration, which have been submitted by the Budget and considered by the Congress, until after these appropriation bills are enacted?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. No. It merely makes available one twenty-fourth of the amount of the appropriations provided in the current bill and under conditions prescribed by existing law.

Mr. Speaker, if there are no further inquiries, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

RENEWAL OF STAR-ROUTE CONTRACTS—VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 281)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, H. R. 4408, entitled "An act to provide for the renewal of star-route contracts at 4-year intervals, and for other purposes."

Under existing law contracts for carrying the mail over star routes are required to be let for a period not exceeding 4 years to the lowest responsible bidder. The principal purpose of this bill is to provide that in any case of regular (star route) contracts the contract may, in the discretion of the Postmaster General, if and when he finds it to be in the interest of the Postal Service (and subject to certain other conditions and limitations prescribed in the bill), be renewed for single periods of 4 years from date of expiration, at the rate prevailing at the end of the contract term, and like renewals of such contract may thereafter be made as often as the interests of the Service may require.

I am opposed to this measure, as I am firmly convinced that the existing policy of awarding star-route contracts to the lowest responsible bidder is fundamentally sound. This policy has been in effect for more than 50 years, during which time it has proven on the one hand to be fair to the Government, and on the other it affords to all citizens equal opportunity through fair and open competition to secure the award of such contracts. Without competitive bidding no one can definitely determine the least amount annually for which some responsible bidder may be willing and able to perform the services on a particular route. The Postmaster General, in the discretion granted him by this bill, could not, without obtaining competitive bids, determine whether or not the renewal of a contract would in fact be in the best interests of the service. Obviously there would be no opportunity to reduce the expense of the star-route service in cases where renewals are granted, as the bill provides that such renewals shall be at the rate prevailing at the end of the contract term. Moreover, the Postmaster General would be authorized to grant renewals to a contractor every 4 years for an indefinite period. In other words, the bill contemplates vesting a right to the continuance of a contract merely because of the present holding of the contract without regard to what existing conditions might be at the termination of the particular contract.

For the above reasons and those contained in the attached letter of the Acting Postmaster General, dated June 29, 1937, I do not feel justified in approving this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 29, 1937.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread upon the Journal.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message and bill be referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The motion was agreed to.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.—CONFERENCE REPORT AND STATEMENT

Mr. DEROUEN, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 5394, Rept. No. 1149) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and insert in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

MEETING OF WAR VETERANS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the veterans of the House that on tomorrow, at 11 o'clock, our veterans' association will meet in the World War Veterans' Committee room in the House Office Building. Let me say this is not an official organization. It is merely a social organization of Members who served in the World War, the Spanish-American War, or in the Philippine Insurrection. Formerly we had some Members who had served in the Civil War.

The association does not participate in legislation, and has no power to even pass a resolution on legislation, or to endorse anybody for any political or official position, but it is merely a meeting of the Members of the House who have served in the military service, and, as I have explained, to get together occasionally. Tomorrow we are going to meet and organize and elect officers of the association. I hope you ex-service Members will all be there.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by printing a radio address I delivered last Friday night over Station WGY.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in three particulars: First, the foreign-trade zone of New York; second, capital gains and losses taxes; and, third, on the matter of undistributed profits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, on June 29, 1937, I was unavoidably detained at my office when roll calls no. 98 and no. 99 were called. Had I been present, I would have voted "no" to recommit the bill, roll call no. 98, and I would have voted "yea" on roll call no. 99, the passage of the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a table showing the percentages of tenant farmers in my district.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. Speaker, with reference to the roll-call vote this morning on agreeing to the conference report on the War Department appropriation bill, my colleague from New Hampshire, Mr. JENKS, and I were unavoidably absent at a Boy Scout conference. Had we been present, we would have voted "aye."

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS, RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACCOUNT, AND OTHER ACTIVITIES

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I call up for immediate consideration the resolution (H. J. Res. 433) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes.

The Clerk reported the title of the House joint resolution.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 433; and pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 50 minutes, confined to the bill, the time to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 433, making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes, with Mr. HOBBS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution provides appropriations for five activities and emergency deficiency items for departments out of funds at midnight tonight. The first is the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance, the committee set up by the House and the Senate, with which I think all of us are familiar, $50,000. The second item is the usual resolution providing authority to pay the pages of the House and the Senate after July 1. The third is an item for the Civilian Conservation Corps. The fourth is a little rent item for the Department of Agriculture. The fifth is an item for the railroad retirement accounts.

The only item on which I think there might be any difference of opinion among the members of the committee is the appropriation for the Civilian Conservation Corps. We passed a bill extending the Civilian Conservation Corps but reducing its enlisted strength to 300,000 and making a number of other very radical changes in the set-up of that organization. For the current fiscal year they have had $403,000,000. This bill provides $350,000,000 for their activities for the fiscal year beginning at midnight tonight. It is true that there is an ostensible reduction of 20 percent in the activities of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and probably it will be claimed that there should, therefore, be a corresponding reduction in their appropriations. Certainly, a substantial majority of the committee does not feel that it would be safe to reduce the appropriation for the Civilian Conservation Corps anything below the amount of the Budget estimate which was for $350,000,000; and it is upon this basis that the Appropriations Committee has brought the item to Congress this year.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman explain the provision at the bottom of page 3 for the retention of employees of the corps and cooperating Federal agencies which are paid from the Emergency Conservation work funds, and particularly whether that includes Reserve officers assigned to the C. C. C. camps.

Mr. WOODRUM. It does not affect Reserve officers. They are assigned by the War Department, as the gentleman knows. The reason for this provision is to make unnecessary the formality of a new appointment for each one of the personnel of the C. C. C. retained after the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. MOTT. It has nothing to do with Reserve officers?

Mr. WOODRUM. It has nothing to do with Reserve officers.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to no man on either side of the House in my desire to plug all the loopholes that have been used by tax avoiders and evaders. I probably go further than most Members of the House. I say this so that there will be no misunderstanding of my position. I would do away with all foreign personal holding companies. I would also do away with all domestic holding companies. I would do away with that greatest of all loopholes, the further issuance of tax-exempt securities. Some $15,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities have been issued in the last 4 years by this administration, and these constitute by far the largest single loophole for the rich men of America to evade paying their share of taxes for the maintenance of the Government.

The President in his recent message on tax evasion and avoidance started by using these words:

> A condition has been developed during the past few months so serious to the Nation that the Congress and the people are entitled to the information about it.

I submit that this is not an accurate statement. This condition has not been developing for the last few months only; it has developed over a long period of time. For many years past, for 3 or 4 years at least—and, to be fair, even before this administration came into power—rich men and others had been using loopholes that have been left by the Congress in order not to pay their taxes to the Government. If anyone is at fault, it is the administration, the Ways and Means Committee, and the Congress for leaving these loopholes.

In America a man is innocent until he is proven guilty. It seems to me that rich men—and I am not here to defend any rich man; I find they can always take care of themselves; I am here merely to state facts—it seems now that certain rich men must be singled out and smeared across the pages as if they were criminals for doing something that they are permitted to do by the Congress and by the Government. Almost without exception, these charges have been made before the investigating committee against men and women who have made deductions within the law. In only a few cases has it been charged or claimed that what was done was illegal. I want to make clear also that I am not criticizing the committee now investigating tax avoidance and evasion, composed of prominent members of the Ways and Means Committee of the House and Senators from the Committee on Finance of the Senate, all honorable, honest, and able men. They have not brought any partisanship into it. They are acting only as servants of the House and the Senate to get the facts. The Treasury Department, however, in my humble judgment, has injected partisanship into it. It has presented a large number of names, not claiming that these people have done something illegal, and it is beginning to look to me as though many of the men mentioned were being singled out for punishment and reprisal not by the committee but by the Treasury of the United States and the administration.

A large number of these names are of people known to be opponents of the administration, who are on record as political foes of the administration. Out of some sixty-odd names, 27 that I have checked up individually have been contributors against the administration through the Republican Party. Others that I have not checked up have been contributors through, let us say, various organizations that are known as anti-New Deal, whether it be the Liberty League or some other organization. It is fair to say that 50 percent of the people whose names were presented by the Treasury Department are men and women who have openly opposed the administration and contributed against it. I must exclude the testimony given before the committee yesterday because I have not had time to check it up, but so far the name of only one Democrat has been presented who has contributed to that party and I happen to know him very well because he lives in my district. Nobody thinks less of the New Deal than he did and does. He contributed for other reasons, probably on account of the fact that he is the greatest brewer in America today and produces more beer than anyone else.

The origin of the investigation has all the earmarks of soaking and swatting the rich and promoting class hatred. I have thought from the time the President's message was read to Congress and said so at the time, that it was a smokescreen and a camouflage to detract attention from other issues and a red herring dragged across the front lines of the press as an excuse for failure to balance the Budget or to make accurate estimates of income-tax payments and other revenue.

Mr. Chairman, this investigation is not necessary, although nobody objects to it. It must be apparent that the Ways and Means Committee could have obtained the information. The Treasury Department has had the information for a long time. It could be presented overnight to the Ways and Means Committee, which could have written legislation and put an end to at least 90 percent of the loopholes in a few weeks' time. Such a measure could be passed through Congress by a unanimous vote and without opposition before adjournment, and the few remaining loopholes attended to when the Congress convenes in January.

I am not opposing the $50,000; in fact, I am strongly for it and would be in favor of more, if necessary, to plug the loopholes. But I submit this must be an impartial investigation. It must not be merely an investigation of the enemies and foes of the New Deal. It must include all kinds of tax evaders and avoiders from the highest down, from the President of the United States down, including members of the President's family, members of the Cabinet and their families, and high Government officials who have done exactly and identically the same thing—who have taken advantage of these loopholes to deduct from their income within the law—as is charged against others who are foes of the administration.

Now that the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is present, I want to read to him a letter I mailed last night, which, if Mr. Farley's mails are going regularly, should have been delivered this morning. In case he did not receive it, I want to read it to him and to the Members of the House:

JUNE 29, 1937.

Hon. ROBERT L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am sending you herewith certain remarks I made recently concerning the investigation of tax evasion and avoidance, which are self-explanatory.

I hereby request your committee to make an investigation of these various charges, and will be glad to cooperate to the fullest extent and appear before your committee in substantiation of the main charges. The committee can obtain most of the facts direct from the Treasury Department prior to my appearance, if desired.

I feel very strongly, however, that most of the names that have been submitted by the Treasury Department are opponents of the administration and a large percentage of them are contributors to the Republican campaign funds.

I am confident that the committee desires to avoid any aspect of partisanship or partiality, and for that reason trust that you will take whatever action is necessary to call for the tax returns of members of the administration and friends of the administration who are using the same kind of loopholes to evade and avoid payment of taxes to the Federal Government.

Assuring you of my cooperation, I am,
Sincerely yours,

HAMILTON FISH.

In order to save time I ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD the names of those already mentioned who are contributors to the Republican Party, instead of reading their names at this time. Included in those names are former officials of the Government, such as Andrew Mellon, formerly Secretary of the Treasury. I submit in all fairness and in all justice, if he is to be pilloried, if he is to be pointed out as a tax evader under the law, a former prominent Secretary of the Treasury, then it is the duty of the committee to call for the tax returns of the members of the Cabinet mentioned in my statement made both inside and outside of this House and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in the Appendix.

The following are the names of Republican contributors who have already been publicly smeared by the Treasury. In all fairness let us have the Democratic evaders as well: Andrew Mellon, Pierre du Pont, F. V. du Pont, Paulina du Pont, Mrs. Ethel du Pont, Mrs. W. du Pont Moss, H. F. du Pont, Thomas W. Lamont, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., Fred Fisher, William Dewart, Isabel Willys, Charles Hayden, Jeremiah Milbank, Robert Nixon, R. W. Woodruff, Ailsa Mellon Bruce, W. R. Coe, Charles E. Merrill, E. C. Lynch, E. H. Worth, Duncan Phillips, S. E. Summerfield, Clement C. Smith, C. D. Marshall, R. B. Mellon, R. E. Dwight, Jules S. Bache, Wallace Groves, Percy K. Hudson.

Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to appear before the committee in substantiation of those charges that I have deliberately made. The President of the United States sent a report to the Congress in which he talked about the immoral and unethical tax evaders and avoiders and the problem of decency of American morals, and so forth. I will present evidence at that time showing that the President of the United States is using these same loopholes, and has admitted he has used these loopholes to make deductions in connection with his farms in Dutchess County and in Georgia, and has written off depreciation on old buildings and losses on the farms, and, of course, he does not live on either of these farms. I would rather submit that evidence in a concrete way before the proper investigating committee instead of on the floor of Congress.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the whole purpose of this investigating committee will be spoiled if it goes before the country as a partisan committee, simply dragging into the limelight Republicans and foes of the administration, who have done nothing more than the President of the United States, and I do not claim the President has done anything illegal; but the President himself has said he has used these loopholes to avoid payment of taxes by writing off depreciation on an old barn on his place that was built in 1790 and which he bought in 1910. This barn is located on his farm at Hyde Park. I therefore repeat, Mr. Chairman, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the address which the distinguished gentleman from New York has just delivered. The gentleman is quite amiable. But he can undoubtedly dream more wild dreams, see more visions, and impute more unworthy motives, with less evidence, to men in high places than any man inside or outside of this Hall.

He starts in and rambles over enough territory for a 2-hour speech, criticizing the issuance of tax-exempt securities, among other things. Of course, the issuance of tax-exempt securities is not peculiar to the present administration. It is not a modern affair. I do not know how long it has been going on, but it occurred under previous administrations, as well as the present administration. The matter has been discussed again and again, but thus far no remedy has been devised. It is a matter that the Congress can deal with any time, probably through a constitutional amendment.

The main criticism of the gentleman today seems to be of the hearings that are now being conducted by the joint committee of the House and Senate as provided by resolution of the House and Senate and as a result of the message of the President of the United States on tax avoidance and tax evasion. The gentleman seems to think and even charges that discrimination and political methods are being used by the Treasury Department. He absolves the members of the joint committee of anything of the kind, but boldly charges that the Treasury Department is proceeding along political lines.

In other words, he charges the Treasury Department is discriminating and bringing out only the names of those who belong to the minority party and not including the names of those who might belong or do belong to the majority party.

Dr. Magill, Under Secretary of the Treasury, is one of the most able and fairest men I have ever known connected with any department of the Government. In his opening remarks before our committee he made this statement:

We—

That is, the Treasury Department—

asked the revenue agents in charge in each of the 38 internal-revenue districts to submit full information of any new forms of tax avoidance which had come to their attention, and of any existing loopholes in the revenue laws which were causing a substantial loss of revenue. Particular attention was devoted to those major districts in which the increases in income reported had been significantly less than the average increase for the country as a whole. The cases thereby collected were carefully analyzed, and further investigations made when necessary.

Dr. Magill has stated to me in addition that in every instance where there were indications of tax avoidance and evasion by some questionable means, either taking some questionable advantage of the present law or in violation of the present law, the cases without regard to party or to section were reported to the Treasury Department.

On our joint committee are two able, eminent, and fair minority Members of the House, and the same from the committee of the other body. Thus far they have had no occasion—if they have, they have not expressed it—to speak of anything having been done which would raise in the minds of the committee, in the minds of Members of Congress, or in the minds of the people of the country the suspicion that the Treasury Department is proceeding in a partisan manner. I am sure if they become convinced that partisanship is shown and have any evidence to support such a position, they will bring it to the attention of the committee.

I may say, moreover, the committee has the authority to make an investigation of the tax returns of any individual or corporation, and the committee doubtless will make such investigation if request is made by any member of the joint committee. While the gentleman from New York attempts to cast aspersions upon the administration and to claim that the administration is guilty of the same offenses as are involved in the cases which have been brought to the attention of our committee, I have no thought that the President of the United States—and I am not authorized to speak for him; he is always able to speak for himself—or the Secretary of the Treasury or anyone connected with the administration will ask immunity. I challenge the statement, as being unworthy of the gentleman from New York, that the President of the United States has resorted to the same questionable methods of evasion that have been discovered and exposed by our committee. I feel sure he has not incorporated his pocketbook or organized foreign corporations and bogus foreign insurance companies nor resorted to similar devices.

Mr. FISH. All the gentleman has to do is accept my challenge. I will prove it to the gentleman.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not yield at this time. I did not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TREADWAY. Was not the subject brought up this morning in the committee of other witnesses being requested to appear or returns of persons other than those whose returns have been or will be submitted by the Treasury itself being requested of the Treasury?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It was mentioned in a general way. No names were mentioned.

Mr. TREADWAY. No names were mentioned; that is right.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Nothing was specified. The gentleman seemed to have had in his mind some suspicion that possibly the hearing might be closed before all parties were given an opportunity to be heard, and he was assured by the chairman of the joint committee that the committee would care for that, that certainly the Treasury officials could not determine when we would close the hearings. I may say to the gentleman I have no doubt any request the gentleman submits to the joint committee will receive the same consideration as requests made by members of the majority party. I do not think the gentleman has any fear that he will not be accorded every right, every courtesy, and every opportunity, or that the investigation will not proceed upon a basis of fairness and justice, without regard to partisanship. I have not seen any evidence on the part of the committee of a desire to manifest any partisanship.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, sometimes I have had occasion to differ with the views expressed by my distinguished chairman, but I may say to him and to the House that in this instance he stated very accurately exactly what has happened in the committee, and that I have every assurance the minority members will be given the opportunity to which the chairman has referred of requesting returns of other taxpayers than those whose returns have been submitted by the Treasury Department itself. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman. I trust the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] may be able to possess his soul in peace for a while. If there should be ground for complaint, I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New York, who are able and conscientious members of the joint committee, will find it out. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] is always seeing ghosts, dreaming dreams, and imagining things.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman was asleep while I was talking.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, no.

Mr. FISH. No one has charged the gentleman's committee with doing anything wrong or being partisan. I said exactly the opposite. I think the gentleman was dreaming when I was speaking.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman charged the Treasury Department with that, which is just as bad.

Mr. FISH. Yes; I did.

Mr. DOUGHTON. And there was not the slightest foundation for it. It is purely without any foundation whatever. It just sprang up in the brain of the gentleman, like a lot of the other brainstorms he has had. [Laughter.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to myself.

Mr. Chairman, I am rising for the purpose of trying to save a little money, so that the Ways and Means Committee will not have to work so hard. We have before us an estimate of $350,000,000 for the C. C. C. for the fiscal year 1938. By the authorization bill, which was passed here in the House, the authorized number of the C. C. C. was reduced from 350,000 to 300,000. The appropriations, therefore, should be reduced from $403,000,000, which is the amount that will be spent in the fiscal year 1937, to $320,000,000, and if they have efficient management and go along in the same way they have before, we ought to be able to cut $30,000,000 from this item and still permit them to function just as they have been permitted to function heretofore.

The estimates that were brought up to us by the C. C. C. called for an average number of enrollees of 303,000 through the year. This appears on the green sheets that were submitted to us.

I want to call the attention of the House to the number of those on the roll and the number being paid by the C. C. C. during the fiscal year 1937, with an authorization of 350,000:

On January 10, there were 351,000.

On March 10, 297,000.

On March 30, 242,000, or over 100,000 below the authorized strength.

On April 10, after enlistments had come in, 280,000, or 70,000 below the authorized strength.

On May 10, 300,000.

On June 10, this month, 278,000.

It is perfectly apparent from a consideration of these figures that the number in the C. C. C. camps will not be anywhere near the authorized strength, and why should we appropriate for the full authorized strength when it is absolutely impossible, in the working out of a normal situation, for that number to be there? It is not a question of whether there is any merit in the C. C. C. or anything of that kind. This is an appropriation bill to provide for an activity which the Congress has authorized and directed shall go on, and we should, in figuring out the amount to be appropriated for this activity, give them funds to take care of the number they will have on hand.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I would like to know whether the gentleman can tell me how many enrollees there are in the camps and whether there are not thousands and thousands of applicants above the present enrollment waiting to be accepted?

Mr. TABER. I do not know about that. They stated when they were before us that they might have difficulty in filling their enlistments and they might have to go out and solicit such enlistments. This is the statement they made and it is the limit of my knowledge. They did make the statement, and I think this will answer the gentleman's question better than I could answer it in any other way, that enlistments, according to their new ruling, come on the first days of July, the first days of October, the first days of January, and the first days of April, and from the date of enlistment there is a gradual dropping off in the number on hand until the next date of enlistment.

Therefore, in the months of August and September, in the months of November and December, in the months of February and March, and in the months of May and June, there will undoubtedly be a very much smaller number than the authorized enlistment in the corps. This has been the rule right along, ever since the corps started, and figuring on the basis of what has happened before there is no question but what there will be a much smaller number on hand than the outfit has estimated.

Mr. KELLER. May I suggest to the gentleman that I believe an investigation on his part will develop there are more than 100,000 who are anxious to get into the C. C. C., if they can.

Mr. TABER. I only know what they told us, and if we appropriate for this outfit on the basis of 80 percent of what has been expended or will be expended with the close of today, $403,000,000, or approximately $320,000,000, we will have appropriated ample funds to meet the cost of operation and I do not believe we should appropriate $30,000,000 more than is necessary.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Did the gentleman figure that on a percentage basis or on a per-capita basis?

Mr. TABER. On a percentage basis of the authorized strength, believing that the number who go in on the enlistment dates will drop off, as they have in the months following the enlistment dates.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Does the gentleman believe it is fair to figure on a percentage basis when they must maintain a certain, definite overhead, whether they have a larger or smaller number?

Mr. TABER. They do not have to maintain all of their overhead.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Not all of it, perhaps.

Mr. TABER. Because they are planning to reduce the number of camps by at least 500, bringing the number down to around 1,500, and as they do this they will be able to drop a very large percentage of their overhead.

The figures they have given us, and upon which I have relief, are way beyond what is reasonable.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the following respective purposes:

LEGISLATIVE

JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

For payment of salaries and other expenses of the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance authorized by Public Resolution No. 40, approved June 11, 1937, including stenographic reporting services under contract without reference to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), per-diem allowances in lieu of actual expenses of subsistence, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference, periodicals, newspaper clippings, and such other expenditures as the joint committee deems advisable, fiscal years 1937 and 1938, $50,000, to be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. After I had concluded my remarks, which I consider most temperate, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means felt it was necessary to indulge in personalities. I have made certain definite charges but not against his committee or any member of his committee. In fact, I had commended the members of the investigating committee for the hard work they were doing and for the impartial treatment of the matters before them. I have made some specific charges, somewhat serious and far reaching, and I had asked for an opportunity to appear before that committee in order to substantiate those charges. As a Member of this House for 17 years, I have not been accustomed to make half-baked charges or charges that I cannot substantiate before this House or any committee of the House. Therefore, I say to the gentleman that he must have been sound asleep while I was speaking, because I commended him most highly, and the members of his committee, and said that they had nothing to do with the names presented to them, that they were presented by the Treasury Department. It is evident that most of them were Republicans, whose names were put into a hat and were taken out at random by the Treasury Department. The fact is, as I told the gentleman, only one Democrat has been involved or rather been presented to the committee to be smeared.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Oh, I know how holy the gentleman is, and how holy the President is and that no Democrat would take advantage of existing loopholes left by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not like the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. But I say to you that all we ask is an impartial investigation, not from the Treasury Department but opportunity for us to appear before the gentleman's committee, and we challenge him, and I challenge him now, to take up these Democratic tax returns that I have mentioned and submitted to the gentleman today in writing, and I shall substantiate those charges, and substantiate them by their own income taxes and by their own statements, and not by my own or by the statement of any other Member of the House. I want the gentleman to understand that these charges were made seriously, without any reflection whatever upon the gentleman as chairman or upon any member of his committee, but I have a right as a Member of the House and as a minority member, to ask to come before the gentleman's committee and present evidence upon those cases, and I do not propose to have the gentleman or any one else try to laugh them off, because it is not a laughing matter.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment. I am in general sympathy with the remarks of my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], but I think it is only fair to correct, if I may, some of the language that he uses. I personally cannot agree with him that any "charges" have been made against anybody. As I recall, the hearings before the joint committee, there has been but one claim made by the Treasury Department of any illegal action, and that was based on an untrue statement by a taxpayer rather than on any detail of the returns.

My understanding of the word "charge" is that it connotes something corrupt, something wrong, something that ought to be prosecuted. I think the gentleman from New York can well say to investigate the returns, but, personally, as a member of that committee and one of the members of the minority party to which the gentleman from New York belongs, I think the use of a word that indicates something absolutely criminal is not quite fair, either to the Treasury or to the committee or to the people whose returns have been brought to the attention of our committee. I wish the word "charge" might be left out and some other word substituted in the revision of the remarks of the gentleman from New York. I repeat, if I may, the remarks I made a few moments ago, with this same idea in mind. The hearings are not over. Names can be submitted to any member of the committee or to the committee, and, from the assurance that I have received on the floor here and in the committee, I am certain that those returns will be submitted in due course to the committee on request of any member of the committee.

Further than that, I think it may be well to clear up this matter. I have been approached by several different persons, who were wondering whether any refutation of some of the statements that had been made before the committee could be made by those to whom reference has been made. Of course, we have the right to subpena witnesses, but that does not carry with it any opposition to the appearance of witnesses voluntarily, and I think it is well that the country should know that anyone desiring to be heard upon the general subject matter of tax avoidance and tax evasion by the joint committee should be allowed and will be allowed to submit their names to the chairman or to the clerk of the committee and have an opportunity to appear.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I quite agree with the gentleman. Perhaps the word "charge" is too severe, if it connotes anything illegal or unlawful under the law. I never meant anything of that kind. I specifically so stated when I first spoke, and I am willing to use some other more acceptable word that does not carry with it that meaning.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] seemed to think I had understood from his first remarks this afternoon that he was reflecting upon the joint committee. I did not have any such thought as that. I did not intend to leave any such impression by the remarks I made. What I attempted to say and intended to say was that I thought his remarks were unjustified and unfair so far as the action of the Treasury Department was concerned, and the Administration. That is the part to which I took exception, and not any reflection on our committee.

Now, as far as the matter just referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is concerned, as to the parties whose names have been brought out, we are not responsible. If more of them belong to one party than to another, I did not know it. I have not even asked or heard any suggestions as to the political affiliation of any of those whose names have been mentioned. There has been no mention made to me either in committee or privately about it. This is the first time that I have ever known that they practically all belong to one party. I am assured by Dr. Magill, as reliable a man as there is in the United States, that the revenue agents were instructed to take these names wherever they found any indication whatever of any irregularity, and send the tax returns in or make a report on those cases.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman must know that Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, is one of the outstanding Republicans.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I believe someone said the greatest since Alexander Hamilton, or the greatest Secretary of the Treasury. [Laughter.]

Mr. FISH. But if his name can be dragged in——

Mr. DOUGHTON. There is nothing wrong about that. The gentleman wanted to bring in the President of the United States. Is Andrew Mellon more holy than the President? The gentleman has been trying to drag the President in all the time.

Mr. FISH. You have already done it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is what the gentleman has been trying to do, and still tries to do.

Mr. FISH. Out of 60 names, you just got 1 Democrat. That is the answer.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We are not to blame for that. If there is only one Democrat who has sinned as against a hundred Republicans, we are not to blame for that. It does not surprise me much, however. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, as to the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], I appreciate what he says. They are just as fair and fine as they can be. In my opening statement, which I took the pains to reduce to writing so that there could be no misunderstanding or misrepresentation about it, I said that any parties whose names were brought into the hearings would be given full opportunity to come and exonerate themselves or defend themselves or explain anything in connection with the charges, and it will be done, so that they need have no fears of persecution or prosecution unless they have resorted to some crooked or questionable methods.

I do hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] can be patient. He is a fine gentleman and one of the very active Members of the minority, but he gets impatient. His partisan zeal sometimes overruns his good judgment. I do hope and trust that he will wait until the minority Members at least find some ground for complaint and objection to the way these hearings are being conducted.

Mr. FISH. I will take the gentleman's word that you are going to have a fair and impartial hearing.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman should do that in deference to the honorable and capable men of the minority who are on that joint committee. I think he owes that to them—to wait and see whether they are able to take care of the situation.

Mr. FISH. I have made no charges against the committee. I will take the gentleman's word for it that there will be an impartial hearing.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We are not going to try to laugh off anything or give anybody immunity as far as my influence can go on that committee. I desire that this investigation shall be one that will commend itself to the fair judgment of the entire country; that it shall not be a partisan investigation but that it shall be a fair and honest investigation, without discrimination or favoritism.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has expired.

All time has expired.

The pro-forma amendments were withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAYMENT OF PAGES

For the payment of 21 pages for the Senate and 47 pages for the House of Representatives, at $4 per day each, for the period commencing July 1, 1937, and ending with the last day of the month in which the Seventy-fifth Congress adjourns sine die at the first session thereof, so much as may be necessary is appropriated for each legislative body.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last words.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means will bide with me and be gracious as he has been to the distinguished gentleman from New York as I make an observation or two respecting this matter that has been under discussion.

Mr. WOODRUM rose.

Mr. DITTER. Now, my distinguished friend from Virginia probably will make a point of order. I ask whether he will indulge me. I am speaking on the words "legislative body." The word "body" was the word I wanted to strike out, and, incidentally, strike at it. Now, I may be subject to a point of order if the gentleman from Virginia presses it.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman anticipates the fact, but I am extremely anxious to get this appropriation bill passed and am torn between two impulses to expedite the bill and to try to be generous to the gentleman.

Mr. DITTER. I have not thrust myself on the graciousness of the gentleman very often.

Mr. WOODRUM. I shall not object to the gentleman's speaking out of order, but I shall be forced to invoke the rule on all other such requests.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I believe we all agree that the matter under discussion with reference to tax avoidance and tax evasion is one that is chargeable entirely to the Ways and Means Committee; in other words, if there are loopholes in the law by which these tax evasions and tax avoidances are possible it is due either to the neglect or to the carelessness of the Ways and Means Committee. This committee for 4 years has had the opportunity of correcting these abuses. The country has been deluged with the paeons of praise of the marvelous things that this New Deal administration has accomplished. During this period of time the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and his very able associates could have changed those things about which there is so much criticism at this time.

I am wondering whether we are proceeding wisely in making such a hue and cry about this matter of tax evasion and tax avoidance in the country right now, whether we are not encouraging the strife and antagonisms that are growing up just as a result of this kind of approach to this subject. I am wondering whether the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and his associates might not have cured these evils without calling any one of these men who have been charged, or at least against whom suspicion has been directed. I am wondering whether the Chief Executive of the United States might not well have directed a suggestion to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means about these loopholes, and that then the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and his able committee might have directed their attention during the last 5 months toward a correction of the evils. Since February 6, when the subject of packing the Court was brought before us, the entire legislative program has been stalemated. Why has not the Committee on Ways and Means come here during the last 5 months, as a result of careful analysis and deliberative study and measured judgment, and introduced legislation to correct these conditions?

The fault does not lie with the Ways and Means Committee and certainly not with the energetic and capable chairman of that committee. He is an indefatigable worker, a conscientious public servant, a man of unusual ability who commands the respect and admiration of all. I have a very high regard for him and value the contributions of helpfulness which he brings to the House. The fault, I say, does not lie there. Unfortunately, it is the result of a system which our Democratic Members have permitted to develop, and which I venture they will deplore before long and regret as much as we do on our side of the aisle. It is the system of absolute subserviency to the White House. It is the system which robs this body of its true legislative prerogatives, making of the Members merely approving instruments in the hands of the Executive. It is the system against which many of you rebel in your souls, as you hope for the day when assertiveness may be substituted for submission and articulation may take the place of silence. No; the fault is not the inability nor the unwillingness of the chairman or the committee. It is due to your submissive surrender to the Executive, which will mean ultimately the end of representative government unless, by your independence, there is a reassertion of your rights and a renewed recognition of your privileges.

The investigation being conducted by the special committee on tax avoidance and tax evasions was suggested in a special message from the President. The message was voluminous. It recited instances of avoidance and evasions. Apparently the law needed correction; loopholes were to be plugged. Allegations arresting attention were presented. But what good will come of this investigation? What should be our chief concern? I submit that the Ways and Means Committee could more profitably occupy its time—profitably for the Congress and the country by proceeding at once to a serious, studied consideration of the tax question—especially to those sections in which it is alleged the loopholes exist, and then presenting to the House the amendments to cure the evils. This has been the practice at other times. Nothing has been developed thus far in the hearings which could not have been given the Ways and Means Committee by the Treasury Department. The Treasury Department was in possession of the facts showing the methods and the procedure followed by the alleged tax evaders. The allegations have not been evasions outside the law, but evasions within the law. There can be no serious disagreement with my contention that our task is to tighten up on the law—to make these evasions and avoidances impossible; to get down to the serious business of enacting corrective legislation instead of this boisterous ballyhoo and this blaring of trumpets; to get ourselves out of this stalemated, stagnated inertia and plug up the holes in the tax laws.

Of course, such a policy might not have the news value that the present policy commands. It would mean a new tax bill this year and some of us are of the opinion that the majority is rather eager to do a bit of evading and avoiding itself insofar as voting or even considering a new tax bill this year. Evasions and avoidances on roll calls on embarrassing revenue measures—on the problem of putting on the taxpayer the load of the New Deal extravagance. These evasions and avoidances are also within the law which it would appear should be safeguarded jealously from inquisitorial endeavors, either by our minority or by a troubled tax-paying public.

I am afraid that one of the incidents of this special committee work will be to continue the program of arraying class against class, to increase hatreds, to engender malice, to stir strife, to develop discontent, to arouse passions, and certainly we all agree that these things should be avoided at a time like the present when a state almost approaching civil war exists in many of our industrial districts. Sober, sane men are concerned about present conditions. Strained and anxious faces reflect the serious thoughts of men who study the grave crisis confronting us. Should we add fuel to the fire? Should there be additional hatred, malice, strife, discontent, and passion given to a flame which already is indicative of danger? Have we no duty to preserve domestic tranquillity?

We should not be unmindful of the fact that the Treasury Department has available the service of a distinguished scholar who has made a careful study of taxable incomes. I refer to the Under Secretary, the Honorable Roswell Magill, who is the author of Taxable Income, and who with Robert H. Montgomery gave to the business and professional world the informative and illuminating volume Federal Taxes on Estates, Trusts, and Gifts. These volumes indicate that Mr. Magill has a profound knowledge of the subject and is conversant with methods pursued to avoid or evade the payment of taxes. Many references might be made to these volumes wherein suggestions are made to the reader of practices to be followed to minimize tax payments. Such inviting and persuasive paragraphs as Different Basis of Estate and Gift Taxes, Double Use of Lower Brackets, Minimizing Estate and Gift Taxes, Minimizing Family Income Taxes, and many others indicate that the Under Secretary is familiar with the methods of which complaint is now made. Surely he could suggest a remedy since he evidences in these volumes a familiarity with the efforts of taxpayers to keep their tax payments to a minimum within the law.

It is to be hoped that the opportunity will be given to the Ways and Means Committee to rid itself of this unnecessary investigation, to apply itself to a correction of the evils, and that it will have the courage not to avoid and evade the responsibility for a tax measure to pay for the New Deal spending.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

EXECUTIVE

CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

For all authorized and necessary expenses to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a Civilian Conservation Corps, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1937, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the purchase and exchange of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; rents in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the purchase (including exchange), operation, maintenance, and repair of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles to be used only for official purposes; hire, with or without personal services, of work animals, animal-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles, and watercraft; printing and binding; travel expenses, including not to exceed $2,000 for expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with the work of the Corps when specifically authorized by the Director; construction, improvement, repair, and maintenance of buildings, but the cost of any building erected hereunder shall not exceed $25,000; and all other necessary expenses; fiscal year 1938, $350,000,000, of which sum not to exceed $240,000 may be expended for salaries and expenses of the Office of the Director: Provided, That an enrollee in the Civilian Conservation Corps, or member, or former member, of the Military Establishment, who shall furnish blood from his or her veins for transfusion to the veins of an enrollee or discharged enrollee of the Civilian Conservation Corps undergoing treatment in a Government or civilian hospital authorized to treat such patient, shall be entitled to be paid therefor a reasonable sum not to exceed $50: Provided further, That the employment of employees of the Emergency Conservation Work and of the cooperating Federal agencies whose compensation is paid from Emergency Conservation Work funds, as of June 30, 1937, and whose employment was not specifically terminated as of that date, may be continued without reappointment, subject to review by the Director.

With the following committee amendment:

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 3, line 14, after the figures "1938", strike out "$350,000,000" and insert "$320,000,000."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment about which I spoke a little while ago. The idea is just this: The authorized strength of the C. C. C. has been reduced from 350,000 to 300,000 and the estimates on that basis, considering what has been spent this year, would be approximately $320,000,000 instead of $350,000,000. Frankly, I do not believe that the limitation of 300,000 authorized strength—and this authorized number is the maximum that can be there when the enlistment dates come around—July, October, January, and April. Then it gradually reduces until the next enlistment date. I do not believe that more funds in fairness can be used than $320,000,000.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. As I recall the bill passed provided that the strength of the corps should be 300,000 men not including veterans and Indians. These classes would bring the total to 315,000.

Mr. TABER. That is true; but the number before was 365,000; so the percentage figures I have used would apply.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Another matter of which the gentleman should take consideration is that the regulations for admission have been changed and no longer require the men to come from relief rolls. We shall, therefore, have many more applicants.

Mr. TABER. They will no longer come from the relief rolls, but between enlistment dates the number will drop down and we could not, therefore, have any larger percentage of men in the corps than we have had. I believe that if they manage this thing right this $30,000,000 cut is entirely justified; and I hope that the House will save some money by adopting the amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 3 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I am sympathetic, of course, with any suggestion looking toward the saving of money; but the suggestion of a cut of that amount in this appropriation is not justified by the evidence adduced at the hearings. In the first place, at the present time, today, the requirements for enlistment in the C. C. C. camps is that the boys shall come from the relief rolls, and there are many places in the country where there are no boys on relief rolls to qualify and who can enlist in the C. C. C. camps. Because of this the enlisted strength has dropped way down. An entirely different situation is set up, however, under the new bill. Under this bill the only requirement for enlistment is that they be unemployed and in need. The result will be that we will have them standing in line at the C. C. C. camps asking for admittance and enrollment. The testimony of Mr. McEntee was that the selecting agency had sufficient applications to enroll 100,000 boys. We need only 54,000 to bring the number up to the authorized total. That is just the picture we are going to have.

This estimate is based upon an average enrolled strength of 290,000. In my judgment—and in the judgment of the majority, I may say—that is not too much to take care of it, and I think a cut in this appropriation would mean it would not be possible to carry that enrolled strength in the camps, which would mean closing more camps; and I do not think the Members want to see that done. I hope the Committee will not cut the appropriation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

RAILROAD RETIREMENT BOARD

Railroad retirement account: For an amount sufficient as an annual premium for the payments required under the Railroad Retirement Act approved August 29, 1935, and the Railroad Retirement Act approved June 24, 1937, and authorized to be appropriated to the railroad retirement account established under section 15 (a) of the latter act, fiscal years 1937 and 1938, $99,880,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the payment of annuities to employees, representatives, widows, widowers, or dependent next of kin of employees, contained in the "Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1937", and reappropriated in the "Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938": Provided, That such amount shall be available until expended for making payments required under said retirement acts, and the amount not required for current payments shall be invested by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with the provisions of said Railroad Retirement Act of June 24, 1937: Provided further, That all payments under sections 3, 4, and 5 of the Railroad Retirement Act, 1935, heretofore made from the appropriation contained in the "Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1937", and reappropriated in the "Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1938", shall be considered as having been made from the railroad retirement account herein established.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania criticized the Ways and Means Committee and myself as chairman of that committee for trying to do the very thing which he also criticizes us for not doing. He criticized us very severely for trying to stop up the loopholes and he criticized us severely for not having done that in the past, but I do not believe he wants to say that.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; not unless I misquoted the gentleman. The gentleman criticized the Ways and Means Committee and said if we had done our duty in the past there would be no need for the present investigation and effort now being made to stop up the loopholes.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No.

Mr. DITTER. I have been gracious to the gentleman in times past and I hope he will be courteous with me.

Mr. DOUGHTON. All right. Go ahead.

Mr. DITTER. Is it not true that in times past matters of this kind have come to the attention of the Ways and Means Committee, and without any ballyhoo, without any blaring of trumpets, the Ways and Means Committee has set about to correct the evils, but in this instance there has been a distinct deviation and a blaring of trumpets and ballyhoo about this matter that heretofore has been corrected without all that effort?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is the trouble, they were not all corrected. We went as far as we could. We have stopped up enough of the loopholes to save the Treasury of the United States between two and three hundred million dollars. We do not expect to be able to stop all of the loopholes any more than the courts can do away with all criminals. As soon as we get new information and evidence upon which to proceed, why, of course, we proposed in the future as we have in the past to proceed, regardless of the gentleman's criticism and his imputation of lack of diligence or lack of ability. The committee will in the future as in the past, as far as it is able, and with as little ballyhoo as possible, endeavor to correct the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman is disturbed, as has been indicated this afternoon. He is high up in his own party and regrets, of course, to see the names of prominent members of that party brought out in the hearing. But if so, let them take their medicine. Let the chips fall where they may. The gentleman should not be unduly disturbed; because the Ways and Means Committee has not been able to prevent all tax avoidance and tax evasion is no reason why we should not at this time, at the request of the administration and the Treasury Department, proceed as diligently as we can, and I hope successfully, to stop up some more loopholes. We do not expect to be able to do away with all the rascals in the country. As fast as we stop up one loophole, ingenious lawyers will find another way to evade the tax laws. But when we discover them, we can go after them. We cannot give up because we have not done it all at one time.

Mr. DITTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DITTER. Is it not the reasoned judgment of the gentleman that the same result could have been brought about by having the Treasury lay before the committee the facts which it had, and without calling upon the men in an inquisitorial way, develop the facts without all this blare of trumpets?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not think so. I think men who would resort to questionable, unscrupulous, and dishonest means, although it may have been done within the letter of the law, to evade payment of taxes, should be pilloried before the public and the public should know what they are doing. That is one of the most effective ways to stamp out such evils.

Mr. DITTER. Does the gentleman mean that is in accordance with the administration's policy of arraying class against class?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not. Neither is in accordance with the policy of our committee.

Mr. DITTER. It is in accordance with the consistent policy of the administration.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not concede that.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make just one observation. From what I have been able to learn from reading the newspapers—and that is all the information that I have about this investigation thus far—there have been no methods brought to light that have been employed by income-tax payers to avoid or evade the payment of taxes that were not brought to the attention of Congress in the President's message. The President's message outlined numerous methods that were employed by various taxpayers in order to avoid payment of taxes. I have not yet learned of one additional method that has been employed by a taxpayer as a result of this investigation. I may be in error. If I am, I will be glad to have the gentleman from North Carolina, or any other member of the committee, point out wherein I am in error.

Mr. Chairman, if I am not in error in this respect, I want to predict now that at the end of this investigation you will not have found any other method that has been employed that was not fully explained and pointed out in the President's message. I merely make this statement to vindicate the position I took at the time the investigation was brought about. At that time I said that instead of having an investigation we should act for the purpose of plugging up the loopholes which were brought to our attention at that time. We should have plugged up those loopholes then, and if there was need for further investigation to discover new and additional loopholes, I, for one, would not object to a further investigation, and would be willing to go along. I am very sure, however, we are not going to get any place and no further than we would have gotten if we had passed a law plugging up the loopholes on the day the President's message was brought to us.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words in order to ask the chairman one or two questions.

I notice the appropriation for the Railroad Retirement Act is $99,888,000 plus unexpended balances. Will the chairman tell us approximately the amount of such unexpended balances?

Mr. WOODRUM. They have about $41,000,000 in the present fund. This appropriation is made necessary because the new Railroad Retirement Act which we passed brings in and makes subject to pensions and retirement benefits about 50,000 additional employees who were not within the group before.

Mr. BIERMANN. Then the actual amount to be expended during the coming fiscal year for railroad retirement by the Government would be about $140,000,000?

Mr. WOODRUM. In the fund, but not to be expended. This goes into the building up of a revolving fund which is required by the act. All this money will not be actually expended in 1938. The funds are invested in Government securities and constitute a revolving fund which we build up by annual appropriations.

Mr. BIERMANN. Will the gentleman state whether or not the expectation is that this will be about the annual appropriation?

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think anybody can say that, I may say to the gentleman. It depends on the number of employees who apply and are found subject to the benefits of the act.

Mr. BIERMANN. We cannot know the cost until we get a little experience?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is it.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, can the gentleman tell us how much money will be covered into this fund by the employees or the employers under the law?

Mr. WOODRUM. It will be covered into the Treasury. It does not go into the fund. About $130,000,000, as I recall it.

Mr. TABER. If the gentleman will permit, $130,000,000 a year is what this is supposed to yield.

Mr. WOODRUM. One hundred and thirty million dollars a year.

Mr. DOWELL. That will be the average?

Mr. TABER. That is what it is estimated it will be next year. The rates are higher thereafter.

Mr. DOWELL. Then the amount will be larger?

Mr. TABER. Probably.

Mr. DOWELL. How much will the Treasury, then, be called upon to contribute to this amount?

Mr. WOODRUM. It all comes out of the Treasury, but the Government is not called upon to contribute anything.

Mr. DOWELL. That is what I understood. Then, as I understand the gentleman, the Government will in the end not appropriate any money which is not paid into the Treasury by the employers and the employees?

Mr. WOODRUM. That is the theory of the legislation.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Rent of buildings: Not to exceed $30,000 of such funds available to the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1938, as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, may be transferred to the appropriation for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia for such Department for such fiscal year.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COCHRAN: On page 5, after line 12, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"TREASURY DEPARTMENT

"For the establishment of 'The Fund for the Payment of Government Losses in Shipment', authorized by 'The Government Losses in Shipment Act', $500,000."

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, the House has agreed to the Senate amendment, which completes the legislation necessary to set up a revolving fund to take the place of the private insurance the Government has been carrying to insure valuable shipments. The bill requires $500,000 to be appropriated, which is more or less a bookkeeping transaction. During the present week the Treasury Department has renewed the insurance it carries with a private corporation, but there is a specific proviso in the contract to the effect that when this bill becomes effective the contract ceases.

The Director of the Budget has just told me that if this item is carried in the pending bill the Government is saved approximately $1,200 a day. If the item is not carried in the bill, the appropriation will not be available until the deficiency bill is passed. The deficiency bill will come in at the close of the session, and no one knows when that will be. If you desire to save $1,200 a day, this amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I may say I have examined the matter the gentleman suggests, and the committee has been notified that the Budget approves the amendment. I think the gentleman's amendment should be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, after the Cochran amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 2. The appropriations and authority with respect to appropriations contained herein shall be available from and including July 1, 1937, for the purposes respectively provided in such appropriations and authority. All obligations incurred during the period between June 30, 1937, and the date of the enactment of this joint resolution in anticipation of such appropriations and authority are hereby ratified and confirmed if in accordance with the terms thereof."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the joint resolution, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOBBS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 433) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON REORGANIZATION OF THE FEDERAL JUDICIARY

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, I send to the desk a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 17

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there shall be printed 30,000 additional copies of Senate Report No. 711, current session, on the bill (S. 1392) to reorganize the judicial branch of the Government, of which 7,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 23,000 copies for the use of the House document room.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 4471 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 434) to amend the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended", which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill and, particularly, why it is necessary to pass the measure at this time?

Mr. BLAND. The reason it is necessary to pass the joint resolution at this time is this: Last year we passed a bill requiring automatic sprinklers to be installed on certain ships and provided that on and after July 1, 1937, they should not sail unless they had them on. They undertook to put them on, and there are 41 ships that have been equipped and 61 ships on which the work is 50 percent completed. Unless this bill is passed these ships will be prevented from sailing. The delay has been due to strikes and various other causes of that nature. It is an emergency matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And this joint resolution gives them further opportunity to meet the law.

Mr. BLAND. Yes; and one of the sprinkler-system concerns telegraphed asking that this be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 434

Resolved, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend section 4471 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended" (Public, No. 712, 74th Cong.), approved June 20, 1936, is amended by striking out "July 1, 1937" in the first line of the second paragraph thereof and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1937."

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the Appendix of the RECORD an address delivered by our colleague the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BIGELOW].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 267

Resolved, That EDWARD L. O'NEILL, of New Jersey, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on the District of Columbia.

The resolution was agreed to.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. Today is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

SLUM CLEARANCE AND HOUSING UNDERTAKINGS IN HAWAII

Mr. GREEN (when the Committee on the Territories was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Territories, I call up the bill (H. R. 7378) to authorize the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to create a public corporate authority authorized to engage in slum clearance and housing undertakings and to issue bonds of the authority, to authorize said legislature to provide for financial assistance to said authority by the Territory and its political subdivisions, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2622 of similar title be substituted for the House bill and be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 2622 be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would like to have the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] given an opportunity for a few minutes to explain the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have that opportunity, undoubtedly. The gentleman from Florida is entitled to 1 hour. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii may create a public corporate authority to engage in slum clearance, or housing undertakings, or both, within such Territory. The legislature of said Territory may provide for the appointment and terms of the members of such authority and for the powers of such authority, except that such authority shall be given no power of taxation. The legislature may authorize the Territory or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof to make loans, donations, and conveyances and make available their facilities and services to such authority, and to take other action in aid of slum clearance or housing undertakings, and may, without regard to any Federal acts restricting the disposition of public lands of the Territory, authorize the commissioner of public lands, the Hawaiian Homes Commissioners, and any other officers of the Territory having power to manage and dispose of its public lands, to grant, convey, or lease to such authority parts of the public domain, and may provide that any of the public domain or other property acquired by such authority may be mortgaged by it as security for its bonds. The legislature of said Territory may authorize such authority to issue bonds or other obligations of such character and maturity and in such manner as the legislature may provide. Such bonds shall not be a debt of the Territory or any political or municipal corporation or subdivision thereof, shall not constitute public indebtedness within the meaning of section 55 of the act approved April 30, 1900, entitled "An act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii", as amended, and shall not constitute bonds of the Territory of Hawaii within the meaning of the act approved August 3, 1935, entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes." All legislation heretofore enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii dealing with the subject matter of this act and not inconsistent herewith is hereby ratified and confirmed.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, the Territory of Hawaii has organized a housing authority in accordance with the model legislation proposed by the Department of the Interior. Under the organic act it is necessary to secure the approval of the Congress before that authority can function. This bill simply confirms the creation of the Housing Authority in accordance with the existing legislation, and makes no demands upon the Federal Treasury of any sort. The bonds to be issued by the Housing Authority are to be secured by the property of the Authority.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7378) was laid on the table.

ISSUANCE OF CERTAIN BONDS, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Territories, I call up the bill (H. R. 7489) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935, and ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2653, of identical title and text, be substituted for the House bill and be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida calls up the bill H. R. 7489 and asks unanimous consent to substitute therefor the bill S. 2653, of similar title. Is there objection?

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is the Senate bill identical with the House bill?

Mr. GREEN. It is identical.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes", approved August 3, 1935, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, is authorized and empowered to issue bonds in the sum of not to exceed $4,803,000 of the character and in the manner provided in that certain act of the legislature of said Territory, enacted at its regular session of 1935, entitled 'An act to provide for public improvements and for the securing of Federal funds for expenditure in connection with funds hereby appropriated for such improvements', as amended by act 23, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1937."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7489) was ordered to lie on the table.

SEWER BONDS, CITY OF HONOLULU

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Territories I call up the bill (H. R. 7377) to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation, to issue sewer bonds, and ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 2621, an identical bill, be substituted for the House bill and be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida calls up the bill H. R. 7377, and asks unanimous consent to substitute therefor the bill S. 2621 and to consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, may authorize the city and county of Honolulu, a municipal corporation of the Territory of Hawaii, to issue general obligation bonds in the sum of $1,750,000 for the purpose of enabling it to construct main interceptors and trunk lines and to meet its share of expenses for the construction and extension of laterals under improvement district assessments for a sanitary sewer system in the city and county of Honolulu.

SEC. 2. The bonds issued under authority of this act may be either term or serial bonds, maturing, in the case of term bonds, not later than 30 years from the date of issue thereof, and, in the case of serial bonds, payable in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years and the last installment to mature not later than 30 years from the date of such issue. Such bonds may be issued without the approval of the President of the United States.

SEC. 3. Any legislation enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii in its 1937 session pertaining to the issuance of sewer bonds, as authorized by this act, is hereby ratified and confirmed, subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the amendment of such Territorial legislation by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii from time to time to provide for changes in the improvements authorized by such legislation and for the disposition of unexpended moneys realized from the sale of said bonds.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7377) was ordered to lie on the table.

ISSUANCE OF CERTAIN BONDS, TERRITORY OF HAWAII

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Territories, I call up the bill (H. R. 7490) to enable the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii to authorize the issuance of certain bonds, and for other purposes, and ask unanimous consent to substitute therefor the bill S. 2652, an identical bill, and consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida calls up the bill H. R. 7490, and asks unanimous consent to substitute therefor the bill S. 2652, an identical bill, and to consider the same in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Territory of Hawaii, any provision of the Hawaiian Organic Act, or of any act of this Congress to the contrary notwithstanding, is authorized and empowered to issue bonds in the sum of not to exceed $4,029,000 of the character and in the manner provided in that certain act of the legislature of said Territory, enacted at its regular session of 1937, entitled "An act to provide for public improvements."

Such bonds may be either term or serial bonds, maturing, in the case of the term bonds, not later than 30 years from the date of issue thereof, and, in the case of the serial bonds, payable in substantially equal annual installments, the first installment to mature not later than 5 years and the last installment to mature not later than 30 years from the date of such issue. And said act of said legislature is hereby ratified and confirmed, subject to the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to prohibit the amendment of said act of said Territory by the legislature thereof from time to time to provide for changes in the improvements authorized by said act or for the disposition of unexpended moneys appropriated by said act, and that said bonds may be issued without the approval of the President of the United States.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill (H. R. 7490) was ordered to lie on the table.

HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION ACT, 1920

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on the Territories, I call up the bill (H. R. 7374) to amend the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 2620 be substituted for the House bill, and that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the Senate bill identical with H. R. 7374?

Mr. GREEN. The form in which the bill passed the Senate, having been amended in the Senate, is the same form that the House bill was reported by the House committee.

Mr. DOWELL. In other words, as reported, H. R. 7374 is identical with the Senate bill as it passed the Senate?

Mr. GREEN. As it passed the Senate.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object in order to ask the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING] a question. Will the gentleman state to the House whether or not this bill places any obligation, financial or otherwise, upon the Federal Government, and just briefly what the conditions may be?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to state that. In 1921 the Congress of the United States established the Hawaiian Homes Commission for the rehabilitation of people of Hawaiian blood in the Territory of Hawaii. The entire project has been supported by local funds. During the course of years different amendments have appeared advisable. The measure now being considered proposes a number of minor amendments to perfect the bill. It does not incur any obligation on the part of the Federal Government. It only carries out the rehabilitation program in Hawaii, which is entirely financed by Territorial funds.

I should like to correct the answer made by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] to the question asked by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL]. The way the bill passed the Senate, the amendments approved by the House committee were incorporated in the Senate bill. If we accept the Senate bill, that carries out the intention of the House Committee on the Territories.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Can the gentleman tell us how many homes have been constructed under this Commission?

Mr. KING. There are four projects, two on the Island of Oahu, one on the island of Molokai, and one on the Island of Hawaii, each project taking care of about 200 families, with a total of over 4,000 people of Hawaiian blood living in either house lots or on small farms. This has been done at a net cost that makes it a very creditable picture in comparison with Resettlement Administration figures.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What has been the cost?

Mr. KING. So far the entire amount spent in the 15 years that the rehabilitation program has been in effect is less than $1,500,000, all of which came from Territorial funds.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. You should come over and instruct some of the departments in Washington. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. It has been quite a successful program, and this would carry it on even to a greater degree of success.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. KING. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DOWELL. How many acres, approximately, under the general law of 1921 have been turned over to the Hawaiian Homes Commission?

Mr. KING. At the time the Congress passed the original act they turned over the remaining public lands in the Territory, with a few exceptions, excluding certain areas of cane lands, amounting to about 208,000 acres, not all of which,

of course, has been developed for the purpose of the act, but all of which is under the jurisdiction of the Hawaiian Homes Commission, available for the extension and further development of this rehabilitation program.

I should like to say further to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] that I know of his keen interest in this program, since he was in Congress when the original Hawaiian Homes Act was passed and participated in the discussions of that measure, and helped to have it enacted into law. We of Hawaii appreciate the sympathetic attention which Congress has shown in the success of the rehabilitation of the Hawaiian people, and I want to assure the membership of the House that the program has had a considerable degree of success, that we are learning from experience as we go along, and that this bill will provide the Commission with better legislative means for carrying out the original purpose of the act. I want to express my personal appreciation of the support of the chairman of the Committee on the Territories, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN] and of the membership of that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 203 (1), 203 (4), 204 (2), 207 (1), 208, 208 (1), 208 (5), 208 (6), 208 (7), 209 (1), 209 (2), 209 (3), 209 (4), 215 (1), 215 (2), 215 (3), 216, and 220 of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

Such appraisal shall be made by three appraisers, one of which shall be named by the Commission, one by the previous lessee or the legal representative of his estate, and the third shall be selected by the two appraisers hereinbefore mentioned.

"SEC. 209 (2). After the cancelation of a lease by the Commission in accordance with the provisions of sections 210 and 216 of this title, or the surrender of a lease by a lessee, the Commission is authorized to transfer the lease or to issue a new lease to any qualified Hawaiian, regardless of whether or not he is related in any way by blood or marriage to the previous lessee.

"SEC. 209 (3). After the death of a lessee, a successor or successors as defined in section 208 of this title shall not during a period of not less than 6 months nor more than 2 years, the exact length of such period to be fixed by the Commission, be deemed to have violated any of the conditions enumerated in section 208 of this title, even though he is not a native Hawaiian and does not during this period, on his own behalf, occupy or use or cultivate the tract as a home or farm in accordance with the provisions of this title and the stipulations and provisions contained in the lease.

"SEC. 215 (2). The loans shall be repaid upon an amortization plan by means of a fixed number of annual installments sufficient to cover (a) interest on the unpaid principal at the rate of 3 percent per annum, and (b) such amount of the principal as will extinguish the debt within an agreed period not exceeding 30 years. The moneys received by the Commission from any installment paid upon such loan shall be covered into the fund. The payment of any installment due shall, with the concurrence therein of at least three of the five members of the Commission, be postponed in whole or in part by the Commission for such reasons as it deems good and sufficient and until such later date as it deems advisable. Such postponed payments shall continue to bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum on the unpaid principal and interest.

"SEC. 215 (3). In case of the cancelation of a lease by the Commission or the surrender of a lease by a lessee, the Commission may, at its option, declare all annual installments upon the loan immediately due and payable or permit the successor or successors to the tract to assume the contract of loan subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this section.

"SEC. 216. The Commission may require the borrower to insure, in each amount as the Commission may by regulation prescribe, all livestock and dwellings and other permanent improvements upon his tract, purchased or constructed out of any moneys loaned from the fund; or in lieu thereof the Commission may directly take out such insurance and add the cost thereof to the amount of annual installments payable under the amortization plan. Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that the borrower has violated any condition enumerated in paragraphs (2), (4), (5), or (6) of section 215 of this title, the Commission shall give due notice and afford opportunity for a hearing to the borrower or the successor or successors to his interest in the tract as the case demands. If upon such hearing the Commission finds that the borrower has violated the condition the Commission may declare all annual installments immediately due and payable, notwithstanding any provision in the contract of loan to the contrary. The Commission shall have a first lien upon the borrower's or lessee's interest in his tract, growing crops, either on the tract or in any collective contract or program, dwellings, or other permanent improvements thereon, and his livestock, to the amount of all annual installments due and unpaid and of all taxes upon such tract and improvements paid by the Commission, and of all indebtedness of the lessee, the payment of which has been assured by the Commission. Such lien shall have priority over any other obligation for which the tract, said growing crops, dwellings, other improvements, or livestock may be security.

"The Commission may, at such times as it deems advisable, enforce any such lien by declaring the borrower's interest in his tract, or his successor's interest therein, as the case may be, together with the said growing crops, dwellings, and other permanent improvements thereon, and the livestock, to be forfeited, the lease in respect to such tract canceled, and shall thereupon order the tract to be vacated and the livestock surrendered within a reasonable time. The right to the use and occupancy of the Hawaiian home lands contained in such tract shall thereupon revest in the Commission, and the Commission may take possession of the tract and the improvements and growing crops thereon: Provided, That the Commission shall pay to the borrower any difference which may be due him after the appraisal provided for in paragraph (1) of section 209 of this title has been made.

"SEC. 220. The Commission is hereby authorized directly to undertake and carry on general water and other development projects in respect to Hawaiian home lands, and to undertake other activities having to do with the economic and social welfare of the homesteaders. The legislature of the Territory is authorized to appropriate out of the treasury of the Territory such sums as it deems necessary to provide the Commission with funds sufficient to execute such projects, to carry on its administration and maintenance activities, and to accumulate a revolving loan fund of $1,000,000. The legislature is further authorized to issue bonds to the extent required to yield the amount of any sum so appropriated."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that we are now under the 5-minute rule. The gentleman can be recognized in his own right.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, the law that was enacted in 1920 creating the Hawaiian Homes Commission was very unique. I know of no other law passed by the Congress of this general character. Under this law certain public lands in the Territory of Hawaii were turned over to what is called the Hawaiian Homes Commission, the Commission consisting of five persons to administer this law. Under the provisions of the law, this land was given to the Commission for the purpose of turning the same over to the Hawaiian people in the Territory. The purpose of the law was to prevent the further taking up of the public lands by large companies and large landholders and eventually to drive the Hawaiians from the land.

This law was to protect the Hawaiians in their rights to the lands that were then still owned by the Government. Under this same plan, over 200,000 acres of land have been turned over to the Hawaiian Commission, and the Commission has been very successfully carrying on the work of turning these lands over to the Hawaiian people. Many of the Hawaiian people have been placed on these lands and have been able to take care of their lands and to provide a living for their families who otherwise might have been now on relief. I am very glad to know that a very great number of these persons have been successful in their work. The bill we are now considering is to add just a few acres of land to the land that was turned over to these people by the Hawaiian Homes Commission since the law was first enacted, that they may better enjoy their homesteads secured under the provisions of this law, but is to be used for the benefit of homesteaders who occupy adjoining lands, that it may be used by them as an outlet to the sea. As I understand it, the land which is now being turned over to the Commission by this bill is not to be used as homesteads, but is to be used for the benefit of homesteaders.

I know of no experiment that has been more successful in its operation. This law is administered by the Hawaiian people, as the law requires that at least three members of this commission of five must be of Hawaiian blood.

Under this plan title to the land is not given to the homesteader who gets it. Instead he is given a lease and is not permitted to transfer it to any person except of Hawaiian blood. This keeps the land strictly in the hands of the Hawaiian people, which, to my mind, has been the salvation of the people who were in a position where they needed help from the Government of the United States. They have been able to make their own living and to support their families from the land that the Government has turned over to the Hawaiian Homes Commission.

This plan has been very successful. The Hawaiian Homes Commission received no compensation for their services, except the compensation they receive in the satisfaction of aiding the homesteader in providing a home for himself and family.

I had something to do with the preparation and passing of the original law creating the Hawaiian Homes Commission, and I am more than pleased with its success.

May I say a word about the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING]? This legislation has been brought before the House because of his efforts for its consideration. The original law was presented by the late Prince Kalanianola, who was a Member of this House for many years. By his untiring efforts, the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. KING], in the presenting of this bill, has greatly improved it. Mr. KING is always busy in the interests of the Territory and the Hawaiian people. Every Member of the House admires and respects him.

This bill should pass, as I am sure it will aid the Hawaiian Homes Commission in making the Hawaiian people happier. I compliment the Delegate [Mr. KING] on his splendid work.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to compliment the Delegate from Hawaii on the record time in which various important bills have been enacted into law and on the fine manner in which he cooperates with the Committee on Territories and the confidence in which the committee holds him. I compliment him also on the very friendly relationship that he is building up for the people of Hawaii.

This experiment has been outstanding in character, as the gentleman from Iowa has told us, and I am sure that the House is very happy to have this expeditious handling of legislation of some great importance to this Territory.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider and a House bill (H. R. 7374) were laid on the table.

REPEAL OF CERTAIN TAXES ON SHIPPING IN ALASKA

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Territories, I call up the bill (S. 2254) to amend section 460, chapter 44, title II, of the act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District", approved March 3, 1899, as amended, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to ask a question, will the Delegate from Alaska advise us whether this bill affects in any way American ships; for instance, would a ship that sailed from San Francisco to Alaska pay this tax?

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the Delegate from Alaska.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, the bill seeks to repeal license tax provisions applicable to Alaska. These tax provisions, in the opinion of the officials of the Department of Justice, apply only to interport business carried on in Alaska. No additional burdens would be imposed upon any shipping by the passage of this bill. On the contrary, the burdens that may be imposed upon some shipping under the provisions sought to be repealed will be removed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does it affect in any way a ship owned in continental America?

Mr. DIMOND. It is only to the advantage of ships owned in the United States as well as ships owned in Alaska.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It does relieve our shipping to a certain extent, then?

Mr. DIMOND. It may relieve, but cannot impose a further burden. The reason I make that answer is because of the uncertainty surrounding the construction of these provisions by the courts, in view of the debate in Congress when the tax provisions were under consideration. To obviate the uncertainty and to clear the thing up we want to repeal these provisions, and to leave the matter of taxation on shipping to the Alaska Territorial Legislature.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. In any event, it does not add a new burden.

Mr. DIMOND. None at all.

Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is a Senate bill. A similar bill was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]. At the time of its introduction I declined to sponsor it because I was then uncertain as to its merit. Since then I have been convinced that the bill ought to pass.

The provisions of the Federal license-tax law applicable to Alaska sought to be repealed by this bill provide for a tax of $1 per ton, customhouse measurement, on freight and transportation lines and ships and shipping doing business or registered in Alaska, "or not paying license or tax elsewhere." May I repeat the phrase, "or not paying license or tax elsewhere", because that phrase is of the utmost importance.

While the circuit court of appeals of the ninth circuit in the case of Northern Commercial Co. against United States, reported in 217 Federal, page 33, has held that the word "elsewhere", as used in the law, means elsewhere in Alaska, or in some other judicial division in the Territory of Alaska, that decision cannot be sustained. From a consideration of the debate in Congress upon the passage of the License Tax Act, the conclusion is inescapable that the word "elsewhere" was intended to mean, and actually means, elsewhere in the United States than in the Territory of Alaska. It necessarily follows that if the freight and passenger transportation lines and the ships and shipping sought to be taxed by the law under consideration be taxed elsewhere than in Alaska they are entirely exempt from the Alaska tax. Most of the shipping lines, and particularly the large ones, which do business in Alaska and between the States and Alaska actually pay some taxes elsewhere and therefore, despite the decision of the circuit court of appeals in the Northern Commercial Co. case, they are and ultimately will be held exempt from the application of the license-tax provisions on freight and passenger transportation lines and ships and shipping now under discussion.

In order to inform myself on the exact question presented in the case of Northern Commercial Co. against United States, which I have just now referred to, I secured from the clerk of the circuit court of appeals at San Francisco, Calif., a copy of the printed record and of the briefs in the case. To my astonishment, I found that the debate in Congress relative to the provisions of the License Tax Act in question concerning Alaska shipping and transportation was not brought to the attention of the Court, and, so far as the record shows and the briefs show, neither the Court nor counsel in that case had any knowledge whatever of the meaning placed upon the tax provisions now under consideration by Congress. It is not necessary to remind the House that under the most elementary principles of statutory construction, the interpretation placed upon the statute by the lawmakers should govern, unless the terms of the statute are so explicit in themselves as to remove all doubt on the question.

Moreover, the officials of the Department of Justice have reached the conclusion, and it is probably the correct conclusion, that the license tax was intended to apply only to interport business carried on in Alaska and not to commerce between the United States and Alaska. The interport business carried on in Alaska is relatively negligible and to impose the tax on that business alone works a serious discrimination against local lines which do no interstate business between Alaska and the United States. The present provisions of the law also discriminate against local operators in that their ships are likely to be registered in Alaska and thus be subject to the tax while the ships of the big lines are registered outside of Alaska and, since they pay license or tax "elsewhere", are not subject to the provisions of the tax.

A third reason presents itself for the passage of the bill, and that lies in the fact that Alaska shipping is in a measure in competition with the Canadian shipping serving Alaska. The Canadian ships are forbidden to carry on any interport business in Alaska, and, therefore, under the construction placed upon the law by the Department of Justice officials, are in any case exempt from the tax. The American ships pay higher wages and are generally more costly to build and operate. To impose a tax on American shipping when the competitive Canadian shipping is exempt from the tax is scarcely fair to our own people.

Since the provisions of the tax act mentioned apply only to interport shipping in Alaska and not to interstate shipping between Alaska and the United States, and since, almost by common consent, these provisions of the law have been all but inoperative in Alaska for the period of approximately 37 years, and since, if operative, they are bound to operate with the greatest rigor and with a marked degree of discrimination against small companies carrying on transportation only within the Territory of Alaska; and since, if not repealed, the big companies doing an interstate as well as Alaska interport business will limit their Alaska interport business to a few ships only and refuse to transport passengers or freight from one port to another in Alaska on their ships where the revenues are not very great, in order to avoid payment of the tax, it is my considered judgment that the bill should pass. But it should pass on one condition only. At my suggestion the committee adopted an amendment which is to be incorporated in the bill as section 2, which reads as follows:

SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall abrogate, limit, or curtail the powers granted the Territorial Legislature of Alaska to impose taxes or licenses, nor limit or curtail any powers granted to the Territorial Legislature of Alaska by the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, entitled "An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes", or by any other act of Congress.

It will be observed, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment adequately preserves the right of the Territorial Legislature to impose any tax which it may see fit on Alaska shipping; that is to say, on the interport business carried on by boats and ships in Alaska. Now, it must be remembered that under the construction placed upon it by the Department of Justice, that is all the present law does—imposes a tax upon interport business—unless the vessels are registered in Alaska. As I stated a moment ago, most, if not all, of the vessels owned by the larger companies are not registered in Alaska and as they pay license or tax elsewhere they are not subject to the Alaska tax. Since Congress has not by the tax provisions under consideration, or by any other law, sought to impose a tax upon the interstate business carried on between ports in the United States and ports in Alaska, to retain the present tax provisions on the books would simply result in penalizing Alaskans and Alaska business without accomplishing any good for anyone.

First, last, and all the time, Mr. Speaker, I am a home-ruler. I believe in the largest measure of home rule for Alaska. The amendment which I have suggested will insure to the territorial legislature full taxing power with respect to freight and passenger transportation lines and ships and shipping within the Territory of Alaska. It may be remarked in passing that the language of this amendment, which is to be section 2 of the bill, is substantially the same language embodied in section 8 of the act of June 6, 1924, relative to the fisheries, and that provision has been construed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in the case of Anderson v. Smith (71 Fed. (2d) 493) to adequately preserve the taxing power of the Alaska Legislature.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the shipping lines serving Alaska ought to register all of their ships in Alaska and thus be clearly subject to the tax imposed by the provisions of law in question. As the income of these companies is derived from the business which they do in transporting freight and passengers between the United States and Alaska, and within the Territory of Alaska, it is only reasonable that they should pay some tax to the Territory, for the residents of the Territory provide a large portion of the income received by the transportation companies. Moreover, the shipping companies serving Alaska undoubtedly take into consideration, in fixing rates, all taxes imposed upon them by any taxing authority. They ought to register their vessels in Alaska and pay this tax without demur. But they refuse to do it. Like many other corporations and individuals, they register their ships where the taxes are comparatively light and decline to register them in Alaska. It may be that their hesitation to register their ships in Alaska is due to some apprehension as to possible taxation by municipalities in the Territory, and it is easy to understand their concern on that ground. In view of the fact that the ship owners cannot be compelled to register their vessels in Alaska under present law, and in view of the fact that the operation of the present law under the construction placed upon it by the Department of Justice will result only in penalizing Alaskans and in placing additional burdens on transportation in Alaska, there is only one thing to do and that is to pass this bill and repeal the tax, for I am not credulous enough to believe that Congress will ever pass a law either requiring unconditionally the transportation companies serving Alaska to register their ships in Alaska, or to amend the provisions of the present license tax act so as to require payment of the tax on interstate as well intrastate commerce with respect to Alaska no matter where the ships are registered.

It has long been my view that all of the provisions of the Federal license tax laws applicable to Alaska should be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal by the Alaska Legislature, and in the Seventy-fourth Congress and again in the Seventy-fifth Congress I have introduced and urged for passage a bill seeking to grant to the Alaska Territorial Legislature the full right to alter, amend, or repeal all or any part of the Federal License Tax Act applicable to Alaska. The bill now under consideration is in harmony therewith.

Mr. Speaker, so far as I am aware, there is no opposition to this bill in Alaska. I have received approximately 40 letters and telegrams from chambers of commerce, associations, and individuals in all parts of Alaska, urging me to support the bill and not a single letter or telegram or other communication opposed to the passage of the bill. In Alaska it is generally considered, and I think rightly, that the failure of Congress to pass the bill is bound to curtail transportation facilities within Alaska to such an extent that many people will not only be discommoded but will suffer substantial financial loss. One of the crying needs in Alaska at this time is additional transportation facilities on land and water and in the air, and therefore it is part of my duty to support every measure which will not only help us to keep all of the transportation which we now have but which will extend transportation aids and facilities on land and sea and also by air.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 460, chapter 44, title II, of the act entitled "An act to define and punish crimes in the District of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said District", approved March 3, 1899, as amended, is amended by striking out the following paragraphs:

"Freight and passenger transportation lines, propelled by mechanical power registered in the Territory of Alaska, or not paying license or tax elsewhere, and river and lake steamers, as well as transportation lines doing business wholly within the Territory of Alaska, $1 per ton per annum on net tonnage, customhouse measurement, of each vessel.

"Ships and shipping: Ocean and coastwise vessels doing local business for hire plying in Alaskan waters, registered in Alaska or not paying license or tax elsewhere, $1 per ton per annum on net tonnage, customhouse measurement, of each vessel."

SEC. 2. Section 13 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply with respect to any penalty, forfeiture, or liability incurred under the provision stricken out by this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, strike out lines 11, 12, and 13, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall abrogate, limit, or curtail the powers granted the Territorial Legislature of Alaska to impose taxes or licenses, nor limit or curtail any powers granted to the Territorial Legislature of Alaska by the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912, entitled 'An act to create a legislative assembly in the Territory of Alaska, to confer legislative powers thereon, and for other purposes', or by any other act of Congress."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks which I have just made concerning this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, the Delegate from Hawaii and the Delegate from Alaska are giving unusually good cooperation in our committee. I think the action of the House in sustaining the committee's reports on these bills is the best compliment that could be paid to these gentlemen.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—RUTHERFORD V. TAYLOR (H. DOC. NO. 282)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read and referred to the Committee on Elections No. 1 and ordered printed:

JUNE 30, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: On December 4, 1936, Calvin Rutherford served notice on J. Will Taylor, returned Member from the Second Congressional District of the State of Tennessee, of his purpose to contest the election of said Taylor, and filed a copy of said notice in this office.

Now comes the sitting Member, J. Will Taylor, and in a communication to me dated June 15, 1937, makes the following statements:

That on December 21, 1936, he replied to the notice of contest served upon him by said Calvin Rutherford;

That on January 27, 1937, contestant began taking testimony on his behalf, and thereafter on January 29 and on April 27, 1937, additional testimony was taken on his behalf;

That no further testimony was adduced, notwithstanding his (contestee's) attorney frequently called upon contestant to complete his case;

That contestant failed to produce evidence in support of his contest and has manifestly abandoned same, 180 days having elapsed from the date of contestee's reply, whereas the law prescribes 90 days in which to take testimony in a contested-election case; and

That he (contestee) incurred legal expenses in connection with the case, for which he desires reimbursement in accordance with law.

For the information of the House the Clerk deems it proper to state that no testimony on behalf of either party has been filed in his office as required and in the manner prescribed by law, and it would therefore appear that the contest had abated.

The letter of Mr. Taylor, together with the letter of his attorney and a certified copy of the testimony taken in behalf of contestant are submitted herewith for the consideration of the appropriate committee.

Respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, that is all the bills we will call up for consideration today. We have another bill, but that will be presented at a later time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further business in order today, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has at least one bill it has been trying to get considered by this House for 60 days. While that committee is not next on the calendar, I should like to have the call of the committees continued, as this seems to be the only way we will ever get a vote on the bill. I dislike very much to object to the request of the gentleman from Texas, but I gave way today in order that the House might take up the conference reports, which took more time than anticipated. It is now rather late in the afternoon, but, Mr. Speaker, I am going to object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday business at this time and request that the call of the calendar continue.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to communicate the information to the House that the little tent on the way across to the New House Office Building, right-hand side, contains all information about the Boy Scouts th. t are in town. If any of you want to know something about that you may get the information over there. You are invited to call personally or else on the phone, Capitol 1396.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I have already received permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Friday next. I ask unanimous consent that that time be extended to 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time already accorded him to address the House on Friday of this week under the conditions named in the request may be extended 15 additional minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Chair what the program will be on Friday, other than the time various gentlemen will take to address the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] that he is not able to answer the gentleman's question as a parliamentary inquiry, but will refer his query to the majority leader.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday a rivers and harbors bill will be considered, and if we get through with the consideration of that bill, we will take up a bill which involves the regulation of natural gas. If we finish the consideration of both of those bills on Thursday, there will be no program on Friday, except speeches. If we do not reach consideration of the natural-gas bill until Friday, that will be the only business. The bill is noncontroversial and will take but a short time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Washington.. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, I relinquish the time I had to address the House this afternoon and ask unanimous consent to address the House next Friday, after the address by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Friday next after the special orders heretofore made I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, on June 29 on roll calls 98 and 99 I am shown as not having voted. I was unavoidably detained in my office. Had I been present, I would have voted "nay" on roll call 98 and "yea" on roll call 99.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana, for 1 week, on account of official business.

To Mr. GRISWOLD (at the request of Mr. GREENWOOD), indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MERRITT, for 2 days, on account of important business.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will continue the call of the committees.

Mr. RAYBURN (when the Committee on Education was called). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further business in order for today, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that this calendar has been called more in the last 6 months than in any 4 years of my experience in the House. I have stated to each and every committee chairman that I would seek to protect the various committees and not have them called at 4:30 in the afternoon when by points of no quorum or otherwise they might lose their day.

The Committee on Labor is the next committee to be called. The chairman of that committee is present and has a bill for the consideration of the House. I am just afraid that committee may lose its day by being called at this late hour and that is why I am making this unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand the Committee on Labor has some bills.

Mrs. NORTON. The committee has one bill to call up.

Mr. RANKIN. How long will its consideration take?

Mrs. NORTON. That depends entirely upon the House.

Mr. RANKIN. Probably how long?

Mrs. NORTON. It should not take more than 5 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, there probably will be little or no opposition to the measure, and I see no reason why the Committee on Labor should not take it up.

Mr. RAYBURN. The trouble is that some of the minority members of the Committee on Labor, who had no idea we would reach the Committee on Labor today, are not here.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. I may say to the gentleman I have sent a messenger for the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH], who is the ranking member of the Committee on Labor, in order that he may be on the floor, but I have not been able to reach him.

Mr. RANKIN. The difference between the Committee on Labor and the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation is that the Committee on Labor is always able to get a rule from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RAYBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. RANKIN. The Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation is not even able to get a hearing on its bill before the Committee on Rules, and it has been trying to do so for 60 days. So far we have been unable to get any hearing at all. We are not deceived about this matter. We realize this is the only way for us to get this bill passed on by the House of Representatives. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Labor will call up her bill, for I am sure there will be no opposition to it, and let us proceed.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Mississippi knows something of my situation. Under the circumstances, and in view of the statement made by the majority leader, I do feel the gentleman ought to show me the consideration of not insisting upon his objection to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. COX. Yes; and I am in favor of granting the gentleman a rule for the consideration of his bill. I am for his bill, and I will do everything within my power to influence the committee to give the gentleman a hearing. I hope the hearing will be granted and that a rule will be reported for the consideration of the gentleman's measure.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman force a vote of the Committee on Rules on my resolution?

Mr. COX. I cannot force the Committee on Rules to do anything, but I will do my best for the gentleman to get a rule.

Mr. RANKIN. This bill involves the gold-star mothers whose insurance payments are expiring, the mothers who sent their sons to the war and never saw them again. They must be taken care of, and this bill is their only hope. This is the only chance we have to take care of them. As I have stated, I have had the bill on the calendar for 60 days, and have had a resolution before the Committee on Rules for 40 days or more, trying to get the bill to the floor of the House. I should like to accommodate the gentleman from Georgia and should like to hear him speak, and will stay here as long as necessary in order to hear the gentleman speak.

Mr. GREEN. I am one who has signed the gentleman's petition, and I am willing to stay here until midnight to help the gentleman pass his bill.

Mr. RANKIN. I am willing to stay here until midnight.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman have any idea the bill will come up today? Certainly not.

Mr. GREEN. I thought the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation had the next call.

Mr. RANKIN. It will come up if the chairman of the Labor Committee will get her bill out of the way.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

APPRENTICES IN INDUSTRY

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Labor I call up the bill (H. R. 7274) to enable the Department of Labor to formulate and promote the furtherance of labor standards necessary to safeguard the welfare of apprentices and to cooperate with the States in the promotion of such standards, and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order a quorum is not present.

Mr. RANKIN. We will pass this bill tonight unless the House adjourns on a roll call, if we have to stay here until midnight.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of order for the moment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I renew the point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order a quorum is not present.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think the minority members of the Committee on Labor are not aware this bill is coming up. I think they should be here and have a chance to be heard if we are going on with it.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes; I withhold my point of order for the moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COX. May I appeal to the gentleman from Mississippi that he kindly not object to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will let the call of committees proceed, when it gets down to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation I am willing to let him dispense with further proceedings under the call of committees, but I am not going to withdraw my objection until the World War Veterans' Committee is called.

Mr. COX. The gentleman has that right, of course.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts withhold his point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I must insist on my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to withhold his point of order. A constitutional question has been raised that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts withdraws his point of order.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Labor I call up the bill (H. R. 7274) to enable the Department of Labor to formulate and promote the furtherance of labor standards necessary to safeguard the welfare of apprentices and to cooperate with the States in the promotion of such standards, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentlewoman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, before we give this permission I think we should know something about the bill. We are somewhat handicapped because we did not expect it to come up at this time.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the author of the bill, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. FITZGERALD], is here and will be pleased to explain the measure.

I may say further that the bill was reported out unanimously by the Committee on Labor before I became chairman of that committee. I have looked up the record and I have found that the vote of the committee was unanimous.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think the rest of the House should know something about the bill, and under my reservation of objection, in order that we may know what the bill is about, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill sets up in the Department of Labor an apprentice training system for the youth of this country. We have debated here today for hours about taking 300,000 boys and putting them into the forests of America. This bill will provide a cloak of protection to put around boys and girls and encourage them to go back into the skilled trades, and in some localities today we have a crying need for trained and skilled workers.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Just what does the bill do?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The bill sets up standards by Federal cooperation with the States and through the formation of voluntary committees in the States, throwing a cloak of protection around the boys and girls and setting up standards and protecting them and guaranteeing that when their time of service in a trade has expired, they will come out full-fledged mechanics. It also incorporates vocational education in the plants.

Mr. HOFFMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question when he concludes his statement?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes. The bill was heard by a subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and representatives of labor and capital appeared. I may say this is, perhaps, the only bill before the House today that both labor and capital are in favor of. The National Manufacturers Association wrote the committee and went on record in favor of the bill and Mr. John Frey represented the American Federation of Labor before the committee, testifying in favor of the bill.

If you really want to do something for the youth of the country, this is one of the best bills you can pass, because it will encourage them to learn a skilled trade as a means of livelihood.

In the past 25 years over one million and a quarter mechanics have come here from the European countries, and I am going to tell the Members of the House now that if a bill of this nature is not passed and a system of this kind not established, within 10 years you will lower your immigration bars in order to get mechanics from across the water. We have a need for mechanics in special lines today. Industry is crying for them and still we are passing laws here to put the youth of our country into the forests, instead of encouraging them to go back into the trades and become skilled mechanics.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. In the New York Times of yesterday and in the same paper the day before there was a long article each day by a special writer who had been investigating conditions in Michigan, and in the article the statement was made that the W. P. A. and the C. I. O. were interested and that the C. I. O. had contributed some $6,000 in Michigan for the purpose of educating the youth there along certain lines. If the Department of Labor establishes this school, what connection, if any, will the C. I. O. workers have with the undertaking?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This bill does not propose to establish schools, but it proposes to protect the boys and girls in industry.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It proposes to educate them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. While they are getting practical knowledge, so that a boy, after serving an apprenticeship of 4 years, will not be exploited, but when he has served his apprenticeship he will be a first-class mechanic.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The question I want to ask the gentleman is this: What part has the C. I. O. in the training of these young men and women?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has nothing to do with it, to my knowledge.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The W. P. A. has something to do with it, according to this article.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not know about that, but I do know that the bill is endorsed by both labor and capital.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will not the C. I. O. furnish the teachers if the training is under the present Secretary of Labor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The training is going to be done by the employers in the various industries.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But under the supervision of the Department of Labor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The standards will be set up by the Department of Labor in cooperation with the States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. With the cooperation of Mme. Perkins?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Department of Labor.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us whether the committee went into the cost of the administration of this bill?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Approximately $56,000 has been the amount provided previously. This activity has been functioning under the National Youth Administration.

If the gentleman will recall, 2 months ago, when the Committee on Appropriations had that part of the bill under consideration, they would not pass it, because that committee claimed it was not removed legally from the National Youth Administration into the Department of Labor. Both the minority and the majority parties on the committee are in favor of making that small appropriation of $56,900.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And this is transferring it to the Department of Labor?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And then setting up a standard for the apprenticeship, for the different States?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is all voluntary?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not compulsory?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. In fact, 45 States have set up State committees already, and 112 voluntary committees are working, and these States already have passed these plans during the last year. There was no opposition before the committee.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman from Connecticut please tell us what the power of the National Advisory Committee will be? Under section 2 the Secretary of Labor is authorized to appoint a National Advisory Committee, to serve without compensation. Will the gentleman tell us what the duties and powers of that committee will be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They will set up a voluntary plan. It is national because some association wrote and asked that the name be changed to the National Association or the National Committee, to make it function with the States.

Mr. DITTER. Then to that extent the Secretary of Labor will be able to carry out and formulate a policy with respect to the several States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Not unless the States agree to it.

Mr. DITTER. But the Secretary of Labor is authorized to appoint the members of the committee. There is no reservation, no limitation with respect to the authority of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The States adopt their own plan.

Mr. DITTER. I am speaking now of the National Advisory Committee. The gentleman said the National Advisory Committee's duties and powers would be to formulate policies. I say to that extent the influence of the Secretary of Labor will be expressed through the appointees of this committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committees will be appointed through the State agencies.

Mr. DITTER. I am afraid that the gentleman and I are in disagreement. Under section 2 the Secretary of Labor has authority to appoint the committee. It does not say anything except to appoint this national committee. It delegates that authority directly to the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is, the national committee sets up with the State organization a voluntary plan. Everything in this is voluntary.

Mr. DITTER. And to that extent, then, the Secretary of Labor's influence will be felt in the administration of the proposed act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would not say so.

Mr. DITTER. How is it to be obviated?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Because it will be voluntary on the part of a State whether it accepts the act or not.

Mr. DITTER. What is the power of the committee?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Just making recommendations; that is all.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied with the explanation of the gentleman from Connecticut and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan reserves the right to object.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Here is the article to which I referred, and it says about $7,000 is set ascide by the union each month for this educational program from its income of $350,000 a month, and it ties in with the W. P. A. If this committee is established by the Department of Labor to teach these young men and women and qualify them to follow a trade, how does that hook up with this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not see any connection at all with it, because all this bill does is this: After a boy is in a plant, working, he is indentured to learn a trade in the plant, working for the company. After he is indentured, these standards will be set up for his protection. He will get his practical experience right there. His vocational education he will get through the trade school.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But these schools are to be set up in these plants, and the C. I. O. is furnishing $7,000 a month to assist in that. Does not that tie up directly with this?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Labor is hereby authorized and directed to formulate and promote the furtherance of labor standards necessary to safeguard the welfare of apprentices, to extend the application of such standards by encouraging the inclusion thereof in contracts of apprenticeship, to bring together employers and labor for the formulation of programs of apprenticeship, to cooperate with State agencies engaged in the formulation and promotion of standards of apprenticeship, and to cooperate with the National Youth Administration and with the Office of Education of the Department of the Interior in accordance with section 6 of the act of February 23, 1917 (39 Stat. 932), as amended by Executive Order No. 6166, June 10, 1933, issued pursuant to an act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 414), as amended.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Labor may publish information relating to existing and proposed labor standards of apprenticeship, and may appoint national advisory committees to serve without compensation. Such committees shall include representatives of employers, representatives of labor, educators, and officers of other executive departments, with the consent of the head of any such department.

SEC. 3. On and after the effective date of this act the National Youth Administration shall be relieved of direct responsibility for the promotion of labor standards of apprenticeship as heretofore conducted through the Division of Apprentice Training and shall transfer all records and papers relating to such activities to the custody of the Department of Labor. The Secretary of Labor is authorized to appoint such employees as he may from time to time find necessary for the administration of this act, with regard to existing laws applicable to the appointment and compensation of employees of the United States: Provided, however, That he may appoint persons now employed in Division of Apprentice Training of the National Youth Administration upon certification by the Civil Service Commission of their qualifications after nonassembled examinations.

SEC. 4. This act shall take effect on July 1, 1937, or as soon thereafter as it shall be approved.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, several days ago the House very kindly granted me 1 hour's time for an address after the completion of the legislative program for today.

My address, Mr. Speaker, will be more or less factual and largely intended to be used as a basis for discussion later on.

Mr. Speaker, the industrial contest which is today driving the United States of America toward what may be a state of civil war is a titanic struggle between forces favoring industrial relations between labor and capital on the basis of an organized labor democracy, as represented in the American Federation of Labor, and forces favoring industrial relations between labor and capital on the basis of a labor despotism, as typified by the Committee for Industrial Organization. Beginning as an apparently internal disagreement in the American Federation of Labor, John Lewis and his cohorts have expanded the Committee for Industrial Organization movement into what now cannot be described by any other term than as a reign of industrial terror.

Both the philosophies and the modus operandi of the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization are as far apart as the poles.

The American Federation of Labor system of an organized labor democracy is based upon a lawful and orderly procedure of collective bargaining to adjust capital-labor relations. The Committee for Industrial Organization believes in a lawless and disorderly procedure to force its own desired adjustments of capital-labor relations.

The American Federation of Labor, a conservative but aggressive aggregation of trade-unions, has, over the years, demonstrated its disciplinary control over its unions and its high regard for the inviolability of its contracts with employers.

The Committee for Industrial Organization, a radical if not communistic, reckless, and marauding aggregation of hastily formed unions, has demonstrated no disciplinary control over its unions, but has demonstrated its utter disregard for the inviolability of any contract it has made or may make with employers.

The American Federation of Labor officials have been duly elected by a fair vote of their membership on the basis of a pure labor democracy.

The officials of the Committee for Industrial Organization are a group of self-constituted leaders intent upon wielding a despotic power over the laboring men and women of America. They have never been elected to their offices by any group.

The American Federation of Labor operates under a duly adopted constitution and bylaws approved by its membership.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, the Committee for Industrial Organization operates under no constitution and no bylaws, except the will and desires of John L. Lewis and his cohorts.

The American Federation of Labor grants autonomy to its member unions.

The Committee for Industrial Organization demands and secures absolute submission of its member unions to the mandates of John L. Lewis.

The American Federation of Labor revenues and expenditures are audited and accounted for to the general membership of the organization.

So far as I have been able to ascertain, the Committee for Industrial Organization makes no accounting to its union membership for dues or special assessments collected and expended.

The American Federation of Labor operates on a basis of voluntary membership of working men and women in its craft unions.

The Committee for Industrial Organization operates on a basis of an involuntary and impressed membership of working men and women in its unions.

The American Federation of Labor is a strictly nonpolitical labor democracy.

The Committee for Industrial Organization is a labor-political-communistic organization, insofar as its leaders are concerned.

The American Federation of Labor never makes any political contributions to any party.

The Committee for Industrial Organization made the largest single contribution in history to a political party in the last campaign.

The American Federation of Labor has always sternly rejected from its membership those who advocated a communistic government for the United States.

The Committee for Industrial Organization staff of officials, strike directors, and organizers are shot through and through with avowed Communists.

The American Federation of Labor has never made the closed shop and the check-off system a strike issue.

The avowed intention of John L. Lewis and the other Committee for Industrial Organization leaders is to make every industry, big and small, in the United States a closed shop—a Committee for Industrial Organization closed shop—with the check-off system.

The American Federation of Labor has at all times advocated legal methods of strike and picketing.

The very essence of the Committee for Industrial Organization technique is lawless methods of striking and armed picketing.

The American Federation of Labor invariably takes a vote of its membership in any industry before a strike is adopted—even as a last resort—to effectuate collective bargaining.

The Committee for Industrial Organization, with its group of sit-down technicians, and its strong-arm squads always strikes first without the consent, and usually without the knowledge, of the workers in any industry, and, after suspending operations, impresses those workers into membership in the Committee for Industrial Organization.

The American Federation of Labor has always maintained its operations within the realm of the economic field, where they properly belong, in striving to achieve better adjustment of wages, hours, and working conditions.

The Committee for Industrial Organization has shifted the problem of industrial relations between employers and employees from the economic field into a political movement; and that political movement has been shifted by the leaders of Committee for Industrial Organization into a communistic political movement.

The American Federation of Labor has always maintained the theory of the vested right of the worker in his job at proper wages, hours, and under proper working conditions.

The Committee for Industrial Organization holds to the theory that the worker not only has a vested right in his job but that he also has a vested ownership in the plant in which he may for the moment be working, and is therefore entitled to sit down and suspend operations whenever he so desires.

The American Federation of Labor has never countenanced and has never permitted an outlaw strike by any of its unions in defiance of a contract with employers. It has always appropriately disciplined such unions on the rare occasions of such action.

Committee for Industrial Organization unions, according to Dorothy Thompson, in the Washington Evening Star of Monday, June 21, have had 180 strikes in some part of the motors industry in 180 days since a solemn written agreement was signed between General Motors and Committee for Industrial Organization.

In short, the difference in the concept of industrial labor relations between the American Federation of Labor and the Committee for Industrial Organization is the difference between American constitutional government and the communistic concept of government of Soviet Russia.

The American Federation of Labor has fought for 50 years for the one objective of bettering the condition of the American working men and women.

The Committee for Industrial Organization is fighting for the declared objective of making John L. Lewis the labor czar of America, with a group of self-avowed Communists as his chief lieutenants and advisers.

In the Committee for Industrial Organization movement America today faces an organized terroristic movement which is utterly ruthless, utterly irresponsible, utterly unprincipled, and utterly foreign to any logical concept of the principles of either of the two great political parties of this country; utterly foreign to every concept expressed in the Constitution, completely at variance with everything we have known in this Nation since its birth in the way of organized movements for the improvement of our economic, industrial, or social conditions.

While the American Federation of Labor has always based its movement and its operation on a logical ground of economic necessity and advantage for the whole people, the Committee for Industrial Organization has proceeded, from the day it was conceived in the mind of John L. Lewis, on the basis of an appeal to the basest emotions and the grossest motives that can actuate those persuaded and propagandized into bitter class hatreds and warfare.

It is time that the emotionalism, the deception, and the cowardly acquiescence to a surge of organized lawlessness be stripped from this situation, and the true picture held up before the American people in all of its sinister and ugly possibilities.

How does the Committee for Industrial Organization operate?

A group of sit-down technicians, in no case employed in the industry they are going to strike, decide upon a demonstration of power by either the sit-down method or by the armed picket method. Outside of a very few key places in the industry which is to be struck, no information is given to the rank and file of the workers in that industry. Suddenly the wheels stop. A small group of these sit-down strikers take wholly illegal possession of the plant. They immediately debar the law-abiding workers from entrance into the plant. To do this, if necessary, they quickly resort to armed intimidation. slugging, assassination, sabotage—any method which at the moment may be regarded as the most effective to frighten the workers and to force the employers to come to such terms as the Committee for Industrial Organization may desire, and by throwing large bodies of massed pickets around the plants, many of these pickets being imported from other States.

Owners of property are barred from their own premises. The United States mails are stopped. The duly constituted courts are defied. The law-enforcement agencies are ignored or resisted.

No appeal is made to the National Labor Relations Board for a free and fair referendum to ascertain whether or not the majority of the workers in the industry want to be represented in collective bargaining by the Committee for Industrial Organization.

Instead of that, these lawless strikers seize the properties; plant records are destroyed, furniture is befouled and defaced.

Not the slightest consideration is given to the economic loss forced upon the workers who, satisfied with the wages, hours, and conditions, are for days and weeks denied their constitutional right to engage peacefully in the vocations upon which they depend for a living for themselves and their families.

Not the slightest consideration is given to the economic loss imposed upon employers and innocent stockholders.

No consideration is accorded the inarticulate mass of ultimate consumers who must finally pay the penalty in increased prices for all the depredations, loss of wages, loss of profits, and suspension of production of real wealth.

Time and again—and it is happening now—the duly elected officials of cities and towns are defied and threatened with armed raids upon their communities, by legions of deluded and power-drunk Committee for Industrial Organization followers, led into these communities from the outside by communistic directors.

When met by determined citizens, properly armed and deputized by their officials, to protect the homes and the towns and the industries of this country, and when some of the Committee for Industrial Organization followers get bruised heads and blackened eyes, and in some cases when they are shot down while on their lawless raids, what happens? John Lewis and his communistic cohorts howl to high heaven of "butcheries", "massacres", "bloody outrages." When the Committee for Industrial Organization pickets beat up honest workingmen who want to go to their peaceful employment in the plants, John Lewis and his lieutenants approve it as being necessary incidents in a good cause.

Very rarely, indeed, is any communistic leader of these deluded Committee for Industrial Organization followers ever found in the forefront of the battle. They are always far back behind the lines inciting their excited dupes to these assaults upon peaceful citizens, and these defiances of the courts and the constituted law enforcement agencies. It is characteristic of this communistic breed, which is so active in carrying on the Committee for Industrial Organization depredations, that they are willing to fight to the last drop of the other fellow's blood. But they always make sure that their own heads are well out of the way of police clubs.

By a cowardly and supine surrender to these lawless forces in their initial depredations in the Michigan sit-down strikes we invited exactly the condition that we have in this country today. This is proved beyond question by the fact that those States whose governors had the moral and political courage to declare that the lawless methods of the Committee for Industrial Organization would not be tolerated have been free of such scenes of carnage and disorder as have characterized the seven States now terrorized by this incipient revolution.

It would seem too grotesque for credence, if it had not happened, that conditions such as obtain in Michigan and Ohio and Pennsylvania could come to pass in the United States of America in A. D. 1937. What a sinister and alarming spectacle we have witnessed in Michigan when the troops were called out to protect and maintain sit-down strikers in their illegal possession of industrial plants, while orders of the courts were defied by the Committee for Industrial Organization.

What a sinister and utterly dangerous event, pregnant with the possibilities for red revolution, we have witnessed in the great State of Pennsylvania. There 14,000 peaceful men quietly engaged, under their constitutional rights, at their vocations in a steel plant were driven from their work by the bayonets and the pistol muzzles of Pennsylvania guardsmen and State police because a group of self-appointed Committee for Industrial Organization leaders had decreed they should not work until they submitted to forced membership in that organization.

What an alarming and utterly dangerous situation has arisen that thousands of men desirous of pursuing their peaceful employment in the steel plants of the Middle West should be driven from their labors at the point of bayonets because a group of self-appointed Committee for Industrial Organization strike leaders decreed they should not work.

What sardonic and unbelievable effrontery these Committee for Industrial Organization leaders have displayed in successfully petitioning the President to close the steel plants because of the "awful carnage", "dreadful scenes", "horrible bloodshed" that would be precipitated by the Committee for Industrial Organization strikers if peaceful American citizens were permitted to continue their work in the struck plants.

I wonder if the full implication of this audacious thing has reached the mind of America yet. Here a group of Committee for Industrial Organization strike technicians struck these plants for no other reason than that they wanted a written contract with the independent steel industry, designating the Committee for Industrial Organization as the sole bargaining agency of all the workers in that industry.

They stationed armed pickets, in defiance of the law and the law-enforcement agencies, to prevent ingress and egress of the workers. They stopped the United States mails. They shot into airplanes. And then they appealed to the President to see that peaceful employees were ejected from the plants by military force, because otherwise these lawless Committee for Industrial Organization groups would not be able to restrain themselves, and carnage and bloodshed would result. It is unfortunate and regrettable that the President acquiesced.

The Committee for Industrial Organization in these cases has made no appeal to the National Labor Relations Board for a free and voluntary referendum of the steel workers as to who shall represent them in their collective bargaining.

There is no issue of wages, or hours, or working conditions involved. The employers have agreed to every wage- and hour- and working-condition demand. The sole issue upon which all this lawlessness and disorder and bloodshed is based is an arrogant demand by the Committee for Industrial Organization leaders that the employers sign a written contract with them recognizing them as the sole representatives of all labor in the industry.

I hold no brief for Tom Girdler and his kind. I think they have been very unwise in their attitude toward labor over the years in the steel industry. That does not alter the fact that two wrongs never made a right; that two lawless and immoral attitudes never create a lawful and moral attitude; that two wrongful acts will not result in a right one.

Let us see what lies behind a written contract between the employers and the Committee for Industrial Organization:

The simple statement sounds logical that if a man is willing to make an agreement he should be willing to put his name to it. Here is a picture of what a signed contract between employers and the Committee for Industrial Organization means, and has been demonstrated to mean:

It means that the employer is fully responsible for the performance of his part of the contract. It means that there is not one iota of responsibility on the part of the Committee for Industrial Organization to perform its part of the contract. Committee for Industrial Organization leaders have violated their contracts with employers scores of times.

A written contract with the Committee for Industrial Organization means new demands by irresponsible leaders, forced by extravagant promises to their deluded followers, for higher wages and shorter hours, without any regard to the economic laws governing production costs and consuming markets that set limits upon such demands.

A written contract with the Committee for Industrial Organization inevitably means—and it is so avowed by John L. Lewis and his lieutenants—a subsequent demand for a closed shop and the check-off system, precisely as John Lewis brought about the closed shop and the check-off system in the United Mine Workers of America.

What do the closed shop and the check-off system, under the Lewis concept of industrial relations, mean?

They mean that the American Federation of Labor craft unions would necessarily disappear from the economic picture in America. Every man and woman employed in any industry, big or small, dominated by the Committee for Industrial Organization, would have to submit to involuntary membership in the Committee for Industrial Organization as a condition to securing employment and making a living. They could not escape this condition. It would mean that no worker in America, be he skilled or unskilled, would dare, in his place of employment or the precincts of his own private home, to breathe one word of discontent or disrespect that might be heard by any member of the Committee for Industrial Organization OGPU on pain of being blacklisted by the Committee for Industrial Organization and denied any chance to make a living for himself and his family at his trade anywhere in America.

A signed contract with the Committee for Industrial Organization will mean eventually the check-off system. What does the check-off system mean? It means that every worker in every industry dominated by the Committee for Industrial Organization, as a condition of his involuntary and forced membership in the industrial union, would have to agree that any dues or special assessments levied against him as a tribute for his right to work would be withheld from his pay envelope by his employer upon orders of John L. Lewis, and, without the employee's consent or knowledge of the reason for such tribute, be transmitted by the employer to the treasury of John L. Lewis.

For any political or other purposes which he might choose, such a system would give John L. Lewis and his communistic cohorts a fund of untold millions a year with which to corrupt politics, buy elections, bribe officials, or use for any other purpose this labor czar of America might desire.

Such a system is plain unadulterated labor despotism.

There is no shadow of question that John L. Lewis and his leaders mean to move to that ultimate goal of the closed shop and the check-off system just as quickly as they can bludgeon American industry into submission to their power.

There is another and even more sinister picture to be drawn.

John Lewis and his lieutenants are now engaged in the unionization under the Committee for Industrial Organization banner, and according to the Committee for Industrial Organization concepts, of 3,000,000 Government workers, Federal and State. Newspaper reports have quoted some of the Committee for Industrial Organization leaders as saying that "as yet" the Army and Navy forces are not to be so organized. "As yet" the employees of the United States Postal Service are not to be so organized. Those two words, "as yet", contain implications of the gravest danger to this Nation, to our constitutional democracy, and to the personal liberties of our people.

Does anybody believe that when John Lewis and his communistic assistants have thoroughly organized the Federal and State and city employees that these labor commissars will hesitate to demand and to secure the most confidential documents in the files of the Government?

Does anybody question my assertion that the motivating force behind the Committee for Industrial Organization is communistic? Read the article entitled "John L. Lewis, His Labor Record" in the American Mercury Magazine for June.

Let me read you a paragraph from an editorial in the Daily Worker of June 22 last, this being the central organ of the Communist Party, United States of America, a section of the Communist International. This Communist newspaper is printed in New York. In an editorial entitled "Neither Spies Nor Weir's Hatchet Gang", the Daily Worker says:

> Now is the time to enroll the steel workers into the Communist Party, in every steel State and community. They are filled with new hopes in their great awakening. They are eager to listen to the party's message.
> What can be a greater contribution to the advance of socialism in America than thousands of steel workers proudly enrolled under the banner of the Communist Party?

I have in my possession an authentic transcript of the plan of campaign for a general steel strike worked out by America's leading Communist, William Z. Foster, in Pittsburgh in 1936, the details of procedure of the present steel strike were laid down in their entirety in that plan.

I have in my possession an authentic list of the names of the organizers for Committee for Industrial Organization, which shows that 75 of them are members of the Communist Party. In addition to these 75 there are working as volunteer organizers 46 others who are known or suspected Communists. I have the names of these organizers and the cities in which they are working. Thus, out of an organizing staff of 249 people, 121 of them are self-avowed Communists or are known to be Communists.

It is not unknown to John Lewis that most of his chief aides and many of his organizers are Communists. He has publicly condoned that fact in more than one statement. The names of many of John Lewis' closest advisers and cofficials in the Committee for Industrial Organization have been placed in the RECORD of this House by other Members with the proof that they are Communists.

It is known to the commanding officers of both the military and the naval services that Communists are recruiting members to their party among the civil and the enlisted personnel. It is known that these Communist workers are carrying on their activities here in the Washington Navy Yard, at Brooklyn, and in the navy yard at San Francisco. Wherever these military and naval forces are stationed these communistic workers, men and women, are busy proselyting. The proofs behind these charges are available whenever any investigating committee of this Congress desires them to be produced.

The avowed purpose of John Lewis and his Committee for Industrial Organization is to create a political party with a large enough treasury—an obvious necessity—which, with the tremendous voting power of his labor forces, will give to him control of the Presidency and the Congress.

In addition to the aid the Committee for Industrial Organization has received from public officials, who are either too cowardly or blind to the ominous trends to perform their sworn duty in the face of John Lewis' threats, we have learned in the last few days that the strikers, as well as the men and women rendered idle through no desire or fault of their own, are to go on relief. If there is anything that has not been done by the Federal and several State Governments to aid and abet John Lewis in establishing a labor despotism in the United States of America, it would be difficult to imagine what it could be.

As I said awhile ago, we have invited this dangerous and costly condition because the Federal and State officials did not meet this threat as it should have been met, by a firm declaration that law and order would be maintained, that the rights of private property would be upheld, that the rights of men and women to pursue their vocations without interference would be preserved, and that the edicts of the duly constituted court would be enforced by whatever armed force of the Federal and State Governments might be required.

To temporize with this movement is like temporizing with a deadly plague creeping over the country. To continue to temporize with this movement will be to invite utter disaster for this Nation.

If we are for a moment to admit that millions of working men and women who are satisfied with their wages and their hours and their working conditions are to be summarily denied their right to earn their living without being impressed into membership in the Committee for Industrial Organization, or in any other organization, we must be prepared to admit that this Government is no longer capable of maintaining the constitutional rights and privileges of its citizens.

If we are going to pursue a policy of encouraging defiance of the courts, of approving lawlessness and disorder, of condoning illegal seizures of entire industrial plants, and if we are going, as we already have gone, a dangerous step further, and use the armed forces of the States, and finally of the Federal Government itself, to compel satisfied wage earners to submit to conscription into the Committee for Industrial Organizations, then we must be prepared to admit not only that this Government is no longer capable of maintaining the constitutional rights and privileges of its citizens, but that it has gone into partnership with the forces of lawlessness and disorder; it has joined hands with a labor despot; it has embraced communism in industrial relations.

In my own Southland we have conditions unlike industrial conditions in the North, in the West, and in the East.

It is the declared intention of John Lewis, Sydney Hillman, and other Committee for Industrial Organization officials to invade the South and to organize both the white and the Negro labor of the Southern States—under the banner of the Committee for Industrial Organization—into a political party as well as a labor union. The proofs are at hand that Committee for Industrial Organization organizers have been convening meetings of Negroes in different parts of the South, at which they have preached social and political equality. They have promised those Negroes shorter hours and higher wages, and they have gone even further and promised them that through the Committee for Industrial Organization the Negroes would be able to dominate the white man's industry of the South.

There is not a Member of this Congress who comes from the Southland who does not know what awful and bloody possibilities lie alarmingly near the surface in any such situation as that.

I find myself amazed that the southern Members of this Congress do not rise en masse to strangle this movement in the South which will inevitably result not only in utter chaos in industrial conditions, but which will lead many a man, white and colored, ordinarily orderly and law abiding, into a conflict that can only end in havoc, bloodshed, and loss of lives.

I warn John L. Lewis and his communistic cohorts here and now that no second "carpetbag expedition" in the Southland, under the red banner of Soviet Russia, and concealed under the slogans of the Committee for Industrial Organization will be tolerated. If minions of the Committee for Industrial Organization attempt to carry through the South their lawless plan of organization, if they attempt to demoralize our industry, to corrupt our colored citizens, to incite race hatreds and race warfare, I warn them here and now that they will be met by the flower of southern manhood, and they will reap the bitter fruits of their own folly.

It is a lamentable and perilous situation that the apparent tendency of the National Labor Relations Board has been to aid and abet the Committee for Industrial Organization movement at the expense and to the disadvantage of the American Federation of Labor ever since the Supreme Court decided that the Wagner Act was constitutional.

We were promised that the purpose of the National Labor Relations Act was to bring about industrial peace and sanity. We were assured that it would offer through the National Labor Relations Board a much-needed agency by which collective bargaining between industry and labor could be achieved without strikes and bloodshed. We were assured that its functions would be similar to those of the Railway Labor Board, and that the effect of the law would be to produce an era of cooperation between capital and labor which has, on the railroads of this country, prevented strikes for many years.

The National Labor Relations Board has not performed that function. The attitude of the National Labor Relations Board has clearly been that of a partisan adherent of the Committee for Industrial Organization. It has time after time submitted in a so-called free and voluntary referendum ballots which in effect said, "Do you want the Committee on Industrial Organization to act as your collective bargaining agency?" Thus the Labor Board has left no alternative for workers in industry but to choose Committee on Industrial Organization as their bargaining agency or remain without any organized representation.

The American Federation of Labor has protested and is now protesting to the National Labor Relations Board this unfair and prejudiced action. If the National Labor Relations Board does not display a better spirit of fairness it will be necessary for this Congress to amend the act so that the Board will be compelled to be unprejudiced in its operations and decisions.

My chief concern is for the laboring men and women of this country. I do not want to see them conscripted into membership in the Committee on Industrial Organization against their will, or into any other labor organization. I am for labor organization, but I am for voluntary, democratic, American labor organization.

I do not want to see the wage earners of this country compelled to pay tribute to any labor despot or to any group of labor commissars for the privilege of exercising their constitutional right to work and to earn a living.

I have but to look at labor under Mussolini in Italy; I have but to look at labor under Hitler in Germany; I have but to look at labor under Stalin in Russia; I have but to look at labor in Turkey under Kemal Pasha, to learn what will be the plight of labor in America under the despotism of John L. Lewis or any other man who attains to the stature of a labor czar.

My next concern is for the consumers of this country. These consumers must in the end pay the full price for whatever power John Lewis and his communistic cohorts obtain and for the tribute which they will take from the pay envelopes of the wage earners of America. Every dollar of damage, every economic loss caused by these lawless outbreaks, these disorders, these epidemics of illegal strikes, will inevitably have to be paid for out of the pocketbooks of the ultimate consumers of this country.

I favor the highest wages, the best hours, and the most pleasant working conditions it is possible to give the wage earners of America which would be compatible with the purchasing power of the people of this country to afford a market for the products of the workers. But I do not favor any headlong, reckless, irresponsible, lawless terroristic attempt to adjust industrial relations that will precipitate a buyers' strike through inordinately high prices, which would in turn surely close the factories and put the deluded followers of the Committee for Industrial Organization leaders in the bread line along with other helpless wage earners.

John Lewis knows, his communistic cohorts know, we all know, that Mr. Roosevelt himself has been depending for the salvation of this great Nation upon the upturn in business, a return of prosperity to industry. With unerring accuracy, John Lewis and his advisers picked the moment when a recuperating industry was again beginning to hit its stride; they picked the moment when prosperity was returning to bring about this disruption in industrial labor relations. The wheels of industry are slowing down and growing silent. Millions of dollars in lost wages and lost profits are mounting day after day. Investors are growing fearful of entrusting their money to industrial uses knowing not what they face from the Committee for Industrial Organization.

If this movement is not sternly curbed, it will lead this country directly into a new deflation. If this lawlessness is not strangled, if this disorder is not stamped out like a plague, this country will see civil war.

The wage earners of America must remember that when the right of private property is denied to the industrialists the right of private property is denied to those of the workers who own their own homes.

It is a sinister picture indeed that we face when we recall that the National Labor Relations Board has ruled in the case of a small Virginia industry that it could not be moved from one section of the State to another unless the owners moved their employees and their families to the new location at the expense of the company. It is but one step further—and a very short step indeed—to a decision by the Labor Board that the owner of a factory cannot close his plant without the permission of the Board. Regardless of what the Labor Board may call that sort of thing, it is governmental absolutism.

In the State of Michigan today there is pending before the legislature an act providing that if an employer cannot peacefully operate his business in event of a strike that the State shall take over and operate the plant. It is but one step further—and a very short step, indeed—to the confiscation and socialization of all industry in the United States.

The condition in Pennsylvania, the condition in Michigan, the condition in Ohio and in other States point unerringly to this final result:

If the Governor of Pennsylvania, the Governor of Ohio, and the Governor of Michigan are willing to use the armed forces of the Federal or State Government to close industries because the Committee for Industrial Organization pickets threaten bloodshed if those industries are not closed, then we have arrived at the point where in any community, at any time, the leaders of the Committee for Industrial Organization can, without consulting the workers employed in that industry, picket the plant and be assured of the use of State or Federal troops or police to help them make their picketing effective until they secure whatever demands they may make.

Mr. Speaker, there is no middle ground in this situation. It is law or it is lawlessness. It is order or it is disorder. It is right or it is wrong. It is justice or it is injustice. No compromise with lawlessness, disorder, wrong or injustice is possible if this Nation is to survive as a constitutional democracy.

There is no middle ground, I say. There is only one course for the President, for the Governors of the States, for the courts and law-enforcement agencies to follow, and that is a firm and unflinching adherence to the principles of justice and law and order, let the cost be what it may from the standpoint of political expediency.

Let me paint you one last picture:

Not long ago the great Saginaw Valley in the State of Michigan suddenly found itself paralyzed. The wheels of industry stopped. Hospitals went dark with patients on the operating tables under the knife. Elevators stopped between floore. Fire alarms were stilled. Public transportation ceased and people found themselves trapped in high buildings or many weary miles from their homes. Refrigerators in private homes, hotels, restaurants, and markets ceased to function, and thousands of dollars worth of food spoiled. A vast economic loss was imposed upon this great industralized valley of Saginaw, while 192 towns and villages and four great industrial cities remained helpless. And for 24 hours that condition prevailed. Why?

Because a disgruntled group of power company employees, led, it is said, by a boy 22 years of age, pulled the switches in the power-house that furnished the electric energy for the power and light and heat in that great valley. There was no notice. There was no parley. Suddenly the blow fell that paralyzed the valley. Why did these men do that thing?

Why? Because they grew impatient over a few hours' delay in the negotiations at the moment being conducted in Washington by John L. Lewis and other representatives of the Committee for Industrial Organization for the power company employees of the Saginaw Valley.

At the very instant those reckless men pulled the power switches the utilities company had signed a contract satisfactory to John L. Lewis and the Committee for Industrial Organization representatives of the employees of the power company. We then witnessed the spectacle of Committee for Industrial Organization leaders chartering a plane and flying to the Saginaw Valley in order to persuade those irresponsible industrial vandals to put the switches back in contact and release that valley from paralysis.

What explanation did John L. Lewis and his cohorts give for that lawless and despotic act? Their explanation was an attempt to waive that ominous incident aside with the statement that "It was an unfortunate outburst of impatience", and that "It was all a misunderstanding." Was there one word of regret for the economic loss imposed upon the workers and the employers, the householders, and the businessmen of the Saginaw Valley? Not a word.

Was there any assurance that these hotheaded, irresponsible, impatient men would be punished under the law or disciplined by the Committee for Industrial Organization? Not one word. Have they been punished for that lawless act? Not to this good hour. Have they been warned that it is an outrage not to be tolerated to cut off power and put out lights in hospitals, with patients on the operating tables, to cause elevators to stop between floors, to trap people in high buildings, to cause the spoilage of food in thousands of homes and markets? They have not. Does this ominous occurrence tell America anything?

The city of New York could find itself in that critical condition; it might also occur in the city of Chicago or the city of Washington, or in any large city in this country. A small group of reckless and power-drunk men, blinded and deluded by Committee for Industrial Organization propaganda and the dreams of dominating industry, could disrupt the water systems, the sewer systems, power systems, public transportation, communication, the hospitals, industry, and business in general of any city or community upon which they might choose to vent their wrath or display their lawless, despotic power.

Unless I very greatly misjudge my country and my countrymen, this menacing condition will not much longer be tolerated. If the Federal and State and county officials do not prove faithful to their oaths and duty, if this sinister movement is not brought within the bounds of law and order, this country will witness an uprising of its outraged citizens in protection of their industries, their businesses, their employment, and their homes.

And that, Mr. Speaker, will be civil war!

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a list of Committee for Industrial Organization and Steel Workers' Organizing Committee organizers, showing the organization with which they are connected and the places where they are now located.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I just want to ask the gentleman whether or not this list of organizers to which he refers is a complete list?

Mr. COX. It is a complete list as of date when first prepared. At least 50 percent of them are avowed Communists or known to be Communists.

Mr. BOILEAU. When was that list prepared, may I ask the gentleman?

Mr. COX. I am not prepared to give the gentleman the exact date when it was prepared.

Mr. BOILEAU. I should like to have definite assurance before I permit this request to be granted.

Mr. COX. The gentleman will be within the exercise of his right and privilege in objecting. I make the request, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I have reserved the right to object. My only purpose is to identify the list, to know whether or not it is a complete list or whether the gentleman claims it to be a complete list. That is all.

Mr. COX. I do claim it to be a complete list and an accurate list.

Mr. BOILEAU. As of the present time or some time recently?

Mr. COX. June 19, as I recall.

Mr. BOILEAU. Of this year?

Mr. COX. Of this year.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is all I wanted to know.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, about 3 or 4 weeks ago there came about what amounts to a rule in this House that no one could make a speech until after the legislative business had been completed. I do not say that rule is wrong. I do not want to impede legislation, but I just want to bring up the question of the fairness of the rule and how it applies.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] made an attack on the Secretary of Labor the other day, and I have been seeking recognition for several days, but will not get it until Friday. It seems to me we ought to eventually build up some sort of a custom where a few short speeches can be made in the early part of the day. I had reservation of time and could not speak until 7 o'clock. I did not want to insist on that time so late in the day. So I think something should be done so that Members can make at least short statements.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. All we have to do is go back to the time-honored practice of the House of Representatives, that when a man gets permission to address the House he should be given that time to address the House at that hour and let the committees come on afterward. This way of shoving these special orders off until after legislation is disposed of simply amounts to "Cannonizing" the House of Representatives, if you want to know how I feel about it. This practice deprives the Members of the only opportunity they have to come down in the Well of the House and deliver their speeches. I think we ought to go back to the original rule and let the Members speak when they have secured time.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to say that the only way on earth, in my opinion, we can put into effect a program in the House is to do it the way we are doing it. For 2 months after the Congress met, before committees had reported a great many bills, I even announced that on Wednesday or Thursday of next week or Friday of next week there would be no program, and gentlemen could speak. At this late time in the session I am exercising the same right the gentleman from Mississippi has been exercising this afternoon, in objecting to unanimous-consent requests.

I think it is proper, in order to protect the legislative program, to protect these Mondays, these Tuesdays, and these Wednesdays, and the regular business of the House. I started this and I shall continue it until the close of the session.

Mr. MAVERICK. But let me point out, for instance, that the other day the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] got unanimous consent to address the House before the legislative program. It is a fact the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] was out of the room, and I think it was all right for the gentleman from Georgia to do what he did—I would have done the same thing. I am not criticizing the gentleman from Georgia. The result, however, is that when a Member wants to talk, the practice amounts to an effective gag. One of the things that is really wrong about it is that when you get a right to talk on a bill under consideration you get off the subject, just as we are doing now. The practice tends to disturb the relevancy of ordinary debate, and to otherwise gag the Members.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to permit me to make a brief observation?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. COX. While this new rule has operated against me today, to my very bitter disappointment, still I think it is a very sensible practice.

Mr. MAVERICK. Of course the gentleman and I disagree on lots of things, and this is one of them.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Formerly we used to have a week now and then when there was nothing very important brought up. Formerly when appropriation bills were brought up we used to have 3, 4, 5, or 6 days of general debate. Now when a week comes along with nothing particular to do we jam through an appropriation bill in a few hours and no one has any opportunity to talk. In former years, too, of course, we used to work on Saturdays. I think this is a situation that needs to be corrected.

Mr. MAVERICK. I just want to present that thought to the House as something that ought possibly to be changed. The expression of opinion pro and con on any subject is one of the most important functions of the House, whether it concerns actual legislation or not. The present situation should be corrected.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OMAHA-COUNCIL BLUFFS MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2156) to amend the act relating to the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, approved June 10, 1930, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the time for completing the construction of the bridge at or near Farnam Street, authorized under the provisions of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of certain bridges and to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of other bridges over the navigable waters of the United States", approved June 10, 1930, as extended, is hereby further extended 1 year from June 10, 1938. It is hereby recognized that construction has been heretofore commenced under the provisions of section 3 of said act as extended, and said bridge may be constructed at any point, providing the west end of said bridge is within 2,000 feet of the center line of said Farnam Street, irrespective of the site of the commencement hereby recognized, subject to the approval of the War Department and the approval of either of the highway departments of the States of Iowa or Nebraska, all in accordance with and subject to the provisions of said act approved June 10, 1930, as extended, and as amended by this act.

SEC. 2. Any bridge constructed or to be constructed or owned and operated by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees under said act of 1930, as herein amended, shall be deemed a Federal instrumentality for facilitating interstate commerce, improving the postal service, and providing for military and other governmental purposes.

SEC. 3. That in addition to the powers granted by said act of 1930, said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees may acquire and purchase and thereafter operate any other bridge or bridges (including approaches) over the Missouri River, which (including approaches) abuts upon or enters into the corporate limits of either or both the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, all in the manner provided by this act and said act of 1930, it being contemplated that all bridges owned and operated by said board will be so financed that the obligations incurred will be amortized and the travel over such bridge or bridges will be made free of tolls at the same time. It shall be obligatory upon said board that all toll revenues after paying the reasonable and proper charges of operation and maintenance and the accruing interest on the outstanding indebtedness be applied to the retirement of such indebtedness. The rate or rates of toll for crossing any bridge now or hereafter constructed which abuts upon or enters into the present corporate limits of both the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, shall not be reduced below the rate or rates now in effect on existing bridges so long as any indebtedness of said board for the account of any bridge or bridges shall be outstanding and unpaid. To pay the cost of any such bridge or bridges so purchased the board may either separately, or in conjunction with the financing of any other bridge, issue bonds as provided in said act of 1930 as herein amended: Provided, That said board shall operate each of the bridges under its control and charge and collect such rates of toll for transit over same as will not reflect upon or impair the earnings of any other bridge operated by said board, or of which the construction was financed in whole or in part by a loan and a grant from the United States of America, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, to such extent as to adversely effect any outstanding bonds which may have been issued for account of such other bridge: Provided further, That the power granted in this section with respect to the acquisition and purchase of any other bridge shall not be exercised by said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Board of Trustees until all terms of the proposed acquisition and purchase of any such bridge shall have been approved by the highway departments of the States of Iowa and Nebraska. The construction of no competing bridge shall hereafter be authorized, the operation of which will adversely affect such outstanding bonds, unless provision is otherwise made for the payment thereof: Provided further, That the rates of toll to be charged for transit over bridges operated by said board shall at all times be subject to regulation by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. That either the State of Nebraska and the State of Iowa, separately or jointly, or the cities of Omaha and Council Bluffs, separately or jointly, or the counties of Douglas, Nebr., and Pottawattamie, Iowa, separately or jointly, may at any time acquire and take over all right, title, and interest in all of the bridges, including approaches, and including any interest in real property necessary therefor, then owned and operated by said board. It shall not be necessary to condemn or expropriate such property, but the said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, its legal representatives and assigns, shall deliver same by proper instrument of conveyance; and no damages or compensation whatsoever shall be allowed for any such right, title, and interest, but such conveyance shall be made and taken subject to the bonds, debentures, or other instruments of indebtedness of said board, then outstanding, including accrued interest thereon. Such instrument of conveyance shall be executed and delivered within a period of 30 days after a written notice of such intention to take over such property.

SEC. 5. That in addition to the powers granted by said act of 1930, as extended, said the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees, its legal representatives and assigns, are hereby granted power and authority to acquire, condemn, occupy and possess and use real estate and other property acquired for or devoted to a public use for park or other purposes by the State of Nebraska or the State of Iowa, or any governmental or political subdivision thereof, or any person or corporation which real estate or other property may be required for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches and highways leading thereto, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 6. Said bridge may be constructed with the aid of any Federal funds appropriated and apportioned to the States of Iowa and Nebraska, or either of them, for expenditure under the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented, and the limitations of such act, as amended and supplemented, relating to the construction of toll bridges with Federal funds, and the use of tolls controlled for transit over bridges so constructed and operated shall not be applicable to the tolls authorized to be charged under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. BURKE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what changes, if any, the report makes in the bill as passed by the Senate?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, there was necessity for compromise on some amendments. The Senator from Idaho will recall that one of the principal increases made by the Senate was in the appropriation for the Natchez Trace in Tennessee, Alabama, and Mississippi. The Senate authorized an appropriation of $2,700,000. The conferees compromised on an appropriation of $1,500,000.

The Senate conferees were successful in obtaining the increases provided for surveying the public lands under the General Land Office but could not persuade the House to allow the Senate increase for topographic mapping, which was for some $350,000. The reclamation items which the Senate put in the bill remain practically the same.

The Senate increased the appropriation for investigation of the Colorado River drainage by $100,000, to which the House would not agree.

The Senate adopted an amendment appropriating $300,000 for general reclamation investigations. The House agreed to $200,000 for that item.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what occurred to the vocational-education amendment, the appropriation for which, as I recall, was increased by the Senate?

Mr. HAYDEN. That item was not in conference. By a vote of the Senate, the Senate concurred in the House provision.

Mr. McNARY. Was the Hayden amendment accepted by the House?

Mr. HAYDEN. The so-called Hayden amendment was rejected by the Senate and was, therefore, not in conference.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Was the amendment appropriating the unexpended balances for reclamation projects retained in the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; that was agreed to by the House.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the Senator recall a little amendment that was offered by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes, I do; and the Senate conferees labored with the House conferees to secure its retention in the bill. The House conferees, however, insisted that the provision would not apply because it attempted to affect another bill in the current year, whereas the proposal as originally adopted by the House related to the unexpended balances from prior years.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true, and that was the reason the Senator from Texas offered the amendment. If it were not designed to have any effect, I do not think I would have offered it. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona what the conclusion of the conferees is with respect to whether or not those allocations may be made now out of the new fund and allotted to reclamation surveys for carrying on projects which were formerly carried on?

Mr. HAYDEN. The understanding the House conferees had and which they insisted upon was that all provisions of the law are carried over by the legislation in the bill. Any authority heretofore possessed with respect to the fund continues to apply to the unexpended balances which the bill directs and authorizes to be carried over into the next fiscal year.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is that true of the new fund granted by the relief bill of $1,500,000,000?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is not the understanding of anyone that those funds will be available except for work-relief projects, and it was so stated specifically in the relief measure; so that an allotment for public-works purposes could not be made out of the relief bill, as has been done on other occasions.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Arizona says that is the conclusion of the House conferees. What is the conclusion of the Senate conferees?

Mr. HAYDEN. We had to agree with them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it the view of the Senate conferees that the amounts are available and will continue to be available?

Mr. HAYDEN. Undoubtedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CERTAIN OPERATIONS OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT UNPROVIDED FOR JULY 1, 1937

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 7726) making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations. The urgency of the bill has been explained to the leader on the other side of the Chamber, and I think there will be no objection. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7726) making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for defraying during the first half of the month of July 1937 all expenses of the necessary operations of the Federal Government, which, on July 1, 1937, remain unprovided with appropriations through the failure of enactment on or before such date of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations, there are hereby extended for and during such period all appropriations available for obligation for such expenses during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, in the same detail and under the same conditions, restrictions, and limitations as such appropriations were provided for on account of such fiscal year.

SEC. 2. To make effective the appropriations extended by section 1, there are hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and out of certain revenues, receipts, and funds, respectively, as such appropriations available for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, were appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such first half of the month of July 1937.

SEC. 3. No greater amount shall be expended out of any appropriation provided by this act than an amount equal to one twenty-fourth of the appropriation available for like purposes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937.

SEC. 4. The total expenditures for the entire fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, out of the appropriations made by this act and the appropriations in the several pending supply bills shall not exceed in the aggregate the amounts finally appropriated, respectively, in such pending supply bills when they shall have been enacted into law.

SEC. 5. This act shall not be construed as authorizing the duplication of any special expenditure or providing for the execution of any purpose which was intended to be accomplished only once or done solely for or during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937.

SEC. 6. (a) This act shall not apply to any expenses or operations of the Federal Government the annual appropriations for which for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, have been made on or before July 1, 1937.

(b) On such date or dates subsequently to July 1, 1937, as the several pending supply bills shall, respectively, become law, the appropriations made by this act and applicable to the expenses of operation covered by such pending supply bills shall no longer be available for obligation.

(c) Any appropriations in this act for such first half of the month of July 1937 for any expense of operation for which an appropriation is proposed in, but not finally made by any of, such pending supply bills when the same shall have become law shall cease to be available for obligation on the date upon which the supply bill in which such appropriation was proposed becomes a law; and any expenditure under any such appropriation in this act shall not be included in computing the total of expenditures under section 4 hereof.

SEC. 7. The terms "supply bill" and "supply bills", when used in this act, mean one or more of the regular appropriation bills customarily enacted annually, and for the purposes of this act title II of the War Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937 shall be deemed such a supply bill.

SEC. 8. This act may be cited as the "Extension of Appropriations Act, 1938."

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS, RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACCOUNT, ETC.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 433) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, the activities covered by the joint resolution include the Joint Committee on Tax Evasion and Avoidance, the Civilian Conservation Corps, the Railroad Retirement Board, the Department of Agriculture, and the Treasury Department. These are all matters of immediate importance. The Railroad Retirement Board Act has been passed. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I merely desire to ask the Senator if these items are in the same category and status as the items discussed a moment ago in connection with another measure?

Mr. McKELLAR. They are. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asked me to submit this request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 433) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

JOHN H. OVERTON,

CLARENCE CANNON,
D. LANE POWERS,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am about to move the adoption of the report, but before doing so I think an explanation should be made to the Senate. I am sure that the matter which I shall present will be of interest to every Senator, because it has to do with the rights of the Senate regarding appropriation bills.

During the 15 years of my membership in the Senate, and for a long time prior thereto, it has been the custom to embody all appropriations for the Military Establishment in one bill. This year the House, without any reference to or consultation with the Senate, undertook to, and actually did, separate the appropriations and embody them in two bills, one devoted to the strictly military activities—at least that was the intent—and a second to the nonmilitary activities of the Government. As I said the other day, the surgery was not complete, because we find remaining in the bill making appropriations for military activities matters which should have been transferred if the bill making appropriations for nonmilitary activities was to be made a perfect instrument.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations decided to blend the bills and to present them to the Senate as they have been presented through many years. Explanation was made to the Senate, and the Senate, by unanimous vote, decided to accept and act upon the bill in the usual form.

When the bill went to the House it excited some commotion. I find on page 6305 of the RECORD a statement made by the able Representative from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], from which I desire to quote a few words, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Constitution confers upon the House and the Senate, respectively, certain exclusive prerogatives. Among those reserved to the House by the Constitution is the right to originate revenue bills, and from the beginning of the Government the House has asserted and successfully maintained that the right to originate revenue bills also involves the right to initiate general appropriation bills.

Of course, we do not concede and cannot concede that the Constitution confers upon the House any such right to initiate general appropriation bills. One has but to read the Constitution itself, article I, section 7:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

No power is here given to the House to initiate appropriation bills. It is conceded by everybody—it always has been conceded—that revenue bills must originate in the House; but Mr. CANNON takes the position that this language is broad enough to include likewise appropriation bills.

He goes on to say:

That has been the uniform practice—

That is, the right to initiate appropriation bills—and in keeping with that doctrine the House has formulated the general appropriation bills since the establishment of the Government. Of course, the right to originate general appropriation bills necessarily includes the right to determine the form and the manner in which they shall be presented, and from the beginning the number and scope of the various annual supply bills have been determined by the House with the acquiescence of the Senate. Only on one or two rare occasions has this right of the House been questioned, and in each such instance the Senate has promptly disavowed any intention of infringing on the constitutional prerogatives of the House and yielded without contention.

The last instance was in the second session of the Sixty-second Congress and was the occasion for an exhaustive study of the subject by Hon. John Sharp Williams, formerly minority leader of the House and at the time a Member of the Senate, which was published as a Senate document and which so conclusively confirmed the contention of the House that its right to originate the general supply bills and determine their form had not since been challenged until the receipt just now of a message from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has assumed the right to combine the two War Department appropriation bills by attaching the nonmilitary bill to the military bill as an amendment, with the comment on the floor that the action of the House in reporting and passing the bill was "surgery" and "not well performed."

I observe that Mr. MCCORMACK, the able Representative from Massachusetts, said:

It is our duty to respect our rights as one of the two branches of the Congress. If we do not, nobody else will.

Mr. President, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to say that we challenge the contention that it is the exclusive right of the House to determine the form and number of appropriation bills. We state that it is our conviction that we had and have the right to make such changes in the form and number of these bills as may seem to us wise. We are supposed, under our rules and under the Constitution, to have a free conference with the Members of the House. We have not had a free conference on this bill. The House conferees were instructed by the House, on motion of Mr. CANNON, that—

The managers * * * be instructed not to agree to the Senate amendments to such bill nos. 47 to 77, inclusive, and 80, and not to agree to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of such bill.

Mr. President, we had no opportunity for a free conference.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did not the House conferees go beyond the limits of that authority and absolutely refuse even to confer upon the second part of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct; and they were so solicitous that they wanted us to give publicity to their statement that they had refused to give any consideration to title II.

This is a matter of concern to every Member of the Senate. It is of particular concern to every member of the Appropriations Committee and other committees. We have been informed all too frequently in our conferences by the managers on the part of the House that they were not permitted to discuss or consider certain amendments which had been proposed by the Senate. We are just now having the same difficulty in connection with the conference on another bill, in another committee, where we are told that we must not do certain things because the House is definitely determined that it will positively not accept this or that action.

I am not reflecting upon the House or upon any Member of the House. I have often wished that I might have served in the House; but, as a Member of this body, I contend that we have rights, too, which we must stand for on all occasions. We feel, to put it mildly, that we have not been generously treated by the House in this particular matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, we all recognize that while the House has the right to originate revenue bills, the Constitution itself provides that the Senate may amend such bills; and it has always been universally recognized that the Senate has the right to amend appropriation bills. In what regard does this particular amendment differ from any other amendment the Senate might put on an appropriation bill to such an extent as to make it proper for the House to refuse even to consider it?

Mr. COPELAND. I would not concede for a moment that it differs from any other amendment. In the case of the relief joint resolution the Senate added pages of amendments to it, one great group of amendments. We certainly have the right to make amendments; and we were within our rights, as I see it, when we made the amendments to this particular bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. While ordinarily amendments put on these bills by the Senate are given consideration not only by the House but in committee and in conference, what is there about this particular amendmnt which makes it offensive to such an extent that the House would not even consider it? That is what I cannot understand.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, I can hardly answer that question without myself being offensive.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. The question is further complicated by the fact that the amendment to which the Senator is now referring is substantially a House bill. It has passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. COPELAND. That is true. We have hardly deviated from it.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I remember, some changes were made in what is known as the nonmilitary bill by the Senate committee and by the Senate; but the changes were not very notable.

Mr. COPELAND. No; except as to flood control.

Mr. ROBINSON. On the whole, the Senate amendment was a House bill which the House itself had passed sometime ago.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct. We did not ruthlessly override the House in their wishes regarding the nonmilitary parts of the bill. We accepted them largely, almost entirely as they came from the House. The chief difference related to the appropriations for flood control. We knew the intense interest of the Senate in that particular matter, and we desired to make certain, if we could, that the great projects for flood control, reaching from Maine to California, should be carried out; but we did not disregard the thought of the House regarding the great bulk of the bill which is included in title II.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, as it appears to me, the issue involves a new policy with respect to legislating for the military department. The House has adopted a new plan without the concurrence of the Senate, and that involves a matter which might very well be considered by both bodies. It is not a matter for the exclusive determination of either; and, like all questions that arise and become issues between the two Houses, it is to be worked out in conference. So it does seem that the action at the other end of the Capitol was arbitrary, to say the least.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. The whole issue is whether or not the Senate of the United States is a part of the legislative branch of the Government of this country; and it is perfectly absurd for anybody with good common sense who reads the provision of the Constitution on the subject to say that the Senate is not authorized either to originate or to amend appropriation bills.

The Constitution provides that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House. Who will say that a bill to appropriate revenue, to spend revenue, is a bill for raising revenue?

The Senate committee unanimously directed the chairman of the subcommittee now having the floor to serve notice on the House that we did not accept their ridiculous interpretation of the Constitution of the United States on the subject.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, those of us who work in the Appropriations Committee find it to be arduous work. It is entirely possible that the agricultural appropriation bill might be divided into a number of bills. The Department of Commerce bill could be similarly divided. We could multiply these bills and the labor of dealing with them. If it is in the pubic interest to do so, very well; but the Senate has a right to have a part in deciding whether or not that shall be the policy.

I am directed by the Appropriations Committee to serve notice that at some time when there is less pressure upon the Congress, and certainly when there is less need of immediate action regarding appropriation bills, we intend to assert vigorously our rights in the matter; and we say this with all respect to our colleagues at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. President, having said all this, I move that the Senate adopt the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on certain amendments of the Senate to House bill 6692, which was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 30, 1937.

Resolved, That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 5, and 16 to the bill (H. R. 6692) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, and concur therein;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment, after "less", insert "to be used exclusively for runways";

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert:

"For the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, N. Y., as authorized by the act approved March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1491), $431,000; and such sum, in conjunction with the appropriation of $431,000 for a like purpose contained in the War Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937, without regard to the proviso attached to such former appropriation, shall be available until June 30, 1939: Provided, That in addition to the amount herein appropriated the Secretary of War may acquire by condemnation or may enter into contracts for the acquisition of land in the vicinity of West Point, as authorized by such act of March 3, 1931, to an additional amount not in excess of $638,000, and his action in so doing in either case shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government for the payment thereof: Provided further, That authorization is hereby repealed to acquire any land east of the west boundary of the Highway 9–W, or east of the west boundary of the Highway 9–W as it may be relocated by the State of New York prior to the acquisition of any land west of the present west boundary of such Highway 9–W."

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 79 to said bill and concur therein with the following amendment:

In line 1 of the matter inserted by said Senate engrossed amendment strike out "4" and insert "3"; and in the last line of said amendment, after "section", insert: ": Provided further, That at posts isolated from a convenient market the Secretary of War may broaden the nature of the articles to be sold"; and

That the House adhere to its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 47 to 77, inclusive, and 80, and the amendment to the title to said bill.

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 24, 26, and 79.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. I now move that the Senate recede from its amendments still in disagreement, and its amendment to the title of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New York to tell the Senate the status of the military appropriations, and the status of the nonmilitary appropriations. In what condition does this action leave them?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, title I of the Senate bill, which is the military part, has now been agreed to by both Houses, and on my motion, just made, we receded from the amendments which covered the nonmilitary appropriations.

I now wish to present to the Senate for immediate action House bill 7493, as amended by the Senate committee and by the Senate to cover the nonmilitary item, so that the House will be in the position of having two bills, as it desires.

Mr. ROBINSON. In other words, that puts the Senate in the position of completely yielding to the House?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to add that I do not understand that any question as to the right to originate appropriation bills is involved in the controversy over the nonmilitary appropriations. As I pointed out sometime ago, the House passed that amendment in the form of a separate bill, and the Senate merely exercised its right to amend the provisions.

There is nothing in the Constitution, as was said by the Senator from Virginia, which gives either body the exclusive right to originate appropriation bills. General appropriations, by common practice, have usually, if not always heretofore, originated in the body at the other end of the Capitol. But certainly a bill to spend money is not a bill to "raise revenues." The idea is inconsistent with any sound theory that the provision in the Constitution requiring bills for raising revenue to originate in the House could be extended to cover bills to authorize the expenditure of money. Neither in law nor in reason could such a construction be placed on the constitutional provision. However, there has existed the practice of originating general appropriation bills in the House of Representatives. I have no objection to continuing that practice. What I object to is the arbitrary and apparently unreasonable procedure on the part of another body by which it would deny the Senate the admitted right, which it has always exercised, of amending appropriation bills.

The question of the change in policy is one which is of interest and importance to both bodies and to the country. There may be good reason for adopting a new policy of passing two bills instead of one in relation to the military expenditures, but what I maintain is that that is not for the exclusive determination of either body. It is to be decided in the same way in which other questions at issue are decided, namely, in conference.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. AUSTIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Alabama to yield the floor.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yielded to the Senator from New York with the understanding that he desired to take up a conference report. That was done, and the conference report was agreed to. Now I understand he is presenting an original bill from the House of Representatives. I do not think the Senator ought to press that bill at this time.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not see how it could take much, if any, time, because it is simply a reenactment of what we have already done.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it does not lead to debate, I will yield.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS OF WAR DEPARTMENT

Mr. COPELAND. I appreciate very greatly the courtesy of the Senator from Alabama.

From the Committee on Appropriations I now report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 838) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is practically in the form in which the bill came from the House, with the amendments which the Senate previously agreed to. It is practically identical with the language of the amendment which the Senate adopted as title 2 of the first bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not intend to object, but I wish to make a brief statement. The action of the Senate in respect of separating the two parts of this bill must be understood to be without prejudice on the question of a conference between the two Houses. We have never in our conferences upon this matter assented to the claims made by the House, but have persistently denied them. This is an act of expediency only, and we prefer to meet the issues directly as soon as the opportunity shall be given to challenge the attempt of the House to deny a free conference, which was denied in this case. I think the RECORD should show that by no means do we admit the claim of the House.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the parliamentary status, as I understand, is that the Senator from Alabama has had his bill, the farm tenancy bill, made the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true.

Mr. McNARY. And the Senator from New York asked unanimous consent to have considered one of the War Department appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. McNARY. I did not understand that to be the request. I was wondering whether it was an attempt to supersede the unfinished business or to temporarily lay it aside.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to temporarily lay it aside, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Alabama and to move that all the parts of the bill, as now presented, which have been acted upon by the Senate, be reapproved, and that two or three very minor amendments may be stated by the clerk.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not intend to prolong the discussion. I rise merely to say that I agree with every word the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has conservatively said, except that I would have said it in a more radical way. As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the United States Senate I do not intend to have any conference hereafter with House committees that may decide to refuse to consider anything the Senate does. I serve notice on them that hereafter we will refuse to have a conference that is not a free conference.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning there was an interesting discussion about the right of the Senate to initiate appropriation bills. In connection with the debate reference was made to an article presented in this body by the late Senator John Sharp Williams on the 15th of July 1912. The article was printed as a Senate document, and as the document is rare I ask unanimous consent that it be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Of course, it is presumptuous for me to say it, but I make this request with a feeling that Senator Williams was mistaken in his conclusion. Nevertheless, I assume that the debate may be read by someone, and reference having been made to this matter, and its importance urged, I feel that the record should be complete.

There being no objection, the document was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SUPPLY BILLS

(By Hon. John Sharp Williams, concerning the constitutional power of the House of Representatives to originate supply bills)

[From Elliot's Proceedings]

Among the resolutions offered by Mr. Edmund Randolph to the Convention, May 29, 1787, I find the following:

"Resolved, That each branch ought to possess the right of originating acts; that the National Legislature ought to be empowered to enjoy the legislative right vested in Congress by the confederation; and, moreover, to legislate in all cases to which the separate States are incompetent, or in which the harmony of the United States may be interrupted by the exercise of individual legislation; to negative all laws passed by the several States, contravening, in the opinion of the National Legislature, the articles of union, or any treaty subsisting under the authority of the Union; and to call forth the force of the Union against any member of the Union failing to fulfill its duty under the articles thereof."

From Mr. Charles Pinckney's Draft of a Federal Government, I quote the following:

"All money bills of every kind shall originate in the House of Delegates and shall not be altered by the Senate." [Italics mine.]

Thursday, July 5, 1787. "The committee to whom were referred the eighth resolution reported from the Committee of the Whole House, and so much of the seventh as hath not been decided on", submitted a report, from which I quote the following:

"That all bills for raising or appropriating money, and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government of the United States, shall originate in the first branch of the legislature and shall not be altered or amended by the second branch." [Italics mine.]

On the question as to whether this clause should stand as a part of the report, it passed in the affirmative.

On Monday, July 16, 1787, the question being taken on the whole of the report from the grand committee as amended, it passed in the affirmative. From the report, as passed, I quote the following:

"Resolved, That all bills for raising or appropriating money, and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government of the United States, shall originate in the first branch of the Legislature of the United States and shall not be altered or amended by the second branch." [Italics mine.]

From the resolutions of the Convention, referred on the 23d and 26th of July to a committee of detail (Messrs. Rutledge, Randolph, Gorham, Ellsworth, and Wilson) for the purpose of reporting a Constitution, I quote the following:

"X. Resolved, That all bills for raising or appropriating money, and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government of the United States, shall originate in the first branch of the Legislature of the United States and shall not be altered or amended by the second branch." [Italics again mine.]

From the draft of the Constitution, reported by the committee of five, August 6, 1787, I quote as follows:

"SEC. 5. All bills for raising or appropriating money, and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government, shall originate in the House of Representatives and shall not be altered or amended by the Senate. No money shall be drawn from the Public Treasury but in pursuance of appropriations that shall originate in the House of Representatives." [Italics again mine.]

On Monday, August 13, 1787, it was moved by Mr. Randolph, and seconded, to amend the fifth section of the fourth article to read as follows, namely:

"All bills for raising money for the purposes of revenue or for appropriating the same shall originate in the House of Representatives and shall not be altered by the Senate, etc."

Note here it is: "Raising money for the purposes of revenue." Distinction between "raising money" and raising "revenue."

The question was taken on the first clause of this amendment, which passed in the negative.

On Wednesday, August 15, 1787, it was moved and seconded to amend the twelfth section of the sixth article, as follows:

"Each House shall possess the right of originating all bills, except bills for raising money for the purposes of revenue, or for appropriating the same, and for fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government, which shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as in other cases."

It was moved and seconded to postpone the consideration of the last amendment, which was passed in the affirmative.

Yeas: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia—6. Nays: Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland—5.

Note: The small States in the negative.

On Saturday, September 8, 1787, it was moved and seconded to amend the third clause of the report, entered on the journal of the 5th instant, to read as follows, instead of the twelfth section, sixth article:

"All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations by law."

Which passed in the affirmative.

No discussion. Evidently nobody thought that it made a difference from previous drafts. Why? Because the phrase "raising revenue" was equivalent to the phrase "raising money and appropriating the same."

Ayes: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia—9. Nays: Delaware, Maryland—2.

This time only the two smallest States vote "nay", they still sticking for their branch of the National Legislature—the Senate—to have right to originate.

It was moved and seconded to appoint a committee of five "to revise the style of, and arrange" the articles agreed to by the House which passed in the affirmative.

Note what I have italicized in the foregoing sentence.

September 12, 1787. From a revised draft of the Constitution, reported September 12, 1787, by the committee of revision of style, I quote the following from section 7:

"All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills."

As reported by the committee appointed on September 8 to revise the style. No discussion.

Seems still evident that to "raise revenue" meant to raise money and appropriate it.

[From Yate's Minutes]

On Tuesday, July 3, 1787, the grand committee met. From a motion of Dr. Franklin, which, after some modification, was agreed to, and made the basis of a report to the committee, I quote the following:

"That bills for raising or appropriating money and for fixing salaries of the officers of the Government of the United States shall originate in the first branch of the legislature, and shall not be altered or amended by the second branch; and that no money shall be drawn from the Public Treasury but in pursuance of appropriations to be originated in the first branch."

This is the history of the clause up to its report by the Committee on Revision and Style and Arrangement and its adoption by the convention. Meager, but, to my mind, conclusive.

In the consideration of the adoption of the Constitution by the several States in their conventions I find nothing in the discussions in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, New York, Pennsylvania, or Maryland which is significant, unless it be because the absence of discussion shows that they notice no variance between the provisions of the Constitution and the several provisions of the several States requiring money or supply bills to originate in the lower houses. When I come to the proceedings of the State of Virginia, however, I find that Mr. Madison, in his argument in advocacy of the adoption of the constitution of the Virginia convention, uses the following language:

"Mr. Chairman, the criticism made by the honorable Member is that there is an ambiguity in the words, and that it is not clearly ascertained where the origination of money bills may take place. I suppose the first part of the clause is sufficiently expressed to exclude all doubts. The gentlemen who composed the convention divided in opinion concerning the utility of confining this to any particular branch. Whatever it may be in Great Britain, there is sufficient difference between us and them to render it inapplicable to this country. It has always appeared to me to be a matter of no great consequence whether the Senate had a right of originating or proposing amendments to money bills or not. To withhold it from them would create a disagreeable dispute. Some American constitutions make no difference. Virginia and South Carolina are, I think, the only States where this power is restrained. In Massachusetts and other States the power of proposing amendments is vested unquestionably in their senates. No inconvenience has resulted from it. On the contrary, with respect to South Carolina, this clause is continually a source of dispute. When a bill comes from the other house the senate entirely rejects it, and this causes contentions. When you send a bill to the senate without the power of making any alteration, you force them to reject the bill altogether when it would be necessary and advantageous that it should pass.

The power of proposing alterations removes this inconvenience, and does not appear to me at all objectionable. I should have no objection to their having a right of originating such bills. * * * There is no landmark or constitutional provision in Great Britain which prohibits the House of Lords from intermeddling with money bills; but the House of Commons have established this rule. Let the lords insist on their having a right to originate them, as they possess great property, as well as the commons, and are taxed like them. The House of Commons object to their claim, lest they should too lavishly make grants to the Crown and increase the taxes. * * * When a bill is sent with proposed amendments to the House of Representatives, if they find the alterations defective, they are not conclusive. The House of Representatives are the judges of their propriety, and the recommendation of the Senate is nothing.

Mr. Madison here uses the words "money bills" as synonymous with "bills to raise revenue." Power to originate important, lest upper House be "too lavish in their grants." Says House of Representatives are "the judges of the propriety of money bills, and the recommendation of the Senate is nothing."

Mr. Grayson, arguing upon the other side, made use of the following language:

"The Senate could strike out every word of the bill, except the word 'whereas', or any other introductory word, and might substitute new words of their own."

Friday, July 25, 1788. In the North Carolina convention I find that Mr. Iredell, arguing in favor of the adoption of the Constitution, urged this clause specially on the ground that the "House of Representatives would be more numerous than the Senate"; that "they will represent the immediate interests of the people, etc.", showing that Mr. Iredell regarded the phrase "money bills" as synonymous with the phrase "bills to raise revenue." I find further on that Mr. Iredell, in another speech to the same convention, identifies the right given to the House of Representatives with that already enjoyed by the House of Commons in Great Britain, as is shown by the following quotation of his language:

"Yet the Commons have generally been able to carry everything before them. The circumstances of their representing the great body of the people alone gives them great weight. This weight has great authority added to it by their possessing the right (a right given to the people's representatives in Congress) of exclusively originating money bills."

Note the significance of the parenthesis above.

He continues:

"The authority over money will do everything. A government cannot be supported without money. Our Representatives may at any time compel the Senate to agree to a reasonable measure by withholding supplies till the measure is consented to. There was a great debate in the convention whether the Senate should have an equal power of originating money bills. It was strongly insisted by some that it should; but at length a majority thought it unadvisable, and the clause was passed as it now stands. I have reason to believe that our Representatives had a great share in establishing this excellent regulation, and in my opinion they deserve the public thanks for it."

And still later, in reenforcing the same contention, he uses the following language:

"It is contended by that gentleman that the addition of the power of making treaties to the other powers will make the Senate dangerous; that they would be even dangerous to the representatives of the people. The gentleman has not proved this in theory. Whence will he adduce an example to prove it? What passes in England directly disproves his assertion. In that country the representatives of the people are chosen under undue influence—frequently by direct bribery and corruption. They are elected for 7 years, and many of the members hold offices under the Crown—some during pleasure, others for life. They are also not a genuine representation of the people, but, from a change of circumstances, a mere shadow of it. Yet under these disadvantages, they having the sole power of originating money bills, it has been found that the power of the King and lords is much less considerable than theirs. The high prerogatives of the King and the great power and wealth of the lords have been more than once mentioned in the course of the debates. If under such circumstances such representatives—mere shadows of representatives—by having the power of the purse and the sacred name of the people to rely upon are an overmatch for the King and lords, who have such great hereditary qualifications, we may safely conclude that our own representatives, who will be a genuine representation of the people, and having equally the right of originating money bills, will at least be a match for the Senate, possessing qualifications so inferior to those of the House of Lords in England."

In the House of Representatives, March 2, 1797, Mr. Nicholas said:

"The power of this House to control appropriations has been settled. It was indeed an absurdity to call a body a legislature and at the same time deny them a control over the public purse. If it were not so, where would be the use of going through the forms of that House with a money bill? The Executive might as well draw upon the Treasury at once for whatever sum he might stand in need of. A doctrine like this would be scouted even in despotic countries.

"Note: When he says 'that House' he means the House of Representatives, referring back with his relative to his first sentence."

In the Federalist, that great book whose articles were written by Hamilton, Madison, and Jay—in no. 57 of the Federalist, published in the New York Packet on Friday, February 22, 1788—I find language which I shall quote at large, a part of which I have put in italics as an easy way of bringing it to the attention of the reader. This article, in my opinion, judging by the style of it, was written by Alexander Hamilton. It is more interesting than Jay's style and less diffuse than Mr. Madison's. Next to Mr. Madison himself, Mr. Hamilton perhaps knew better what the Constitutional Convention intended than almost any other one man.

Although in some of the editions of the Federalist this number is attributed to Mr. Madison and in some others to Mr. Hamilton, in a majority of the sources of information, as far as I had time to run it down, the number is attributed to Mr. Madison; but in my opinion, as I said above, the better authority is that Hamilton wrote it, and the style is that of Alexander Hamilton.

I quote from the article as follows:

"These considerations seem to afford ample security on this subject, and ought alone to satisfy all the doubts and fears which have been indulged with regard to it. Admitting, however, that they should all be insufficient to subdue the unjust policy of the smaller States, or their predominant influence in the councils of the Senate, a constitutional and infallible resource still remains with the larger States, by which they will be able at all times to accomplish their just purposes. The House of Representatives cannot only refuse, but they alone can propose, the supplies requisite for the support of the Government. They, in a word, hold the purse; that powerful instrument by which we behold, in the history of the British Constitution, an infant and humble representation of the people gradually enlarging the sphere of its activity and importance, and finally reducing, as far as it seems to have wished, all the overgrown prerogatives of the other branches of the Government. This power over the purse may, in fact, be regarded as the most complete and effectual weapon with which any constitution can arm the immediate representatives of the people for obtaining a redress of every grievance and for carrying into effect every just and salutary measure.

"But will not the House of Representatives be as much interested as the Senate in maintaining the Government in its proper functions; and will they not, therefore, be unwilling to stake its existence or its reputation on the pliancy of the Senate? Or if such a trial of firmness between the two branches were hazarded, would not the one be as likely first to yield as the other? These questions will create no difficulty with those who reflect that in all cases the smaller the number and the more permanent and conspicuous the station of men in power the stronger must be the interest which they will individually feel in whatever concerns the Government. Those who represent the dignity of their country in the eyes of other nations will be particularly sensible to every prospect of public danger, or of a dishonorable stagnation in public affairs. To those causes we are to ascribe the continual triumph of the British House of Commons over the other branches of the Government whenever the engine of a money bill has been employed. An absolute inflexibility on the side of the latter, although it could not have failed to involve every department of the State in the general confusion, has neither been apprehended nor experienced. The utmost degree of firmness that can be displayed by the Federal Senate or President will not be more than equal to a resistance, in which they will be supported by constitutional and patriotic principles."

You will note that his language is that the "House of Representatives cannot only refuse but they alone can propose the supplies requisite for the support of the Government." He adds, "They, in a word, hold the purse, etc." This demonstrates beyond challenge that in the mind of Mr. Hamilton the phrase "bills to raise revenue" was synonymous with the old English phrase, "supply bills", or, what we call in American phraseology now, "general appropriation bills", as contradistinguished from "special appropriation bills"; that is to say, appropriations for the Army and Navy, executive, legislative, and judicial departments.

Gentlemen have contended that while the practice of the Government was in accordance with my contention, that practice was not founded upon any constitutional warrant. I place against their opinion the opinions of Hamilton and of Madison and of Iredell and of Nicholas (all, if I mistake not, members of the Constitutional Convention), but above all, I place the fact that when the committee on the revision of style reported the present phraseology that it excited no remark and no discussion, which is self-evident proof of the fact that in the opinion of the members of the Constitutional Convention it was a mere change of style or expression and not a change of substance, and that what was meant in their minds by the phrase "bills to raise revenue" was the same thing as is meant by the phrase "bills to raise money and to appropriate the same", or by the phrase "money bills", or by the phrase "supply bills", all of which, in their minds at that time, were synonymous.

Mr. Madison, than whom no man was better acquainted with the Constitution, in the Virginia Convention, constantly uses the words "money bills" and "supply bills" when talking about this clause and the power given the House by it.

Mr. Hamilton uses the words "supplies requisite for the support of the Government."

The confusion of those who, in subsequent generations have raised this question—and it is to be remembered that nobody in the generation of the framers of the Constitution did raise it or did try to make the distinction—grows out of their not understanding that a "bill to raise revenue" means a bill to raise revenue for the supply of the executive branch of the Government. There are two sorts of bills for raising revenue for the Government, or, as the English called it, "for carrying on His Majesty's Government." One was by appropriating money already in the Treasury. In this case the money had been raised, but it had not been made Government revenue and could not be made "revenue" to be disbursed by the executive branch until the legislative branch had appropriated it. When there was no money in the Treasury, then the money had to be "raised" through a bill to appropriate money and a bill to levy taxes, but it did not become "revenue" for the purpose of disbursement by the executive branch solely with the passage of a bill to levy taxes, nor solely with the passage of a bill to issue bonds, but there was need yet to appropriate the money. The further act necessary to make it revenue for the disbursement of the executive branch was an appropriation, put money at the disposal of the executive branch except by not only a tax in the technical sense in which that phrase was used in the Constitution. There is no such thing as having the legislative branch put money at the disposal of the executive branch except by not only raising the money but by appropriating the same, and raising money and appropriating the same, both taken together, constitute "raising revenue" for the Government.

Even "money in the Treasury" is not a Government "revenue" until rendered disbursable by an appropriation of the money out of the Treasury.

If there were a billion of dollars in the Treasury it would not be revenue for carrying on the Government—revenue of the Government, revenue in a governmental or constitutional sense—until it had been appropriated, and as the House alone can originate a bill "to raise revenue", it alone can originate a bill to transmute money in the Treasury into revenue.

Revenue—Government revenue—is money in the Treasury rendered available to the Executive for expenditure for "carrying on the Government" by an appropriation.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says that "not a week passes that we do not originate appropriation bills in the Senate"; that we originate them on claims, on public buildings, and so forth. I had never contended, and do not now contend, that the power of the House to originate goes beyond origination of general "supply bills" for the carrying on of the Government, or, as it was called in England, carrying on His Majesty's or Her Majesty's Government—what were called in England and by Hamilton, Madison, and their contemporaries "money bills." As to special appropriations for many purposes, even the House of Commons in England never claimed exclusive power over them. The Senator adds: "There is, in my opinion, nothing in the Constitution that can be twisted into any such limitation"—that is, a limitation of the power to originate "supply bills" in the House. In this the Senator differs from Mr. Hamilton; he differs from Mr. Madison; he differs from the first Congress that ever met; and he differs, in my opinion, because he has not truly understood the meaning of the phrase "to raise revenue." To raise revenue for what? Why, evidently for disbursement by the Government. To be disbursed by whom? Why, evidently by the Executive. To be appropriated by whom? Evidently by the legislative. Not a dollar in the Treasury can become revenue for carrying on the Government except after two things have been done: First, having the money placed there; and as long as it is there without an appropriation by Congress it is not revenue; it is merely money, because the Constitution provides that no money shall be taken out of the Treasury except in pursuance of an act of Congress. Secondly, after being put at the disposal of the Executive for expenditure by appropriation out of the Treasury, then and then only has the money changed its character and become revenue—i. e., money for Executive disbursement by direction of law. As long as it is in the Treasury without appropriation it is inert, dead, and cannot be used; it is not governmental revenue; it is not at the behest of the Executive for disbursement. A "bill to raise revenue" is a bill to turn money into an active instrumentality for carrying on the Government.

In 1871 the House adopted a resolution taking exceptions to a Senate bill which repealed the income tax. The Senate asserted the right to originate bills repealing a tax. Roscoe Conkling, as a Senate conferee, contended for the right. The House conferees refused to assent to the position of the Senate, and pointed out that not only "the right to originate tax and tariff bills, but also appropriation bills" was "conceded to the House of Representatives without dispute until the year 1832, when the right of repealing duties was unsuccessfully asserted by the Senate, and again in 1833 the same thing was attempted, but without success."

You will note that the Senate never until then ever asserted any right over general appropriation bills. The resolution recommended by the House conferees was adopted by the House after debate.

Senator Hoar quotes Mr. Webster, who certainly was a very fine constitutional lawyer, as saying: "Whatever the Senate might think, the House is the sole constitutional judge of the extent, meaning, and scope of that constitutional provision", to wit: The constitutional provision to originate revenue bills. Senator Hoar adds: "Mr. Webster was clearly right."

A very clear discussion of this will be found on page 161 of Mr. McCall's The Business of Congress. Mr. McCall adds:

"In practice, the general appropriation bills are now in a sense treated as money bills, and their formation as well as the formation of those relating to taxation is given over to the House."

I admit that the House has sometimes been lax in this assertion of its right, but whenever the matter has been narrowed down to a crisis and discussed, the House has always maintained its right, and the Senate has always acquiesced in it. It is idleness to say that this assertion and maintenance and this acquiescence would have taken place without constitutional authority.

Senator Hoar well said:

"By a practice as old as the Government itself the constitutional prerogative of the House has been held to apply to all the general appropriation bills."

Reference is directed here to an article entitled "Conduct of Business in Congress", published in the North American Review, CXXVII, page 113.

In this connection it is pertinent to inquire that, if I be not right about all this, why is it that the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates for appropriations for the fiscal year, is invariably sent to the House and not to the Senate? Why is it not sent to the Senate in the first place, or why not at the same time? Why not addressed to Congress or both Houses? It is sent to the House immediately after the House convenes and is referred to the House Committee on Appropriations. This has been the uniform custom ever since the First Congress met.

Prof. Woodrow Wilson says that the Constitution is silent as to the origination of bills appropriating money. This statement is not correct. The statement begs the question. What are "bills for raising revenue" except bills to make money mobile as a governmental instrumentality—as revenue? Every supply bill is a money bill. Every money bill is a bill to raise revenue. The "revenue" is not "raised" until the appropriation of the money is directed. Raised for what? With us, "to carry on the Government"; in England, "to carry on His Majesty's Government." Who pays out the money to carry on the Government? Why, the Executive, of course. Who raises or provides or supplies the money for the Executive to pay out or to disburse? Why, the legislative branch, equally, of course. Who pays your salary or mine? Why, the Executive. And how? By an order upon the Treasury. And in consequence of what? In consequence of an appropriation bill, rendering inert, dead money active, live Government revenue. You and I are paid by a warrant on the Treasury. We cannot pay our own salaries directly to ourselves by ourselves. How is the Executive warranted to give the warrant? Why, by an act of Congress, of course. What is this act? Why, it is a bill to raise supplies—to raise revenue for carrying on the Government. The revenue is not raised for Executive capacity to pay out, and, therefore, not raised as governmental revenue as an instrumentality in the disbursement whereof the Government is carried on until appropriated by Congress and the purpose of the appropriation designated in an act of Congress. How is revenue raised? I answer, in two ways. What are they? If the money be already in the exchequer or the Treasury here, it is raised for a designated purpose by its appropriation; and if there be no money in the Treasury, then it is raised by levying a tax and at the same time or afterward appropriating the proceeds of it—by tax bills and appropriation bills.

Much of the confusion has grown out of forgetting that in the early history of the country, tax bills and appropriation bills, the conjoint purpose of the two being to raise Government revenue, were provided for in the same act. The Ways and Means Committee of the House levied a tax and at the same time appropriated the tax in one act, which constituted a budget. Later on, when the magnitude of our governmental machinery began to assert itself, the work was divided. Tax bills were left to the Committee on Ways and Means, and bills appropriating the proceeds of taxes were left to a new committee called the Committee on Appropriations. It was not until after this division of labor occurred that any confusion in public thought ever occurred.

Levying a tax and appropriating the money thus raised are two parts of the same act, the object of both of which is to "raise revenue" for carrying on the Government. If you appropriate when there is no money in the Treasury, the Government will not have any revenue. If you levy and collect a tax, but do not appropriate, the Government will still have no revenue. In one and the same bill, or else in two different bills, you must do the two things which are parts of the same act: First, put money in the Treasury; secondly, turn the money into Government revenue by appropriating it.

Henry Jones Ford in his book the Cost of Our National Government (p. 11) says, very properly: "It is a fundamental principle of constitutional government that appropriations are made and expenditures are controlled by the representatives of the people." He adds that "the process of budget making starts with the transmission of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, giving estimates of appropriations required for the public service"; and "congressional action on the estimates thus transferred begins in the House of Representatives." (See ibid., p. 14.)

This is a significant recognition of the principle by the practice of the executive department. In fact, throughout our whole history the House has asserted, the Executive has practiced, and the Senate has acquiesced by practice in the general principle—a principle and practice founded on the real and historic meaning of the phrase "bills to raise revenue"—a meaning contemporaneous with the Constitution.

I quote from the same author (p. 23): "We began our National Government with a firm and precise principle of budget control, namely, that the House of Representatives held the purse strings. It was the expectation of the framers of the Constitution that the immediate representatives of the people would control the Budget and fix expenditures."

In no. 57 of the Federalist support was given to this position.

I call the reader's attention to CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 16, part 2, page 949 et seq., being the RECORD of the Forty-eighth Congress, second session. Representative Hammond (p. 952), in his reply to what I have called attention to, confuses special appropriations, which are not supply bills, with general appropriations, which are and have always been so treated, both in England and here; and here, as Senator Hoar says, "even from the very origin of the Government."

Mr. Hammond likewise confuses the phrase "raising revenue" and the phrase "raising money." Before the Committee on Style changed the verbiage proposed in the Constitutional Convention it read "bills to raise money and make appropriation of the same." The language "bills to raise revenue" was substituted and, as far as I can find out, without debate or opposition of any description, showing that the men who had voted for the former phraseology thought that the latter meant the same thing; that is, that a "bill to raise revenue" involved the ideas of "raising money" and appropriating the same.

Raising money, or putting money into the Treasury, is one thing. Making out of money Government revenue is another thing. The money is raised, or collected, or gotten when by operation of a tax bill it is covered into the Treasury, but it does not thereupon become revenue. The executive, which alone disburses revenue, cannot even touch it. If there were $500,000,000 in the Treasury, no branch of the executive could touch it until the legislative branch had made it revenue by an appropriation bill. The process of raising revenue is not completed until by appropriation it has been made available for carrying on the Government.

In England the means of taxation and the appropriation of money raised by taxes were both carried in the same bill, and such a bill was always indifferently called "a supply bill", "a bill to raise revenue", "a money bill." The committee of the whole of the House of Commons when moved for that purpose was called the committee on ways and means, hence the name for our House standing Committee on Ways and Means, which in our early history had jurisdiction over both these parts of the same transaction, to wit, tax bills to put money into the Treasury and appropriation bills directing the use of the money raised by the taxing power; that is, making of the inert money in the Treasury Government revenue to be disbursed by the Executive—making it by law available for executive disbursement.

At first, as I have already said, even with us bills generally did both at the same time, but gradually we found need for two committees in the House acting separately, and out of this grew much of the confusion which has resulted in the failure to make the distinction between "raising money" and "raising revenue"—the distinction between money lying inert in the Treasury and money made active and mobile as a governmental revenue. Governmental revenue is money in the Treasury appropriated and placed at the disposal of the Executive for carrying on the Government, with more or less or sometime no specific and detailed direction for its expenditure. The point is that it is not Government revenue until the Executive can use it.

In Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire at the time of the adoption of the Constitution all money bills had to originate in the lower house, and the senate, or upper house, could amend.

In the colonial constitution of Massachusetts the exact language of the Federal Constitution is used, to wit: That the senate "may propose or concur with amendments."

Blackstone defined "money bills" to be "all bills by which money is directed to be raised." Now, mark that language—"money is directed to be raised"—that is, directed to be made alive; directed to cease to be inert; directed to be lifted into the capacity of carrying on the Government.

The House of Lords in 1702, 1708, 1719, 1733, and 1736 disputed as the United States Senate seems to be beginning to dispute here, the power of the House of Commons to originate appropriation bills, and tried, as gentlemen are beginning to try here, to confuse the power of originating tax bills with the power to raise revenue. The Commons always contended that the tax bills and the appropriation bills were part and parcel of the same thing. That contention of the representatives of the people which was successfully carried to a consummation in Great Britain must be carried to the same successful consummation here, or else there is danger of the cessation of all popular control of legislation.

If you will read the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia very carefully, you will find that the whole argument there was whether the Senate should or should not have the right to amend. There never was one moment spent in discussion as to whether the House should or should not have the right to originate. As distinguished a man as George Washington took a very broad position in favor of giving the Senate the right to amend, or, as the Constitution expresses it, to propose and concur in amendments.

In 1856 Mr. Seward, of New York, said: "We make a revenue bill but once in 10 or 12 years, and these appropriation bills are, in fact, what were intended, I suppose, by the framers of the Constitution as bills of revenue." (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 16, pt. 2, p. 954.) He added: "The practice for these 70 years had been that all appropriations of this character" (and by that he means general appropriation bills) "have originated in the House." He furher adds: "The stubborn fact is that the Senate has never originated an appropriation bill" (meaning, of course, a general supply bill) "but has always conceded to the House their origination, and the House of Representatives has never conceded to the Senate the right to originate such bills, but has always insisted upon and has always exercised that right itself." Then further he adds significantly: "The spirit of the Constitution as ascertained from the British Constitution and the extemporaneous debates and from the practice for 70 years is stronger than the letter of the Constitution."

Our Constitution provides that no money shall be taken out of the Treasury except in pursuance of law appropriating it. From this it follows, even if the history of the particular language, "bills to raise revenue", did not demonstrate it, that money is not revenue wherewith to carry on the Government until its expenditure is directed by law; that is, until it is appropriated. No Government "revenue" has been "raised" until after appropriation, because it cannot until then be used by the Executive, who alone can ever use it for carrying on the Government.

Mr. Hammond, who has made out the strongest case ever made against what I am contending for, again confuses the source of revenue with revenue. A tax bill is a source of revenue, but the proceeds of a tax bill are not revenue until rendered available for expenditure by an appropriation. The phrase "No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law" is absolutely of the same meaning as if it had been written, "No money in the Treasury shall be available to the Executive for disbursement as Government revenue but in consequence of appropriations made by law."

Hammond, by a slip of the tongue, which gives him away, uses the phrase "the revenue of the King"—a perfectly accurate expression. Money in the exchequer in England is not revenue at all until it becomes by appropriation "the revenue of the King"; so that the King's government can pay it out, with or without specific direction. Nor does money in our Treasury become revenue of the King, or revenue of the Executive, or revenue for carrying on the Government, or in any governmental sense revenue at all—until it has become in the same way, to wit: By appropriation, the revenue of the Executive. It is the Executive alone in either Government which can disburse money.

In New Jersey, South Carolina, and Virginia, at the time of the Constitution, all money bills must originate in the house of representatives of the State, and could not be even amended in the upper house.

For further study of this question, turn to First Congressional Annals (vol. 1, pp. 592, 593, and 597, and pp. 603, 605, and 617). Turn to the Twenty-second Congressional Debates (vol. XIV, pt. 1, pp. 1152 and 1155 and p. 522), and Forty-first Congressional Debates (3d sess., Appendix, p. 265), both of which are quoted in note 1 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, page 951.

In April 1872, Mr. Dawes, of Massachusetts, reported a resolution citing what occurred in the House on June 25, 1789, during the First Congress, and says: "Madison, Livermore, Gerry, Lawrence, and Tucker contended that the sole right of originating money bills belonged to the House—this was an appropriation bill—but that this clause coerced all appropriation bills, because an appropriation bill was an appropriation of the money raised by the revenue powers of the Government, and therefore was included; and since that time, as we all know, the appropriation bills of the Government and general supply bills have originated uniformly in the House of Representatives, with perhaps a single exception, which I will note later, and which failed to pass." (See Hinds' Precedents, vol. 2, p. 958, where the above is set forth.)

The J. Proctor Knott House resolution on February 2, 1871, had no reference to a general appropriation bill; it concerned a bill to "purchase lots adjoining the new building for Bureau of Printing and Engraving." It was in no sense a supply bill. I cite this because it has been frequently quoted on the other side. But even here the utmost that can be contended is that the House never acted upon the resolution. (See Hinds' Precedents, vol. 2, pp. 971 and 972, top; the views of the minority, ibid., 972, 973.)

Mr. Garfield's language. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 16, pt. 2, p. 954.) Proceedings of the House quoted by Hammond right afterward prove that Garfield was right about what happened in the House, and the proceedings there do not admit of the explanation attempted to be made by Hammond. The distinction was made in what the House did between general appropriation bills, or supply bills, on the one hand, and special appropriation bills on the other.

If the reader will turn to Webster's Dictionary of 1840 and Worcester's Dictionary of 1846, both of them American, he will find that they bear out exactly the opposite contention to that in behalf of which Hammond quotes them, and that in both cases they confine the meaning of the word "revenue" to "income for public use" and "income for the payment of national expenses."

In no event can money in the Treasury become "income for public use"; that is, be available for the Executive for use or become available for "the payment of national expenses", except by force of appropriation. These phrases are right, and money not made available by appropriation "for public use" or "for the payment of national expenses" is not Government revenue. It is simply money lying inert in the Treasury. It belongs to the people, of course, but it cannot be constitutionally used by "the Government."

Mr. President, if the Senate can constitutionally originate general appropriation bills when money is in the Treasury, then it can do the same thing when there is no money in the Treasury; and thus this body, representing the States and not the people—representing chiefly the smaller States—could force either Federal insolvency—not to be thought of—or else could force the House to levy new or additional taxes; thus force the House to originate tax bills. The two things hang together. If this Senate could originate general supply bills, then it could commit the Government to a course of expenditures that would coerce the House not only into originating but into passing tax bills.

As Seward well says, speaking of the long practice under which the House always insisted upon and the Senate always conceded—the right of the House to originate general appropriation bills:

"This (practice) could not have been accidental; it was therefore designed. The design and purpose were those of the contemporaries of the Constitution itself. It evinces their understanding of the subject, which was that bills of a general nature for appropriating of the public money or for laying of taxes or burdens on the people, direct or indirect in their operation, belonged to the province of the House of Representatives." (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 16, pt. 2, p. 959.)

He added:

"If this power be confined to the one and not to the other—that is, to the levying of taxes to get money, but not to its expenditure—then the right is useless, because we change revenue laws so seldom."

This criticism of Seward's is correct, although it was made in view of what occurred later and not of what was in the minds of the framers of the Constitution. I believe it is not too much to say that, in the minds of the framers of the Constitution, a bill to raise revenue was a budget; that is, a bill levying taxes and at the same time appropriating the proceeds of the levy, because such was the contemporaneous practice.

Mr. Sumner, of Massachusetts, said that he regarded the Senate origination of general appropriation bills as "a departure from the spirit of the Constitution." (Ibid.)

Mr. Hinds, in his incomparable work, in a note at the bottom of page 973, volume 2, concerning the question of the right of the House to originate general appropriation or supply bills, says: "But while there has been a dispute as to the theory, there has been no deviation from the practice that the general appropriation bills originate in the House of Representatives." He expressly uses this phrase as contradistinguished from special bills appropriating for single, specific purposes.

It is well to remember in this connection the Hurd resolution of January 13, 1885, which was laid on the table in the House. The fact that it was laid upon the table has been quoted very frequently, but the resolution was directed at Senate bill 398 (the Blair educational bill). It was not a supply bill, but a bill of specific appropriation; not a bill for carrying on the Government any more than a bill making appropriation for a public building would be a bill for carrying on the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7493?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7493) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the amendments reported by the committee will be agreed to en bloc.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am confused about the situation. The bill has been divided into two parts. As I understand, we have before us the bill making appropriations for the nonmilitary activities of the War Department.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct. This bill was the second part, or title II, of the bill passed by the Senate a few days ago.

Mr. McNARY. Why are we not to proceed in the usual manner by having the committee amendments read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If any Senator objects to the adoption of the amendments en bloc, the Senate will proceed in the usual manner.

Mr. McNARY. Have these items been heretofore passed on by the Senate?

Mr. COPELAND. All the amendments, except three, which will be read separately, have heretofore been passed on by the Senate. I ask that those which have heretofore been adopted by the Senate be agreed to en bloc.

The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations were, under the heading "Bureau of Insular Affairs—United States High Commissioner to the Philippine Islands", on page 4, line 18, after the word "expenses" and the comma, to strike out "$140,500" and insert "$152,600"; in line 19, after the word "exceeding", to strike out "$7,800" and insert "$18,000"; in line 24, after the words "rate of", to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$12,000"; in the same line, after the word "and", to strike out "$7,500" and insert "$10,000"; on page 5, line 23, after "sec. 661)" and the semicolon, to strike out "for such works, hereby authorized, as may be necessary for the protection of the town of Collinsville, Ala."; on page 8, line 4, after the word "law" and the comma, to strike out "$30,000,000" and insert "$60,000,000"; on the same page, line 15, after the word "expenses", to insert a colon and the following additional provisos: "Provided further, That the Chief of Engineers, when authorized by the Secretary of War, may enter into construction contracts prior to July 1, 1938, to an amount not in excess of $38,000,000, in addition to the sum herein appropriated, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government payable after the next regular annual appropriation becomes available: And provided further, That if any funds are made available for the above purposes from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937, the appropriation herein made shall be reduced by an amount equal to the sum so made available, but this proviso shall not operate to reduce this appropriation below $30,000,000"; on page 9, line 9, after the word "thereof" and the comma, to strike out "or other responsible local agencies"; on the same page, line 25, before the word "are", to strike out "or other responsible local agencies"; on page 10, line 12, after the figures "$56,300" and the comma, to strike out "$22,500,000" and insert "$45,000,000: Provided, That the Chief of Engineers, when authorized by the Secretary of War, may enter into construction contracts prior to July 1, 1938, to an amount not in excess of $10,000,000, in addition to the sum herein appropriated, and his action in so doing shall be deemed a contractual obligation of the Federal Government payable after the next regular annual appropriation becomes available: Provided further, That if any funds are made available for the above purposes from the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937, the appropriation herein made shall be reduced by an amount equal to the sum so made available, but this proviso shall not operate to reduce this appropriation below $22,500,000"; on page 11, line 6, after "(49 Stat. 1508)" and the comma, to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$300,000"; and on page 12, line 12, under the heading "United States Soldiers' Home", after the word "date", to insert a colon and the following additional proviso: "Provided further, That not to exceed five retired officers of the Regular Army may be assigned to active duty at the United States Soldiers' Home, and such officers while so assigned shall be entitled, notwithstanding any other provisions of law, to the pay and allowances of officers of the same rank and length of service on the active list of the Army", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, namely:

For maintenance and operation of the Panama Canal: Salary of the Governor, $10,000; purchase, inspection, delivery, handling, and storing of materials, supplies, and equipment for issue to all departments of the Panama Canal, the Panama Railroad, other branches of the United States Government, and for authorized sales; payment in lump sums of not exceeding the amounts authorized by the Injury Compensation Act approved September 7, 1916 (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 793), to alien cripples who are now a charge upon the Panama Canal by reason of injuries sustained while employed in the construction of the Panama Canal; in all, $8,519,000, together with all moneys arising from the conduct of business operations authorized by the Panama Canal Act.

For sanitation, quarantine, hospitals, and medical aid and support of the insane and of lepers and aid and support of indigent persons legally within the Canal Zone, including expenses of their deportation when practicable, and the purchase of artificial limbs or other appliances for persons who were injured in the service of the Isthmian Canal Commission or the Panama Canal prior to September 7, 1916, and including additional compensation to any officer of the United States Public Health Service detailed with the Panama Canal as chief quarantine officer, $918,000.

In addition to the foregoing sums there is appropriated for the fiscal year 1938 for expenditures and reinvestment under the several heads of appropriation aforesaid, without being covered into the Treasury of the United States, all moneys received by the Panama Canal from services rendered or materials and supplies furnished to the United States, the Panama Railroad Co., the Canal Zone government, or to their employees, respectively, or to the Panama Government, from hotel and hospital supplies and services; from rentals, wharfage, and like service; from labor, materials, and supplies and other services furnished to vessels other than those passing through the Canal, and to others unable to obtain the same elsewhere; from the sale of scrap and other byproducts of manufacturing and shop operations; from the sale of obsolete and unserviceable materials, supplies, and equipment purchased or acquired for the operation, maintenance, protection, sanitation, and government of the Canal and Canal Zone; and any net profits accruing from such business to the Panama Canal shall annually be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

In addition there is appropriated for the operation, maintenance, and extension of waterworks, sewers, and pavements in the cities of Panama and Colon, during the fiscal year 1938, the necessary portions of such sums as shall be paid as water rentals or directly by the Government of Panama for such expenses.

SEC. 2. Three million dollars of the appropriation "Capital stock, Inland Waterways Corporation" are hereby repealed.

SEC. 3. This act may be cited as the "War Department Civil Appropriation Act, 1938."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York now asks unanimous consent that the committee amendments, with the exception of three, be agreed to en bloc. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendments are agreed to en bloc.

Mr. COPELAND. Now I ask that the three minor amendments of the committee be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 10, line 9, after the parenthesis and the comma, insert:

Including additional flood-control works for the protection of cities and towns on the lower Mississippi River, as recommended to the Congress by the Chief of Engineers and approved by previous acts of Congress.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I did not hear the amendment clearly. Does it refer to projects authorized by the Chief of Engineers or authorized by the Flood Control Act?

Mr. ROBINSON. Let the amendment be restated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will again state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, line 9, after the parenthesis and the comma, it is proposed to insert:

Including additional flood-control works for the protection of cities and towns on the lower Mississippi River, as recommended to the Congress by the Chief of Engineers and approved by previous acts of Congress.

Mr. OVERTON. That is equivalent to an authorization. Should it not read "as authorized by previous acts"?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; "as authorized."

Mr. OVERTON. The language is "and approved by previous acts."

Mr. COPELAND. "And authorized by previous acts." I think that would be better. I ask that the change be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York modifies his amendment, and as modified the clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 10, line 9, after the comma and the parenthesis, it is proposed to insert:

Including additional flood-control works for the protection of cities and towns on the lower Mississippi River, as recommended to the Congress by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by previous acts of Congress.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I do not observe the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] in the Chamber. I wished to ask him whether or not this would involve the expenditure of considerably more money than is presently contemplated by this measure.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that that question was asked the Senator from Tennessee in the committee, and he stated it would not.

Mr. OVERTON. That is what I understood him to say.

Mr. COPELAND. That is the way I understand the matter; that it does not authorize the expenditure of more money, and that the project must take its fate along with other projects on the river.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the committee will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Page 11, line 24, after the word "Home" and the comma, it is proposed by the committee to strike out "including maintenance, repair, and operation of horse-drawn and motor-propelled freight- and passenger-carrying vehicles and the purchase of one motor-propelled vehicle of the station-wagon type at a cost not to exceed $1,000, including the value of a vehicle exchanged,".

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention may have been distracted when the Senator was speaking. How much money does this bill carry conformably to the authorization of the flood-control act of last year?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senate provision carries the $60,000,000 provided in the so-called Copeland Act and the $45,000,000 provided in the Overton Act.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that the appropriation necessary to carry into effect the Overton Act is in the bill which we are now considering.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. The Senate will recall that last year we passed a bill, which we called the Copeland flood-control bill, authorizing the expenditure of $315,000,000. At that time there was a general feeling and understanding that the sum of $50,000,000 would be carried annually in the appropriation bill.

Mr. COPELAND. And that sum was actually placed in the bill as an authorization for last year.

Mr. McNARY. What is the amount of money that will be carried this year as the commitment of the Treasury to carry out the provisions of the bill?

Mr. COPELAND. If the bill is enacted according to the amendments of the Senate, it will provide the $60,000,000 carried in the so-called Copeland bill, and $38,000,000 of contractual obligations, making an ultimate total of $98,000,000. It will include, for the Overton Act, twenty-two and a half million dollars, plus another twenty-two and a half million dollars, making the $45,000,000 it carried and $10,000,000 for contractual obligations.

Mr. McNARY. Are those items carried in the bill now before the Senate?

Mr. COPELAND. Those items are found in the bill as reported. I may say to the Senator that if this appropriation shall prevail, at the end of the next fiscal year we shall be where we would have been had we had the appropriation last year and gone forward at the same rate this year.

Mr. McNARY. Then, in a word, none of these appropriations have passed the House?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes; the House has made appropriation for just half the amount, as I have stated. They will propose a substitute for our amendment which will contemplate, if they can get money from relief funds, the same amount of money this year that we have provided in our amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Then when this bill goes to conference, and the conference report is adopted by the House and Senate, we shall know the exact amount available to carry out the provisions of the Copeland bill?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 17, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 3. The appropriations and authority with respect to appropriations contained herein shall be available from and including July 1, 1937, for the purposes respectively provided in such appropriations and authority. All obligations incurred during the period between June 30, 1937, and the date of the enactment of this act in anticipation of such appropriations and authority are hereby ratified and confirmed if in accordance with the terms thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, line 17, it is proposed to change the section number from "3" to "4."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

If there be no further amendment, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. OVERTON, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. MCADOO, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. MCNARY, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADDITION OF LANDS TO YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5394) to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for, and the addition thereof to, the Yosemite National Park, in the State of California, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to same.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
KEY PITTMAN,
HENRY F. ASHURST,
GERALD P. NYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

RENÉ L. DEROUEN,
J. W. ROBINSON,
FRED L. CRAWFORD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ADAMS. This report is an agreement on the House bill with reference to the purchasing of certain lands in connection with the Yosemite National Park in California. The House receded from its disagreement to the Senate amendment; so the bill stands as passed by the Senate with an amendment.

I move that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 6692. An act making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7726. An act making appropriations for the first half of the month of July 1937, for certain operations of the Federal Government which remain unprovided for on July 1, 1937, through the failure of enactment of the supply bills customarily providing for such operations; and

H. J. Res. 433. Joint resolution making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, for the Civilian Conservation Corps, the railroad retirement account, and other activities, and for other purposes.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 106) to establish the Farmers' Home Corporation, to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, to create a fiscal agent for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry reported a substitute for the original bill in the form of an amendment. In order to expedite parliamentary action on the part of the Senate,

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment to the original bill be agreed to, and that it then be considered as if it were the original bill, so that all amendments thereafter may be made without prejudice.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is a rather unusual request. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to substitute a committee amendment for the Senate bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is a revision of the entire bill. It would be most difficult to deal with the sections of the original bill separately; so I am asking for the adoption of the committee amendment to the bill, and to let that stand as if it were the original bill, so that amendments may be offered without any restriction on account of the substitution.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the same end can be reached by amending the amendment in the nature of a substitute. It is subject to amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, Mr. President; that is what I am asking to have done also. That is included in my request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand it is the purpose of the Senator, after perfecting the language in the committee amendment, to offer that as a substitute for the language of the House bill. The Senator wants to perfect the committee amendment before he offers it as a substitute. Is that correct?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is in some doubt as to the parliamentary situation.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I share in the doubt of the Chair. Has the bill passed the House, and are we acting on a House bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No, Mr. President; this is a Senate bill.

Mr. McNARY. It was favorably reported from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, Mr. President. It is an amendment in the form of a substitute. It is a revision of the entire bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. What has happened is that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has struck out the original bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. And has supplied the Senate with another measure.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Alabama wishes to have the Senate strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the Committee amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, Mr. President; without prejudice.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the desire of the Senator from Alabama that the language then adopted by the Senate shall be regarded as the language of the original bill, so that amendments offered to it will not be in the second degree.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the committee amendment be substituted for the language of Senate bill 106, and that the substitute then be considered subject to amendment as though it were the original text.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in order to keep the record straight, let me say that the language of the amendment reported by the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is subject to amendment, and the original text of the bill is subject to amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am saying that from a parliamentary standpoint the Senate has a right to amend the so-called substitute, to perfect it, anyway.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know whether that is so or not, but I do not want to leave any doubt about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The parliamentary situation is that Senate bill 106 has been reported back to the Senate with a committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, and the committee amendment is now open to amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, before I make a statement about the bill, I wish to present at this time a few clarifying amendments in the nature of corrections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 8 (b), on page 23, line 16, by inserting after the letter (b) the following words: "Except as provided in section 16."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Is it the purpose of the Senator to start to offer amendments without discussing the bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendments I am now offering are merely minor clerical corrections. For instance, here is one correction of a number improperly placed in the bill. I am perfectly willing, if the Senator prefers, to defer offering the amendments until I have made an explanation of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I think we should proceed in an orderly fashion. The Senator is in charge of an important bill, which ought to be discussed, and he should, as he is quite able to do, tell us the difference between the bill that is before the Senate today and the one passed by the Senate in 1935. Then, when the proper time comes, after we have considered the committee amendment, he might offer his clarifying amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well, I am perfectly willing to follow the suggestion of the Senator. The amendments I was offering, however, were merely designed to clarify and correct typographical mistakes. I am perfectly willing to wait, however, and present them in their order.

Mr. President, it is well known that a bill similar to the one now pending was brought before the Senate 2 years ago, and occupied the attention of the Senate for nearly 10 days; in fact, at that time the bill was given about as much consideration and careful thought as almost any bill has been given since I have been a Member of this body. After the bill had been under consideration for some 5 or 6 days it was recommitted to the Senate Committee of Agriculture and Forestry; it was again reported by the committee, and taken up and considered for some days, and, finally, was passed by the Senate and sent to the House. There it remained in the Committee on Agriculture throughout the remainder of the last Congress. The House committee made no report on it, and the House had no opportunity to vote on it.

The bill as it was presented to the Senate 2 years ago carried, in addition to an appropriation of $50,000,000 for immediate use, an authorized bond issue of $1,000,000,000 as a financial program and guaranty of long-range permanent farm-tenancy adjustment.

Owing to the very large amount of money involved—although, of course, this is not an ordinary expenditure but merely an advancement of the credit of the Government—that phase of the bill, on account of the large indebtedness being accumulated against the Government, was the cause of more discussion and more hesitation than any other feature of the bill. Many Senators were reluctant—and I could appreciate, of course, their reluctance, though

I did not share in it—to commit the Government in the beginning of a new program in the large amount of $1,000,000,000. Finally, however, after full consideration, as I have heretofore stated, the Senate, by a vote of 45 to 32, passed that bill and sent it to the House.

The bill as now presented to the Senate is substantially the same as the bill the Senate passed in 1935, with the omission of the bond-issue provision, which caused at that time so much resistance in this body. Now, instead of having $1,000,000,000 obligated to carry out this program, the obligations have been reduced to $10,000,000 for the first year, $25,000,000 for the second year, and $50,000,000 a year thereafter, these being in each instance mere authorizations; so that in the progress of the program, if it shall not be administered according to the viewpoint of Congress, if it fails to bring the results which we hope for, and Congress wants to terminate the program, it will have the opportunity to do so each year as fresh money shall be requested for the administration of the act in the field.

The pending bill when originally presented, both in the House and in the Senate, carried a $50,000,000 authorization for each year. It will probably be recalled that when the President's economy message was sent to the Congress at once a cloud was raised as to the progress of this bill, and what was done with it. For some weeks the authors of the bill in the Senate and the House did not know what to do about proceeding with it, as they did not care to bring on a contest with the administration about the program to which the administration really was committed. We waited, and finally I had an agreement with the President. I am mentioning this because I think Senators are entitled to know the reason for the great reduction in the amount authorized by the pending bill. In that agreement with the President I represented, of course, myself alone, because I had no authority to represent anyone else; but, as the author and sponsor of this bill, and because of my very great anxiety to have some start made upon this great and important program, I agreed that I would ask the Congress to reduce the authorization to $10,000,000 for the first year, $25,000,000 for the second year, and thereafter $50,000,000 a year. We reached that agreement, and it was announced to the public.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. POPE. With reference to the appropriation, the amounts are the same in the House bill, which passed a day or two ago as in this bill except in the House bill the $50,000,000 authorization is limited to the year 1940?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. POPE. And the Senator's bill provides that such an appropriation shall be authorized each year thereafter?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Until the Congress shall stop it. That was the agreement I reached with the President, and was one of the important reasons for abandoning the larger appropriation proposed in the earlier stages of the bill. The bill, as written on that subject, represents the understanding that we reached, so far, of course, as we had the right to reach an understanding.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the Senator prepared to state the differences between the draft of the bill he is now advocating, as reported by the Senate committee, and the House bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; in a general way.

To begin with, I have just stated—and I should like to clear the matter up a little further—that with the elimination of the bond issue provision, and the $50,000,000 appropriation, the substantial provisions of the bill as reported are the same as those contained in the bill finally passed by the Senate 2 years ago. There have been some additions with relation to matters that do not, in fact, go to the real principles involved in the bill. We took the old bill and rewrote it, following it, as far as possible, with some changes, which will be found largely in the administrative features, made necessary by developments since the passage of that bill.

I will now recur to the question of the Senator from Arkansas. It is my purpose to make a very short talk, because I know Members of the Senate at this time are anxious to get away, and I know that nearly all of them are fully informed as to the philosophy of this bill and the essential facts which have made it necessary for the American Congress to take notice of the situation and endeavor in some way to stop the trend toward farm tenancy and to turn the trend in the direction of farm ownership. So I wish to be as brief as possible. I will be glad, of course, to answer any question that any Senator may desire to ask me, because I am not making a prepared speech, but am discussing this bill from the facts and on its philosophy, as I understand it. As occasion may arise during the course of this talk, it will not disturb me at all to have any Senator ask any question he may desire to ask.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. How many farm tenants are there in the United States at the present time?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will give the Senator the exact figures. By the census of 1930 the total number of farms was 6,288,648; the number operated by tenants was 2,664,365, making a percentage of 42.4 percent of all farms that were operated by tenants.

Mr. BORAH. At what rate is farm tenancy increasing in this country?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that, very happily, on the whole, between 1930 and the agricultural census of 1935, there has been a small decrease of about two-tenths percent.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Do not the figures indicate an increase of about 40,000 a year?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator means in number?

Mr. POPE. Yes; in number.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not the figures with respect to the increase in the number of tenants; but let me read, in answer to the Senator from Idaho, a statement issued by the Bureau of the Census, based upon the census of agriculture of 1935:

The Census Bureau points out that while tenants operated 42.1 percent of all farms in the United States on January 1, 1935—

And it will be noted that in 1930 the percentage was 42.4, or three-tenths of a percent higher in 1930 than it was in 1935.

The Census Bureau points out that while tenants operated 42.1 percent of all farms in the United States on January 1, 1935, as compared with 42.4 percent on April 1, 1930, declines in proportion of tenants among the States were recorded only in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, Texas, and New Mexico.

Except in those States named there was an increase in the percentage of tenancy.

In other words, gains in tenancy were recorded in all States outside of the South, with one exception—New Mexico—and also in several of the more northerly States of the South. Considering the 32 States located outside of the South as a group, the proportion of farms operated by tenants raised from 28.5 in 1930 to 30.5 in 1935.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, from whom is the Senator reading?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am reading from a statement issued by the Bureau of the Census, an official document.

Recurring to the question of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as to the essential differences between the Senate bill and the House bill, as I understand the principles involved, the chief outstanding difference is the manner or method of handling in their early stages the transactions with the tenant farmers. The House bill provides for a loan of money to a tenant applicant who selects his own farm. After approval of the applicant by a local committee of three farmers, the process continues. That method of approval is provided for in both bills. The applicant must have approval on the ground, at home, by citizens there who know land values in the community and know the people.

After this examination and approval by a local committee of the applicant, the House bill provides in substance that the Government is to lend the applicant the money to meet the appraised value of the prospective farm. Transfer of title is then to be made to the applicant in a direct way, and the applicant is to execute to the Government a mortgage to secure the money advanced. In short, as contemplated by the House bill, it is a transaction very similar to that carried on by the Federal land bank, except that the lending of the entire purchase money is permitted rather than only 70 percent as is required under the law relating to the Federal land banks.

The Senate bill makes a somewhat different provision in that respect. It authorizes the proposed Farmers' Home Corporation to buy the land, following the approval of a local committee, just as provided in the House bill, and requiring the recommendation of the local committee both as to value of land and applicant. The Senate bill provides further for the appraisal of property, in addition to local appraisal, by expert land appraisers, and their reports are to be filed on each tract and make available to the Congress.

The Senate bill then proposes to permit the corporation, in its judgment, either to permit the transfer of title, taking a mortgage as provided in the House bill, or to hold title for 5 years and execute to the prospective purchaser a contract, a lease, so to speak, for a period up to 5 years, so that the applicant may have the guidance, the supervision, and the assistance of the Government agencies, such as the county agents and others who are prepared to give him helpful advice.

As we know, many tenants do not need any probationary period. There are many tenants in my section of the country who have been operating farms for absentee landlords for a long period of years. Each year the tenant farmer uses his own judgment because each year the landlord is away from the farm. Sometimes in the East the landlord is an insurance company or a loan company or other credit agencies of similar type. It is known, without any theory about it, that many tenants are prepared by experience and are qualified, from the standpoint of character and farming judgment, to step onto a farm of their own and manage it as they have successfully managed farms for their absentee landlords.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Would it divert the able Senator too far if I should ask him to give me information as to the method suggested of returning to the Government the money proposed to be advanced?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be happy to give the Senator that information. I have about completed my statement relative to the differences between the two bills.

The House bill carries an authorization for an appropriation for the purchase of submarginal land, and some provisions as to use of rehabilitation funds under the supervision of the corporation. The Senate bill does not deal with anything except the subject of farm tenancy.

I think these in substance are the principal differences. There are some smaller matters about which I apprehend the two Houses will not have much difficulty in getting together, though there may be some difficulty with reference to the points which I have attempted to explain to the Senate.

With reference to the question of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] as to the return of the money to be advanced by the Government——

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, before the Senator moves on to that point, may I interrupt him?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. NYE. May I ask if the absence from the Senate draft of the bill of a provision for the purchase of submarginal land means that the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is not in favor of continuing that program?

Mr. BANKHEAD. We did not consider that question at all. We considered the subject of farm tenancy as covered by the bill introduced in January and referred to our subcommittee. Unhappily I was absent from the Senate for 2 months. During that time, out of consideration for me, the subcommittee took no action. When I returned we went ahead and worked out a program. We have expressed no judgment upon the question of the purchase of submarginal land.

Personally, when the matter was suggested to me, my thought was and my reply was, though I am not firm about it, that it would be inconsistent and liable to cause a confusion of ideas if it were proposed in one bill to buy worthless land and also to sell to tenant farmers good agricultural land. I was afraid the impression might go out that it was desired to place the tenant farmers upon acquired submarginal land. That is the only objection I ever had to the bill covering that matter, but it was never formally considered or rejected by anybody on the Senate side.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. I am not wholly conversant with the provisions of the bill, as I did not have an opportunity to attend the hearings. Were hearings held on the bill now before us?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No hearings were held at this session. Full hearings were held 2 years ago, and the committee have reported practically the same bill that was considered at that time. We did not regard it necessary to go over the same ground again.

Mr. McNARY. I am speaking of the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This is the same bill, in its essential provisions, as that reported 2 years ago.

Mr. McNARY. I am not criticizing the Senator. I am simply asking a question and seeking information. In answer to the question of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] regarding the purchase of submarginal land, I find no restrictive language in the bill, but the bill provides carte-blanche authority for the board to acquire lands of any kind wherever it desires. The board could purchase submarginal lands, could it not?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is possible; but I say to the Senator frankly we do not contemplate it. Certainly, I know the administration does not contemplate it without an appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. McNARY. Again I say to the Senator I am not criticizing him, but am merely trying to obtain a correct interpretation of the language. On page 25 of the bill, section 10, paragraph (a), having reference to the powers conferred upon the corporation, it is provided that the corporation shall have power—

> To enter into contracts, make loans, and to acquire, by purchase, eminent domain, gift, or otherwise, any real or personal property, or any interest therein.

That is an all-inclusive power to acquire any kind of land which, in the judgment of the board, should be acquired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I submit to the Senator that any administrative officer would consider the declared policy of the bill, and, in administering a farm-tenant program with money authorized for that purpose, would not use the money to buy post-office sites.

Mr. McNARY. That is the Senator's conclusion as to what might possibly occur.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think the bill ought to be reasonably construed. If the Senator wants to limit it to farm purchases, I have no sort of objection, because I know that that is the object, and I know that no administrator accountable to Congress would think of spending the money for some foreign and extraneous purpose.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Of course, in construing the paragraph to which the Senator refers it would be necessary to consider it in connection with other paragraphs of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. That is quite true.

Mr. BLACK. On lines 18, 19, and 20 of page 24 the Corporation is given power to do certain things:

Provided, That any individual farm shall be of such size and fertility and so stocked and equipped as to reasonably indicate returns which will permit the occupants thereof to repay any obligations incurred by them for the purchase thereof.

It would seem that that and other statements in the bill would indicate that it was the object to buy land of sufficient fertility to accomplish the purpose of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the section to which the Senator alludes, section 9, contemplates the establishment of farms, together with buildings, and purchases of livestock and equipment; in other words, to start the farmer out on his venture. That might be wholly dissociated from the broad power given to purchase real estate of any kind.

I am not going to ask for a correction of the language. I am merely trying to arrive at a correct conclusion in view of the question submitted by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. BLACK. I understand that; but if my colleague will yield further——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Section 10, in giving the power, explicitly provides in the first sentence that—

In carrying out the provisions and purposes of this title, the Corporation shall have power—

The purposes of this title are to sell farms of sufficient fertility to assure the repayment of the loans. Therefore it is my idea that if the Board, under this language, should attempt to buy submarginal lands not of sufficient fertility to enable the tenant to make repayment, it would be going beyond the object and purpose of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, it is my judgment that the Board, in its wisdom, in trying to carry out the purposes of the act, would not acquire submarginal lands.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois asked me about the return and the manner of repayment. He has been called from the Chamber; but that subject is, of course, a matter of interest to all of us, and I shall briefly state what is involved in it.

The bill provides for a rate of interest of 3 percent. It provides that the administration may make loans to be amortized over a period not to exceed 60 years.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I make this statement not in criticism; but the rate of interest charged the tenant is much lower than is now charged owners of farms, and much lower than has been charged them during all the years. So a tenant or cropper will actually have an advantage over a present owner, or an owner in past years, so far as obtaining Government funds is concerned.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I recognize that, Mr. President. The rate of interest is not very much lower, however, than that prescribed in the bill we passed a few days ago, reducing the Federal land-bank interest to 3½ per cent. In addition to that suggestion, the interest to be paid to the Federal land banks on the Federal land-bank mortgages is for the purpose of meeting the interest and amortization upon bonds issued by the Federal land banks when they secured the money. In this instance that particular reason does not prevail, because we are going at this business on a pay-as-you-go basis, so to speak. Here the money, of necessity, is taken out of the current funds of the Government, because we do not provide for any continuing credit facilities covered by interest-bearing obligations. We have in mind a type of citizen whose condition must of necessity be considered.

Frankly, I adopted this rate of interest in the bill because of the outstanding pressure to do so. As the Senator from Oregon will remember, when a similar bill was previously before the Senate we put in it a provision that the rate of interest—that was at a time when a bond issue was provided for—should be as low as that at which the Government was able to secure the money. I think that was an equitable program, especially when we were planning to meet the interest maturities and the principal of an outstanding bond issue. In this instance, however, it is proposed to pay small amounts of money out of taxes.

Consider, for instance, another popular program, the C. C. C. There we are paying around $1,000 a year to each of the boys of the C. C. C. We are not collecting any interest. We are simply giving them the opportunity for healthful training that they can get in the Civilian Conservation Corps, and it is costing us more than $300,000,000 a year.

Here is a class of workers who qualify in very much the same group as the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps. They are not all young, as are the enrollees in the conservation camps, but they are all nearly down upon the borderline between self-support and going upon the relief rolls. Many of them at least are in that situation. So it seems to me it is not unfair to give these people the lowest possible rate of interest upon an appropriation which comes directly out of the Treasury.

I think nearly all of us recognize that the time must come when the Government will quit issuing interest-bearing obligations and adjust the income to its outgo. When that time does come, when the Budget is balanced, these appropriations of necessity will be taken into consideration; and they are, as I said a moment ago, upon a pay-as-you-go basis. So it is not helpful to the poor, down-and-out under dogs in agriculture to say that they must be placed upon as high a basis, so far as interest is concerned, as are the farmers who own their own farms.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. The inquiry I made was directed to the fact that under this bill we are giving the tenant a very great advantage over the toiling landlord who has saved his home, paid his taxes all these years to construct schools and roads, and has been a good citizen. There ought to be a plane upon which we would go no higher, and stabilize the Government charge for money. If we are going to give a tenant a rate of 3 percent, we should give the present owner of property a rate of 3 percent. The best we are doing at present is giving him a rate of 3½ percent for 1 year and 4 percent for the next year. During all the years of which the Senator speaks the borrowers have been paying 5 and 6 percent to the land banks. There ought to be some uniformity in the charge for Government funds; and I do not believe that a tenant should pay a lower rate than the struggling landlord who has been a good citizen during all these years.

Now, let me ask the Senator whether the money can be obtained by the Government for 3 percent. If not, where is the loss to be charged—against the Treasury?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think there is any doubt about that. We are not proposing to borrow the money. We are proposing to take it out of taxes.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that; but a great deal of the money the Government uses must be borrowed on the market.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but I have just stated that I hope that day will come to an end before very long.

Mr. McNARY. I hope the day will come when we shall not have to pay any taxes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not think the Senator means that.

Mr. McNARY. Let me ask the Senator another question about the 3-percent interest rate. I use it only in connection with the policy of the land banks, which charge 6 percent, with 1 percent covering the cost of administration, leaving 5 percent to apply on amortization of the capital and on the accruing interest. This proposal has 3 percent as a base. Is any item of administration considered in this connection, or is the cost of that also to be taken out of the Treasury?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is to be taken out of the 3 percent, I assume. As I have just stated, the principal comes out of the tax money as the bill stands now. There is not any doubt about that.

Mr. McNARY. What I want to ascertain is the attitude of the Senator. Is the 3 percent to cover the cost of the money to the Government and the cost of administration?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Not the cost of the money to the Government. I assume that the money will come out of the people through their taxes, chiefly from the income-tax payers, because the income tax is our chief source of revenue.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator made any estimates as to the cost of administration of this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is impossible, I think, for an estimate of the cost to be made in advance. Now I want to make a further statement, and I am very glad indeed the Senator has brought up the matteer. I assume that the Senator wishes to know my attitude, because that is all I can speak of.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; I value it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I say that I am ardently hoping, and I shall with pressure insist, that this program shall be administered at less cost than any other program that has been executed by the present administration.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Just let me finish the sentence. Here is the under dog so far as any measures the present Congress has passed are concerned, except possibly those coming under the relief bills. Here is the poorest group of people, at least, to whom loans have been authorized by our Government. There are local committees which have served without compensation in order to help their fellow men in the counties, and, to save my life, I cannot see any real justification for a top-heavy overhead, either in Washington or in regional offices, and whatever I can do to contribute to that end I shall certainly do all I can to bring about an economical and a cheap administration of this program for the poor farmers of this country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. In connection with the inquiry of the Senator from Oregon as to the low rate of interest, and as to the expenses of administration, let me ask the Senator from Alabama whether it has not been true in every country which has made a success of this kind of a plan—England, Ireland, Denmark, and other countries—that they fixed a low rate of interest, absorbing part of it by the Government, on the ground that it was to the interest of the Nation to carry forward this sort of a program? They did not put it on the cold, hard basis of a rate that was chargeable in commercial transactions. In other words, it is a form of subsidy, and we might as well acknowledge it, just as the Government is subsidizing the merchant marine. Why are we doing that? Because we want a merchant marine. We are subsidizing the farmers because the Government itself has an interest, irrespective of the welfare of the individual farmer who owns a farm; the Government has a paramount interest in getting people back on the land who will own the land and till the land and be stable, and not be in the bread lines, and not be in the picket lines, and not be raising the devil all the time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have a statement here which I ask unanimous consent to have incorporated in the RECORD immediately following my address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. BANKHEAD. The statement gives a list of countries where the farm-tenancy program has had governmental attention, the program going back in some of the countries as far as 70 years. The list gives the rate of interest in each of the countries, and there are some twenty-odd countries in the list. It gives the time allowed to pay for the land, and for the repayment of loans, and I may say that the interest rate varies from 2½ percent to 4½ percent. The time given for amortizing the loans varies from 30 years to 75 years.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I have made some study heretofore of the plan in Denmark, I believe it is, and I think that is the best of the plans. What is the rate of interest in Denmark?

Mr. BANKHEAD. From 3 to 4 percent.

Mr. LOGAN. The program there was started in 1891, I believe.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was started 65 years ago. When the program was started in Ireland, there was 97 percent of tenancy on all farms. I am informed that today the figures are exactly reverse, and there is 97 percent of farm ownership upon the farms.

Mr. LOGAN. I think that is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So there have been wonderful results, both in Denmark and Ireland, and the programs in both countries were based upon the principles involved in the pending bill; that is, Federal credit over a long period of years at a low rate of interest.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Certainly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. With 2,600,000 tenant farms, and only $10,000,000 to initiate the program, it would seem to be manifest that there will be terrific competition for the initial grants. Upon what basis will priorities be granted, in the Senator's judgment, in the initial distribution of this highly limited fund?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, the initial appropriation can do little more than merely bring about demonstrations in different sections of the country of what can be done under the plan. Undoubtedly it provides in the first year simply for setting up an organization, and using it to put as many people as possible under the appropriation upon the farms, to test, as well as may be, how the plan is going to work.

No one has any thought that we can provide Federal credit for every tenant farmer in the country who desires to own a home, because I dare say that more than half of the farm tenants, regardless of their intellectual standards, and regardless of all other considerations, have a longing for homes of their own, for themselves and for their families. I shall not digress at this time to go into the subject of home ownership, its desirability, and its value. Those things are well known to every man intelligent enough to serve in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HALE. I am not very familiar with this type of legislation. In my State there are very few tenant farmers. I think Maine has the lowest percentage among all the States of the Union.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think that is accurate, be it said to the credit of the Senator's State and the citizenship of that State.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the Senator whether it does not seem to him that the proposed legislation is going pretty far when it gives the corporation to be created the right of eminent domain?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Government has that power under nearly all of its organizations. It is not intended that the Government shall go out and take a man's farm, but it is intended to make it possible to clear titles.

Mr. HALE. But it might be used as a means of taking a man's farm.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might be, but such a power never has been so used. There is the power of condemnation not only for the purchase of military posts and post-office sites but for the acquisition of title to land where the land is being overflowed for the development of commerce upon a river. There is the same power in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, and it has been used at times, but never abused. I know from experience and observation in my home town, where I practiced law, and saw, every time the Federal court met there, a long list of condemnation cases upon the court docket, that it was used to clear titles where the Government had caused land to be be overflowed, but where there were absentees, or minors, or defects in the old records. But never, I am sure, was it used to deprive any citizen of his right of ownership or of his property. It is simply to save time. The Government could not get along in river matters without the right of eminent domain.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the Senator has said that the Government already has this right.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It has.

Mr. HALE. Then why reiterate it in this bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It does not have it in matters of this sort. This bill creates a corporation, which is a governmental corporation, just like the Tennessee Valley Authority. The power is specifically given to the corporation in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, and is very consistently exercised, but never to bring about an injustice. It is simply a curative matter, to correct titles, so that the Government may pay people who own the lands which are overflowed.

Mr. HALE. If I had a farm and leased it to a man who happened to like the farm, under the provisions of the pending bill he could go to the corporation set-up, could he not, and ask their help, and they could then acquire the land by eminent domain and turn it over to him?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that I do not intend to go into possibilities——

Mr. HALE. Then, why leave the loophole?

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is no loophole about it. It is provided for a case where it is necessary to clear up titles. The corporation might want to buy a farm, and there might be one minor under a guardianship having an interest; all the adults interested might be favorable to the transaction, as I have often seen, and it would take months and months to go through guardianship proceedings in a probate court to acquire the title of the minor ultimately by public sale. The minor's interest may be acquired and the transaction completed and the minor's right protected by the court, as condemnation proceedings can only go through the courts of our country.

The Secretary of Agriculture will control the corporation, under the language of the bill. It is simply a corporation for convenience in handling titles. I think the Senator upon reflection will not entertain the idea that any Secretary of Agriculture would be used as an instrument of persecution and injustice to anyone through the exercise of the power of condemnation. I do not regard this as an important item in the bill.

Mr. HALE. Then, would the Senator be willing to strike it out?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I am not willing to strike it out, unless the Senate decides to strike it out, because I think on many occasions it will be helpful, just as a similar provision has been in the case of numerous other agencies of the Government. Regardless of who may administer the law, I do not believe the Government will ever abuse such a power, as the Senator from Maine seems to have a suspicion it might do.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator said that the right to exercise the power of eminent domain is provided in the bill wholly because it is necessary to clear titles.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is my idea. I said, in addition, that there might be a minor heir whose title could not be acquired, although there was a large group of adults whose titles were acquired. I do not know whether or not that would be construed as solely to clear titles.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not think that question could arise, because all the States have statutes providing for the conveyance of land, under the supervision of the courts, on behalf of minor heirs, and even unborn heirs. I wish to ask the Senator whether he would not accept an amendment limiting the exercise of the power of eminent domain to instances where it may be found necessary to clear title?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator really has any feeling about it, I will agree that the provision may go out of the bill, though I do not think it ought to go out.

Mr. BAILEY. I have very considerable feeling about giving the United States Government general power of eminent domain. It has, by the Constitution, no title to land outside of the District of Columbia. The titles are in the States, and I am very much concerned that the titles of lands and the tenures in our country shall always be derived from the States, rather than from the Federal Government. I think the Senator will find there a great principle of our whole national life.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not agree with the Senator that the Federal Government cannot acquire title. If it could not, then all the forestry programs would fall; all the national-park programs would fall; all the river improvements and flood-control measures would of necessity fall; all of them would fall if the Government could not acquire title to land.

Mr. BAILEY. What I wish to make clear to the Senate is that the historic tenures of land in the United States are derived, certainly so far as the Original Thirteen States are concerned, from the States. I think it is true with respect to other States. However that may be, it is of very great importance that we shall maintain the land-tenure system of this country as it now is—in the States and not in the Federal Government. We are centralizing everything else. Let us at least not centralize our homes and our tenures.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks a table showing the number of farms, the number operated by tenants according to the census of 1930, and also the number operated by tenants according to the census of 1935.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit B.)

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I call the Senator's attention to the language at the bottom of page 21 and the top of page 22. I read from subsection (h), which gives the Board the power of determining—

> The character and necessity for its expenditures under this act and the manner in which they shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, without regard to the provisions of any other laws governing the expenditure of public funds, and such determinations shall be final and conclusive upon all other officers of the Government.

Does the Senator know of any far-reaching immunity of that character which has been written into any other law?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I can inform the Senator as to that. That provision is copied from the crop-insurance law which the Senate recently passed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator think it is necessary to leave out all audit?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say very frankly that with respect to little details down upon the farm, and where improvements are being made, where they are buying nails here and lumber there, and hiring a carpenter, and all that, my view is that such items should not be inquired into in advance. A detailed statement of such items should not have to be made in advance before the bill goes to the Comptroller's office. A provision sufficiently broad to cover such situations can be incorporated in the measure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not quarrel with that viewpoint at all; but I cannot believe that the Senator would say fundamentally that when we create an independent corporation of this magnitude and give it subsequently enormous funds to administer, we should say they may incur, allow, and pay any bills they see fit, without being responsible to any other auditing authority in the Government. Is that not a broader power than ought to be given them?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that I do not know. I think the corporation ought to have general power with respect to items of detail. I have no objection to the Senator clarifying the provision, but, as I stated a moment ago, that language was taken from the crop-insurance law, a measure recently passed by this body.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. POPE. There was a similar provision in the crop-insurance law passed by the Congress; but there was also a provision in that measure giving to the General Accounting Office and the Comptroller General full power to examine the books, and to make an accounting, and to point out any errors they might find.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course that totally changes the situation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is in this bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator point it out to me? Then I shall be entirely content.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is on page 23, subsection (c).

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Michigan that that is substantially the provision which is in the Crop Insurance Act to which I referred.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The section to which the Senator now refers me requires an audit solely for reports to be made to the Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; it provides for an audit, not a preaudit.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And that is the provision in the Crop Insurance Act?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to make an inquiry for information. A question arising from the colloquy which has taken place is as to whether or not the corporation which is to be created under this measure would have any authority to borrow money; or is the corporation limited to the money which is subscribed by the Treasury, or which is used to purchase the $10,000,000 of stock?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No authority is given to borrow money.

Mr. ADAMS. Is there any obligation on the part of the United States to guarantee or stand behind any obligation the corporation may undertake?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is just like any other organization set up by the Congress. It is dependent upon the appropriations made by Congress.

Mr. ADAMS. Then, as a matter of fact, it is in effect a corporation. Some of the statutes relating to public expenditures would not apply to this corporation—that is, some of those which are waived in the section to which the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] called attention. But that is incidental. I come now to the real question in which I am interested. In view of the fact that no hearings were had at this session, I am wondering what the Senator's view is as to the cost necessary to set up a tenant upon a farm equipped as the statute provides, with necessary animals and implements, so that he may be a going landowner?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The cost varies, of course, in different sections of the country. A tenant can be so set up in the South very much cheaper than in the West and Northwest. That was recognized at the hearings on a similar bill last year. It is recognized now.

Mr. ADAMS. No additional investigation has been made of that particular subject?

Mr. BANKHEAD. None by way of hearings. There have been a great many conferences and discussions and considerable information has been developed; but nothing has been brought forward since that time to change what we all realized then to be true.

Mr. ADAMS. That raises the question as to how many tenants can be taken care of. In the western section of the country I imagine that a man who has been a tenant cannot be set up as a going landowner for less than $5,000 per farm. If that were true throughout the country, the amount herein provided, $10,000,000, would take care of only 2,000 tenant farmers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that in the South, in the section with which I am familiar, I shall be very much disappointed if it costs above $2,000 per tenant farmer. I introduced in the Senate the Subsistence Homestead Act, in which I limited the cost of these little homes to $1,500. The Congress subsequently increased it to $2,000 per home.

Mr. ADAMS. What is disturbing me, and the dilemma in which I fear we shall find ourselves, is that if the amount of money is limited, as it is, to $10,000,000, the number of tenants taken care of will be relatively small. The share of my State would not provide for over 20 to 25 tenants. If we should undertake to appropriate sufficient money to take care of a substantial part of the two and a half million farm tenants, we should go beyond what I think might be the fair capacity of the Government to finance.

That is the dilemma in which we find ourselves, and that is what is bothering me.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That will have to be met, of course, by subsequent Congresses as we proceed with this matter. We are certainly not making any raid upon the Treasury with the present program.

Mr. ADAMS. No; but I am wondering whether or not the amount of money that is to be used now will make a dent in the vast number of cases of tenant farmers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; it will not. Ten million dollars will not. Neither will $25,000,000. Here is a program which, as I pointed out, has been running for sixty-odd years in Denmark.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator regards it rather as an experimental program?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; as a demonstration, to see what can be worked out.

Mr. ADAMS. Let me ask one other question. I notice that there are two or three sections in reference to taxation. Can the Senator give a concise summary of the result? I am thinking of the county where there is farm land now subject to taxation which is taken over. One section of the measure exempts the property of the corporation from taxation, and a subsequent section says that under certain conditions real property is to be taxed.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have an amendment on the subject of taxation which I referred to in my opening remarks, and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] suggested that I delay presenting any amendments until we get further along.

However, let me say as to taxation that while the language of the bill does not aptly express the thought, I intended that there should be no exemption from taxation of any land held by a lessee or a purchaser with a view to becoming the owner of the land; that he should have no special privileges on that point as compared with his neighboring land home owners. That is what the bill will provide if my amendment is adopted, and it will be clarified accordingly. Of course, there is an exemption of the assets and franchise and cash of the corporation, because no Government agency should be subjected to taxation upon the appropriations that Congress makes for the purpose of administering it.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BILBO. In answer to the question asked by the Senator from Colorado, I will say that it is true that we have had no hearings on the bill since the hearings of last year; but since then we have had the benefit of the survey by a tenancy commission appointed by the President, which has made a very elaborate report on the proposal.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is true. We had the benefit of that report.

Mr. President, I shall now bring my discussion to a close. First, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, immediately following the conclusion of my remarks, an extract from the Democratic platform of 1936, and also one from the Republican platform of 1936, bearing upon the subject of tenancy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit C.)

Mr. BANKHEAD. I also desire to have printed immediately following my remarks an extract from a statement by President Roosevelt, made in his campaign speech at Omaha, Nebr., on October 10, 1936, bearing on this subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit D.)

Mr. BANKHEAD. I also ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an excerpt from the President's letter to Secretary Wallace, dated November 16, 1936, relative to the special committee on farm tenancy appointed by him.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I am anxious that we thoroughly examine and report on the most promising ways of developing a land-tenure system which will bring an increased measure of security, opportunity, and well-being to the great group of present and prospective farm tenants. The rapid increase of tenant farmers during the past half century is significant evidence that we have fallen far short of achieving the traditional American ideal of owner-operated farms. The growing insecurity of many classes of farm tenants, frequently associated with soil depletion and declining living standards, presents a challenge to national action which I hope we can meet in a thoroughly constructive manner.

As you know, Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD and Representative MARVIN JONES have manifested a keen interest in this problem and, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, worked actively in behalf of proposed tenancy legislation. It is my desire that the committee consult with them. It will be helpful also to secure the views of other State and National leaders.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an extract from the address of Governor Landon—a campaign address—delivered at Oklahoma City on October 23, 1936, in which he declares for this program.

There being no objection, the extract was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Here in Oklahoma you have been particularly interested in the plans of this administration for solving the growing farm-tenancy problem. This should have been one of the first problems attacked by this administration. But you know that so far it has been talk, not action. In fact this administration has made the tenancy problem worse through its large payments to big landowners. The Republican program would limit such benefits to the family type of farm. It would not help corporation farmers concentrate land ownership still further.

The farm-tenancy problem is one of the most serious long-time problems confronting the Nation. It is more than just a farm problem. It touches every State, every section, and every field of endeavor, and there is no problem that I am more eager to solve.

Our national welfare demands that this situation be corrected. If history teaches us anything, it teaches that the stability of civilization depends upon ownership of the land by the man who works the land. The owner-operated farm is the foundation of a sound agriculture.

It is our pledge to extend, within the limits of sound finance, adequate credit at reasonable rates, to capable tenants and experienced farmers, for the purchase or refinancing of farm homes.

Protection of the family type of farm is the philosophy that runs like a thread through the Republican platform. It is in keeping with the American tradition, which is based upon preserving individual opportunity. And we must preserve that opportunity if our farm boys and girls are to make the farm their homes and farming their life work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire also to have incorporated in the RECORD an extract from a letter of William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, written 2 years ago, referring to the farm-tenancy bill then pending before the Senate.

There being no objection, the extract was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I have given special consideration to the Bankhead bill. We are in hearty accord with this proposed legislation and gladly extend all assistance and help possible in any effort which may be put forth to secure its enactment into law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I wish to read a very brief extract from a statement made by Representative WADSWORTH, of New York, in the House when the farm-tenancy bill was pending there a few days ago. Many members of the Senate are acquainted with Representative WADSWORTH, who was a former Senator in this body, a man of very great ability and of outstanding conservatism. His statement was, indeed, a surprise to many of us on this point. I will read it because it is brief. Mr. WADSWORTH said:

We are starting on a tremendous experiment. It has been with great reluctance that I have been brought to the conclusion that we should start on such an experiment. My inclinations have always been against the Government of the United States taking any part in business or in financing what might be termed "private commercial undertakings", be it upon a farm or in a factory.

But this question of farm tenancy and its underlying problems have become of such immense importance in the life of the Nation, important from its social and political aspects, as well as economic, that reluctantly, as I admit, I have come to the conclusion that the Federal Government should undertake this cure.

Further, I should like to read a statement by Dr. George Foster Peabody 2 years ago, at Warm Springs, Ga. The statement is as follows:

I have no doubt but what this new tenant bill, if passed and properly administered, will help to remake many of our agricultural sections. What we need in America is more home owners and fewer tenants. Change a tenant to a home owner and you plant the seed of stability and permanency. You lift the social, economic, and moral standards of the community. You change indifference to interest and shiftlessness to thrift. In short, you remake both the individual and the community. That is undoubtedly the reason the churches are supporting the measure. They see in it a program of more homes instead of merely places to stop a while. And the home is the backbone of our civilization. It is what the churches and the schools build on, and it is these things that have made America what it is today.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I merely wish to ask from whom the Senator was reading a moment ago?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I was reading from a speech delivered in the House of Representatives by Representative WADSWORTH, formerly a Senator in this body from New York. I read an extract from the speech that he made on Monday last on the farm-tenancy bill which passed the House.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. POPE. With reference to the bill of the Senator from Alabama as compared with the bill as passed by the House, it seems to me that title I of the Senator's bill is preferable to title I of the House bill, for the reason, as the Senator explained, that the Government may purchase the land and sell it to the tenants instead of lending money to the tenant with which to purchase the land. Therefore, it seems to me that that provision of the Senate bill is preferable to the provision of the House bill.

I should like to ask the Senator, however, whether he would consider as an amendment to his bill including title II of the House bill referring to rehabilitation loans? The House provision gives broader powers than are contained in the Senator's bill. As I read it, under the Senator's bill money may be expended by the Government for purchasing the necessary buildings and structures, livestock, equipment, machinery, and furnishing supplies and facilities, while in title II of the House bill authority is given to make loans for the purchase of the items referred to in the bill of the Senator from Alabama and also for refinancing indebtedness and for family subsistence.

It seems to me that it is important to the tenant that the larger powers be given to the board. I think in many cases it is just as important to the tenant that he may be enabled to subsist for a time and that his indebtedness may be compromised and adjusted as it is that he have land on which to live or stock with which to cultivate his land. Therefore, I ask the Senator whether he would consider accepting an amendment giving to the board the powers proposed to be granted in title II of the House bill?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the Senator that I have not given special consideration to the language of the provisions of that portion of the bill. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] raised a question here today about the additional provisions in the bill. The differences, of course, will be in conference between the two Houses.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I should like to ask what was the question propounded by the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Idaho asked me if I would agree to accept the rehabilitation section of the House bill as amended. I told him I had not studied it. I think the rehabilitation program is exceedingly desirable, but I do not like to accept it here on the floor. If the bill goes to conference, we can work it out there, and there may be some changes or adjustments which will be necessary. Senators know how it is in connection with a matter of that kind which is suddenly sprung here. We are going to have to give up something, I presume, anyway, before we get through; but I do not see why the Senator wants to press the suggestion in connection with the bill now before the Senate.

Mr. POPE. I desired to get the Senator's view as to the suggestion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am friendly to rehabilitation, and always have been. I think it is one of the best forms of relief, because it puts the farmers on the farms and lets them work out the advances and when they get the money they pay the loans back in large measure. It is not like the case of relief workers under Mr. Hopkins.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I have only seen this bill today, and I should like to have the Senator inform me as to the meaning of two provisions, one at the bottom of page 25, and the other on page 26. The provision at the bottom of page 25 reads:

> In the acquisition of any real property, the provisions of section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, shall not apply.

Then I make a similar inquiry as to the provision on the middle of page 26, which reads:

> Any lease may be made without regard to the provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat., 412).

I wish to inquire as to what those exemptions relate?

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I recall—of course, it is difficult to remember all the section numbers of the statutes—from the text, the section referred to on page 25 requires generally that the Attorney General pass upon the title of all lands acquired by the Government.

Mr. ADAMS. Does the Senator have recollection of the section on page 26 in reference to leases?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The statute requires wherever the Government leases property that it be advertised. The statute was enacted a few years ago, as I understand, because of the situation affecting post-office leases. The provision in the bill simply eliminates that provision of the statute so far as this bill is concerned, and permits the retention of the leasing provisions of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator with reference to the provision on page 33, making available for the purposes of this act "any unexpended balances of funds allocated to the Secretary of Agriculture for the acquisition of such lands."

I am wondering how much money the Senator feels will be added to the $10,000,000 by making available unexpended balances. We had a discussion a while back as to unexpended balances, and my recollection is that a very large sum of money in unexpended balances is in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture and available for the purchase of land. I am wondering whether the Senator means to add this large sum to the $10,000,000 proposed to be authorized this year?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me say if there is a large sum available in the form of unexpended balances which can be appropriated for the purposes of the pending bill, we might start this bill off with the possibility of having it accomplish something worth while.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to ask a question for information. Under this bill, will the corporation buy the lands itself and then sell them or lease them to the tenant farmers?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; but the theory is that the corporation will only buy them upon the application of the prospective purchaser.

Mr. McKELLAR. The reason I ask that question is that, in my opinion, the proposal to have the Government buy up large areas of land in some given locality and then attempt to move people from other localities to the new locality will be a failure from the beginning. The Resettlement Administration tried that, and, I think, made a failure of it. I have been looking at the section in regard to the functions of county committees, and I am wondering whether they have any real power under this bill. To my mind, the best possible way to select the land would be for the county agent, who, as a rule, is a very competent official—he is, certainly, in my State—to act as "next friend" or, in a sense, as guardian for the prospective purchaser of the land and help him select such a body of land as he could make a living on. I believe that work of that kind should be done locally. I am in the greatest sympathy with efforts to solve the problem of reducing tenancy. It is one of the most important questions facing the country. The enormous number of tenants in this country should make anyone feel that we ought to take some steps to reduce tenancy; but, as I look at this bill, with its enormous set-up and the tremendous expenses that must be attendant on it—and the organization cannot be established without enormous expenditures—there will be very little left of the appropriation in this bill to loan out to the tenants, and tenancy will be reduced but very slightly.

My judgment is that we ought to work through the local authority, and the best local authority to work through is the county agent, who is already, in part, a representative of the United States Government. I believe that some system could be worked out by which the county agent, knowing all the farmers in his district, could be given the power to select the farmers to whom loans might be made.

I can conceive of no more desirable condition of our country than that those engaged in farming should own the lands which they cultivate. Nothing, perhaps, contributes so much to independent citizenship as the ownership of land. A farmer who owns his land will rarely become a Communist or a Socialist or any other kind of improper "ist"; and, in my judgment, an ideal agricultural situation in this country would be for all the farmers to own their farms and have no mortgages on them. In order to accomplish this, no doubt it will take a long time. I doubt if there is any short cut to any such desirable result. I do not believe the scheme followed by the Resettlement Administration will accomplish the purpose.

We must first remember that we are dealing with a situation where the proposed applicant for farm ownership is not able, of his own means, to buy a farm; that his means are necessarily very small; that he perhaps has nothing more than a mule or a horse and a wagon and some farming implements—perhaps not even these. We must assume, because such is the fact, that the house he lives in at present is really unfitted for a man and his family to live in. We must also assume that he has no profession or calling or trade, and that his only knowledge of how to make a living is to make it on the farm. The applicants will almost all be what are known as sharecroppers or tenant farmers.

I would suggest that in each county where farm tenancy or sharecropping exists, the would-be farm owner apply to the county agent of the county to assist him, first in selecting the farm, and then in taking the necessary steps to acquire a farm under the act, and third, to have the county agent assist the applicant by timely advice and directions how to make the best crops on the land purchased.

I would have the applicant and the county agent together select the land which the applicant desires—the applicant so that he himself can be satisfied with his farm, and the county agent to be sure that he selects a farm on which he can make a living and pay the interest plus a small amount of the principal each year.

I would next provide that if there is no house already on the land, the county agent shall assist the farmer in erecting on the farm a home suited to the applicant, or, if a home is already on the farm, the county agent shall advise about the repairs, so as to make it a livable home.

A limitation should provide that the amount to be loaned the applicant should be the sum of about $2,500. That will appear very small to Members of the Senate; and yet, if judiciously handled, a small farm and a comfortable little house could be bought and built for this sum of money. We must remember the applicant's situation, and we ought not to let him undertake the scheme on a basis which cannot be successful.

The Government should lend the farmer $2,500 at not exceeding 3½ percent interest for the purpose of buying a small farm with a house on it, or using a portion of this sum to buy a farm and a portion to build a house, and in addition lend him not exceeding $400 for the purpose of making a crop. In other words, simply to buy him the land and the house, and lend him no money to make a crop, would not avail him much.

In most parts of the country where farm tenancy so largely exists, good land can be bought for some $20 to $30 an acre, and a comfortable farmhouse could be built for $800 to $1,000. The applicant should be not be over 35 years of age, and should be married, and the county agent should vouch for him.

I would provide that the county agent in each county where farm tenancy exists should select not exceeding 10 applicants, and this system should be given a trial.

In other words, I think the scheme should be an enlargement of the emergency crop-loan service already in existence. The reason why this plan is favored is because the class of people who will be benefited by the act are the same tenant farmers or sharecroppers who have been borrowing from the Government through the emergency crop-loan service. We know from experience with this service that those who make these loans pay them back. Even during the depression, they paid back remarkably well; and during the depression we loaned not to a picked few, as is here proposed, but to all those in need.

Incidentally, I want to say in regard to the crop-loan service that no service that was instituted by the Government during the depression aided worthier people or did more good. But for these loans, these people could not have made crops. But for these loans, most of these people would have been on relief. The Government has lost exceedingly little money by the service, and the country has been done a vast good.

So I believe that if this service is enlarged by continuing it, and at the same time by extending it to a limited number of selected farm tenants or sharecroppers, they will thereby be enabled, without any loss at all to the Government, to buy their own farms and homes.

If we are to accomplish anything, we must be practical. We must not go into this matter in a tremendous way in the beginning, with such an enormous Federal bureau as, it seems to me, is proposed to be set up by the bill. I voted for the Senator's previous bill on this subject and shall vote for this bill, for the reason that I am so intensely interested in helping the tenant farmer that I am willing to vote for almost any measure that will even tend to accomplish the purpose. However, it seems to me that, by using Federal officials or in part Federal officials already in existence, the Department of Agriculture could have more money to lend and at very much less expense to the Federal Government.

In my judgment, for instance, in each county in a State we might well have, say, 10 tenants or even 5 tenants to whom loans should be made in keeping with the situation in that county, farm tenants who would be willing and anxious to buy a farm that they would be advised to buy by the man who is more familiar with the farms in the county than is any other man, namely, the county agent. It seems to me we could do a great deal more good with a great deal less money in that way; that we could accomplish more if we did not set up an extensive corporation, but simply require the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize largely the employees he now has available, namely, the county agents.

In the end we have to depend on local people in order to make the program a success. We cannot and should not start a great bureau here in Washington and have the Government acquire enormous areas of land and undertake to relocate farmers from one county or one State in another county or State. The work ought to be done by the local county agents. I am wondering if there would not be some way to amend the bill so that greater powers could be given to local authorities, especially the county agents.

So far as I have been able to learn the county agents, employed in part by the Federal Government and in part by local authorities, are doing a valuable work. Unquestionably they would know, if I, for instance, should be chosen as one of the applicants to receive a loan, whether the land I proposed to buy, with their consent and with their approval, would be land upon which I could make a living. These are practical considerations we must look after and which must be looked after in any legislation. Otherwise, it seems to me we are doomed to failure in our attempt to help the tenant farmer.

There is no doubt that we all want to help the tenant farmer. It is amazing to think that today 2,664,000 out of 6,288,000 farms in the country are operated by tenant farmers.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Tennessee has evidently given a great deal of consideration to this subject.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have thought about it for a long time and have devoted considerable study to the problem.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator arrived at any conclusion as to why farm tenancy is increasing so rapidly in this country in recent years?

Mr. McKELLAR. The depression had a great deal to do with it.

Mr. BORAH. It was growing before the depression came upon the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, it was; and it has been increasing. That is one of the reasons why I think the county agent would be such an important factor in any system we might undertake. The county agent in the first place, is a good farmer. In the next place he knows the farms in his county. In the next place he is ordinarily a man of great common sense; otherwise, he would hardly be a county agent.

Let us take the case of a young man who has been reared on a farm. His father may be a farm tenant. The young man wants to acquire a farm from the Government under this plan. He should have some one to advise him. A youngster might not know what land would produce enough to support him, and his family, if he had one. Even if we could find a committee of local people, just a perfunctory committee of local people in the county, selected with care by the Secretary of Agriculture, we could not attain the desired result, but if we had some paid official of the Government such as the county agent, who is intensely interested in everything that pertains to farming in the particular county, to my mind it would go a long way toward working out the problem of farm tenancy in each county. Certainly it would be the way to begin.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a very difficult task to get men back on the farms, but looking over the last 50 years of experience and consideration the increase in farm tenancy, I think it is much more difficult and a much larger job to keep them on the farms. I do not see anything in the bill that will help to do that.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has evidently thought about the problem. I am sure he has given it considerable attention. I should like to have the Senator's views as to what brought about the tremendous increase in farm tenancy in the United States.

Mr. BORAH. I would not want to enter at length upon that discussion, but let me say that we will have a continued increase in farm tenancy in the country and we will have continued unemployment in the country so long as we live under the monopolistic system which now prevails. So long as private interests fix prices the producers will suffer. He cannot fix prices for the things he sells. Consider, for instance, the question of farm implements. I note that the bill provides that the Government is to buy farm implements for the tenant farmers whom we are endeavoring to help. The prices for farm implements are fixed by a combination or trust. We are going to pay a part of this money into the hands of that combination or trust. Everything which goes on the farm to make it a success, and which will have to go on it in years to come to enable a man to stay on the farm, will be purchased by the man who is trying to hold his farm and must be purchased from someone in private enterprise who fixes the price.

How are we going to keep a man on the farm after we get him there? These men have been on the farm at one time and a great many of them were once successful farmers. They have lost their farms under the same system which prevails in this day, and there is not enough money in the United States Treasury to keep them on the farm under the present system.

Another matter is that the farmer in this country cannot do business and pay the rate of interest which commercial enterprises can pay. It just is not possible in the farming business. While this particular measure would reduce the rate to 3 percent, I believe, of which I do not complain—I think that is perhaps as reasonable as could be established at this time—nevertheless, the farmer is operating generally upon the basis of commercial enterprises of the country with reference to loans, with reference to purchases, with reference to prices, and so forth, but it is not possible in the farming business, and he cannot keep it up.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is one of the things which made me doubt, if a great corporation is formed, with extensive offices here in the city of Washington—in other words, another great bureau established in the District of Columbia with a tremendous set-up of employees, whether it probably would not take for the salaries of the employees fully as much as would be left for the poor farmer under the amount appropriated in this bill; whether the poor farmer would not have very little left in the hands of that bureau to be loaned to him, and if it were loaned, it would be doubtful whether it would be of real benefit to the farm tenant.

I want to say to my good friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], whom I know so well and respect and love—he and I were classmates at college—that I know he is a friend of the farmer if the farmer ever had a friend. I know that he is trying to do a good work that ought to be done, but with the enormous organization proposed, with very little money left to lend to the farmer, and very little local control over the loans which are to be made and over the selection of the tenants who are to be allowed to borrow the money, I am a little doubtful whether the farm tenant really would be helped very much and whether the program which the Senator has in mind would get very far along.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose that under this bill, with $10,000,000, we really shall not get any distance at all in regard to reducing farm tenancy. I look upon the bill as largely preparing for a survey and study of the situation, with what little experiment we can secure with this amount as a help to illustrate what the situation is, and how to deal with it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am going to vote for the bill on that theory. That is the only theory on which I could vote for it.

Mr. BORAH. Since I asked the question earlier in the day I have ascertained that farm tenancy is increasing at the rate of about 40,000 per year. This bill will not stop 2 percent of that. When we face the proposition, and are in actual contact with it, it may help to find a way by which we can remedy the evil; but so far as really reducing farm tenancy is concerned, we cannot hope for it under this bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I desire to reply briefly to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. I am sorry he did not hear my discussion of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I heard most of the Senator's discussion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The administration of this program will be very cheap and economical—the cheapest in all the Government. I desire to call the Senator's attention to section 5, on pages 19 and 20, which shows that the program will be under the direction of the Department of Agriculture, notwithstanding the corporation form. That is a matter of convenience only in passing upon titles, and so forth. The board is to consist of three persons employed in the Department of Agriculture, and they are to draw no additional salary. It is simply the organization of a corporate entity for the purpose of taking title and making leases, and not passing the title to everything to the United States, which requires so many formalities to get title in various deeds and in the foreclosure of mortgages. So the condition is not as the Senator apprehends; and I am glad to reassure him on that point.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suppose the Senator has had an estimate made of the cost of administration of this measure. What does he estimate the cost to be?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No estimate has been made. It is almost impossible to make an estimate in such a matter. There is a very small appropriation, and there will not be much expenditure during the first year.

I want this enterprise decentralized, just as the Senator does, in the counties, as I said earlier in the day. I think the Senator was out of the Chamber at the time. The Senator asked about the county agents. No man is stronger for the county agent than I am. There is no sort of doubt about the whole thing revolving around administration by the county agent. The Senator will note section 21, on page 31. In the first place, that section is not necessary, because the farm agents are under the direction and control of the Secretary of Agriculture. He could use them without any specific authorization; but, as the Senator will note, in subsection (a) of section 21, specific authority is given to use any of the agencies of the Government in administering this measure. If the Senator wants to make the provision more specific, it is agreeable to me; but we shall get into trouble if we undertake to write too many limitations and details into the authorization.

Mr. McKELLAR. Another question arises in my mind. I notice that the bill sets up county committees. I do not know that they are to be paid.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; they are not to be paid.

Mr. McKELLAR. At first they will not be paid, but, of course, in a short time they will be receiving salaries, as everybody does who works for the Government, and probably they should be paid salaries.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It may be advisable.

Mr. McKELLAR. But I suggest to the Senator that if we ever succeed in reducing farm tenancy in this country, in my judgment it will be done through the county agents. The county agents, as a body of men, can do more than anyone else, to advise, first as to the applicant who should be selected. The county agent ought to have the primary right—not the absolute right; his action should be approved later on, of course—to select a certain number of persons in each county who, he believes, if the Government will lend them money, could make a success of buying land and tilling it as its owners.

Unless we adopt such a course, it seems to me we shall run into all kinds of trouble. We must have a man on the ground who is familiar with the local conditions, familiar with the lands, familiar with what they will produce, able to advise the farmer who buys lands whether they will produce enough to support him, and more than that. I do not know whether or not that is taken care of by the bill. It will be necessary not only to buy land for the farmer, but to arrange to lend him three or four hundred dollars with which to make a crop. I think also that the bill should contain a limitation on overhead.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not anything to say to the Senator in opposition to his views. I am standing here fighting for the county agent to have supervision of this matter, and I may have to fight at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. So do not bother about the county agents. They loom big in this picture.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now let me ask the Senator another question. Suppose a young farmer in the Senator's own county should be selected by the county agent or other Government official as a suitable person to whom to make one of these loans. If a loan is made to him just to buy the land itself, that will not do. It will be necessary to provide him with a place of some kind in which to live; and there ought to be some provision, it seems to me, not only for the land but for some kind of a comfortable house in which he may live.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all authorized in the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition to that he must be furnished the money with which to make his crop. Take the case of those who borrow from the seed-loan office in the Senator's State and in my State and in various other States. In our locality they borrow, I think, only about $200. That is all they are allowed to borrow. They are tenants and they borrow $200 with which to make a crop. Incidentally the crop borrowers have paid back something like 95 percent of all the loans that they had ever made; and that was during the depression. It seems to me this bill ought to apply almost first of all to men who have had experience in farming, and who have been able to support themselves and their families during the depression by borrowing small sums from the Government at a low rate of interest. They should be given an opportunity to take advantage of the provisions of this bill, certainly the best ones of them. They should be given a direct opportunity to purchase a small piece of land and farm it with Government money, and then they should be lent enough money with which to make a crop.

If we do that, if we adopt a system of that kind, in my judgment we shall make a success of it; but I am afraid of getting the system top-heavy. There is too much corporation and too many officers and assistant chairmen and all that. I am just calling this matter to the attention of my good friend the Senator from Alabama, who has already done such a wonderful work for the farmers of the country. No Senator here has done any more, and I doubt if anyone has done as much for the farmer, in the time he has been here, as has my distinguished friend and former classmate at college. I am proud of him for the work he has done for the farmer; I take off my hat to him; but I am asking him to look at the matter not from a bureaucratic standpoint but from the practical standpoint of having men who are now tenant farmers financed in such a way that they may own their own homes and farm and pay for them through small payments over a period of years.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM, 1936

We recognize the gravity of the evils of farm tenancy, and we pledge the full cooperation of the Government in the refinancing of farm indebtedness at the lowest possible rates of interest and over a long term of years.

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM, 1936

8. To provide for ample farm credit at rates as low as those enjoyed by other industries, including commodity and livestock loans, and preference in land loans to the farmer acquiring or refinancing a farm as a home.

EXHIBIT D

Excerpt on page 4 of address of the President at Omaha, Nebr., October 10, 1936:

"It is a further part of our long-time farm policy to attack the evil of farm tenancy. In this we have already made a good beginning with lower interest rates and better prices. We are preparing legislation, in cooperation with farm leaders, to submit to the Congress in January to help solve this problem. We cannot, as a Nation, be content until we have reached the ultimate objective of every farm family owning its own farm."

THE STRIKE SITUATION

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to digress from the discussion of the pending bill in order to afford me an opportunity of discussing the strike situation.

Mr. President, a most serious condition confronts us today because of the strikes that have been existing between various industries and certain labor organizations since the beginning of the year. I hesitate to predict what the future has in store for us should these disorders continue to spread, but I venture to say that their continuance will bring misery and more misery to the millions of workers and toilers of our Nation. Perhaps they may lead us into the depths of a greater depression than that of 1929, for they destroy confidence, the lifeblood of business.

It is not my purpose or my desire to argue the cause of either side in these controversies. I merely propose to make a few observations with respect to the more recent disorders.

I have always sympathized with the laboring man. Labor has no doubt been the under dog of industry in the past, and I feel confident that some industries have prospered and grown rich and potent at the expense of distressed and helpless labor. But in the past few years labor has made rapid strides in its efforts to obtain from industry its just reward; and I sincerely believe that as time goes on industry will more willingly agree to share its profits with labor. I believe that a more cordial relationship could be made to exist between capital and labor if only their respective interests and welfare were considered. The fact that some industries may have taken advantage of labor in the past does not give labor the right to strike back now and attempt in turn to take advantage of industry.

In order to achieve the desired results, it is necessary that confidence, fair play, and a willingness to give and take exist between employers and employees.

It was my privilege to participate in the hearings before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads on the resolution introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and amended by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY]. The resolution called for the appointment of a committee to investigate the alleged failure of the Post Office Department to deliver the mails in the strike area in Chicago, Youngstown, and other cities located in Illinois, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, and also as to the cause of the strikes in those areas.

The evidence produced was most astounding, and it clearly demonstrated the futility of the strikes. There was a decided exhibition of a lack of confidence, whether well-founded or not, between the contending parties. I hold no brief for either Mr. Philip Murray, chairman of the steel workers organizing committee and vice president of the United Mine Workers of America, or Mr. T. M. Girdler, chairman of the Republic Steel Corporation, but to my notion, there exists so much bad blood, as it were, between these two gentlemen, that I am unable to state how it would be possible for them to agree on any proposition. They are both stubborn and defiant, and apparently unwilling to trade with each other on common ground.

Mr. Murray was one of the first witnesses to testify as to strike conditions. He was, of course, very anxious to give his version of the situation, and found fault with any Senator on the committee who differed with him. He accused a few Senators of being biased and prejudiced because of their disagreement with his conclusions of the law. He accused me of being a corporation lawyer because, in the course of my examination of him, I asked a question that he interpreted as favoring the Republic Steel Corporation. He took the position that his side was right, and no one could possibly convince him to the contrary.

This organizer of labor admitted that there was no election held among the employees of the Republic Steel Corporation, Youngstown Steel & Tube Corporation, and Inland Steel Corporation, in accordance with the requirements of the Wagner Act. He admitted that the workers at those plants were accorded the same rights and privileges, the identical amount of wages, and worked the same number of hours, with the same pay for overtime, as any other men working in the steel industry were receiving, and the only cause for complaint between his organization and these steel companies was that there was no written agreement between them. He admitted that the written agreement that was proposed did not give to the employees involved any more advantages than they were then enjoying, and, notwithstanding all of these facts and circumstances, the strikes were called by his organization.

Mr. Girdler, of the Republic Steel Corporation, stated there was no written or verbal agreement proposed, that he was paying his men as much as anybody in the business, and that he would under no circumstances sign an agreement with the C. I. O., because he felt that they were irresponsible and that a contract with them would not be worth the paper on which it was written. He later qualified this statement by admitting that he would sign, but only if the last Court in the land would order him to do so.

That, Mr. President, was apparently the cause of the strike. It may have been unwise for Mr. Girdler and his associates not to have signed a written contract, but it was bad judgment, to say the least, on the part of Mr. Murray and his associates to deliberately call a strike and keep men from work. A good deal of the evidence not only showed that there was no election held under the Wagner Act to determine who should be the bargaining agency but the strike was called without the consent of the workmen, many of whom did not know there was a strike until they were met by pickets of the C. I. O. when they returned to work the next day. There was some evidence of violence, intimidation, and lawlessness on the part of the strikers. Several witnesses appeared who testified that the majority of the workers were satisfied with conditions and were anxious and willing to return to work, notwithstanding the testimony of Mr. Murray that over 60 percent of the workers of these steel corporations were members of the C. I. O.

Mr. President, in the wake of these strikes followed violence, more lawlessness, more sorrow, and some bloodshed. Twelve human beings lost their lives, and many more were wounded and trampled upon. Judging from the testimony before our committee, the police of the city of Chicago acted in unison to uphold law and order. Both Captains Mooney and Kilroy testified that they were at the steel plants on the day 10 men were killed. They were in command of about 200 policemen. Both testified under oath that they begged the mob to go home and maintain peace, but notwithstanding their ardent pleas the mob advanced to take possession of the physical property in their charge. It was only when the mob continued to advance and missiles were thrown at their men that pistols were fired. There was some evidence of brutality on the part of policemen. In the conflict some no doubt lost their good judgment, all of which can be expected under the stress of mob violence.

Mr. President, it is sad indeed for men to lose their lives, for women and children to be made widows and orphans, because of the exercise of unpardonably bad judgment on the part of a few labor organizers and agitators. O Mr. President, how much better would it have been had both sides made an earnest effort to follow the law. How simple and easy would it have been for the employees of these steel companies to have organized themselves into a union of their own and have had an election to decide who was to do their collective bargaining.

Once that was done it would have been just as simple to have legally determined whether or not a contract should be in writing. I hope other employers and employees will benefit from these tragic events.

Employees should be guaranteed the right to join any labor union of their own choosing. They should be permitted to organize unions of their own without interference by other unions. Severe penalties should be provided for those who interfere with these rights of free Americans.

I do not concur in the publicized attitude of the so-called Committee for Industrial Organization and its organizers. These leaders are bending every effort to incorporate under their banner every form of labor in this country. What is their purpose? Why should they desire to organize the entire steel industry, all coal miners, all railroad employees, the automotive industry, the textile workers—even the Federal, State, and municipal employees, who should owe allegiance to no one but their Government? In undertaking such a gigantic task, do they really and truly have the interest of the employees at heart, or are they organizing them for their own selfish aggrandizement?

Mr. President, I see danger lurking ahead if such a movement should succeed. I see a crumbling of our democratic form of government and the destruction of the sacred rights of free government, for which our forefathers fought and bled.

Such a stupendous aggregation of workers could paralyze industry overnight. Coercion of labor by organizers and agitators is just as reprehensible as coercion by management, and has no place in our American form of democratic government. Most of you no doubt read of the threat by Mr. Lewis of what would happen should the independent steel companies not bow down to his will. He said, in effect, that he would call a sympathetic strike in other industries. He made no exception as between those which had written contracts and those which had not. His idea, I am certain, was to force a strike even in those plants which had written contracts, all in direct violation of the spirit of the contracts, if not in violation of their written provisions. Suppose he had all of the principal industries under his leadership and he attempted such a procedure! I am sure that Senators realize the consequences.

Our Government has fought and is now engaged in fighting industrial monopolies. Monopolies are powerful—they are inimical to American business. I contend that monopoly in trade-unionism is just as undesirable as monopoly on the management side of industry. Because of the competition which exists in various industries, I cannot conceive that industry could organize itself under one banner, but it may be possible for labor to organize under one management, and for that reason I fear labor monopoly even more than I fear industrial monopoly.

Mr. President, judging from press reports, it would seem that the majority of the employees who were forced to strike have gone back to work. They seem anxious to get back to their jobs, provided protection is afforded them.

Some of these labor agitators are promising more fighting! Some proclaim that they have just begun to fight! How will they fight? Will they use force or will they use legal means? Now is the time for them to display their colors. Some have shown their method of offense by inciting the dynamiting of the main water lines of one of these steel companies, and thereby putting the plant out of commission and throwing some six or seven thousand peaceful breadearners out of work! Do Mr. Lewis and Mr. Murray approve of such cowardly acts? Let them help to apprehend the culprit who is responsible for such lawlessness and expel him from their ranks.

Mr. President, it will be recalled that when the first sit-down strike was in effect at the General Motors plant in Detroit, a Senate resolution was offered which called for an investigation of General Motors. It was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, of which committee I am privileged to be a member. In the midst of the strike a hearing on the resolution was requested, and the committee granted it. A few witnesses were called. I took the position that I did not think the time was opportune for the hearing, because should the Senate show a willingness to take a stand in the strike, one way or the other, it might give rise to a forlorn hope to those at whose instance the hearing was being held, and thereby prolong the strike indefinitely.

Fortunately, further hearings were not had on the pending resolution, the strike was settled, and it is my understanding that no further effort has been made to have hearings on the resolution. I think the Senate acted wisely. I do not believe that either the legislative or executive branches of our Government should definitely side with either party in the present controversy. I sincerely believe that the President acted unwisely when he intimated that the contracts between these parties should have been in writing, and that these steel companies should keep their respective plants closed until the strikes were settled. I know that the President's appeal was made in good faith, but his statement gave the strikers a hope that might have prolonged the strike for many weeks. Few will agree that Miss Perkins acted prudently if she intimated that the representatives of the steel company should be subpenaed and retained in custody until they were forced to sign an agreement. I believe Miss Perkins has denied the statement, but from all reports available, in her zeal to settle the strike she has sided with the strikers, and most assuredly not in compliance with the letter of the law.

The report of the President's Mediations Board contains a clause that might not be conducive to a quick settlement of the strike. Why should the Board even suggest that a contract first be signed between the steel companies and the C. I. O., locked in a safe, and later followed by an election? Should the C. I. O. win, then the contract would be binding; if the C. I. O. lost, then the contract would be destroyed. I believe it would have been better judgment to suggest an election first, and a contract with the winner of the election. If the companies then refused, make out a test case and force them to abide with the law.

Mr. President, to my way of thinking, the President of the United States has been unjustly criticized in several instances, with regard to his authority in some of these strikes. Many felt that he should condemn this side or the other. Why should the President be embroiled on either side, unless he has the power to act? Should he attempt to prevent violence, when he has no authority to act? As I understand the law, Federal troops cannot be mustered out, unless a request comes from the Governor of a sovereign State, and unless it is shown that he is unable to cope with the situation. The President may call Federal troops when the delivery of mails is interfered with, or when interstate traffic is impeded. Some may be of the opinion that the President should have intervened in the instant case, because of the alleged interference with the delivery of mail. It is true that the Post Office Department failed to deliver a certain class of mail during the present strike. From the evidence adduced, I am of the opinion that the Post Office Department acted wisely and within the law.

It was testified that all mail which had ordinarily and customarily been delivered in the past was delivered in the usual way, but when truckloads of bread and packages of clothing were mailed, orders went out to the postmasters to refuse delivery thereof because of the lack of facilities and the endangering of the lives of the carriers. The evidence disclosed the fact that the steel companies, as well as the railroad companies, made several attempts to pass through the picket lines with food and clothing, but all in vain. The railroad tracks were even dynamited. After such attempts, why risk the lives of these Federal Post Office carriers?

Mr. President, I repeat, our Nation is facing a serious crisis. Judging from the newspapers, more strikes are in evidence, and I fear more bloodshed, unless reason and sound judgment guide the parties in interest. I admonish labor to settle their differences peaceably. The Wagner Act should be their guide. I feel confident that through collective bargaining by an agency of their own choosing they can force their employers to treat them fairly and squarely. The law is on their side, as the Wagner Act was held constitutional in every respect. They must not be misled by labor agitators who might, by coercion, intimidation, or otherwise, influence them to join a particular union. They should join unions of their own choice and, by majority, select their own bargaining agency.

Now, as to employers, I plead that they make a serious attempt to end this strife. They must realize that without labor their plants are useless, and in order to get maximum results from labor they must treat them fairly and squarely. If an election is held among their workers under the provisions of the Wagner Act, and a particular agency is named to deal with them, why should they hesitate to put in writing what they agree to do verbally? I say, Mr. President, that to take such a position is but a subterfuge on the part of employer.

Mr. President, again I earnestly call on employers and employees of our various industries to let reason and common sense be their torch; that they overlook these so-called technicalities and be guided by what is just and fair. Both should be willing to face each other with the facts, inspire one another with confidence, and enter into agreements that will redound to their own mutual benefits and for the protection of their loved ones.

FARMERS' HOME CORPORATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 106) to establish the Farmers' Home Corporation, to encourage and promote the ownership of farm homes and to make the possession of such homes more secure, to provide for the general welfare of the United States, to provide additional credit facilities for agricultural development, to create a fiscal agent for the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). The Chair will say to the Senator that an amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is now pending.

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask that my amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 31, in lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out the figures "$10,000,000" and insert the figures "$50,000,000"; and in line 12, to strike out the figures "$25,000,000" and insert "$50,000,000."

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is in the form of a substitute for the House bill, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is an amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama to the substitute measure.

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the pending amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the pending amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In section 8 (b), page 23, line 16, it is proposed to insert, after the letter (b), the following: "Except as provided in section 16."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, the amendment is purely a formal one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, on page 23, line 16, to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I now ask for consideration of the amendment which I have offered and which has already been reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Texas, which is now pending, has been read.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to say that I regard the substitute offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] as much superior to the original House bill, and I am very happy to support the substitute amendment of the Senator from Alabama. Some of the distinguishing features are that under the plan of the Senator from Alabama the Government acquires the title to these lands and then sells them to the tenants under the plan of settlement provided in the bill, whereas under the House bill it is merely a loan proposition to loan the money to the tenant to go out and buy a farm somewhere.

Mr. President, it seems to me that if any sort of farm-tenancy bill, such as that proposed, is to be a success, there must be some correlation between the various projects and the tenants who are occupying these lands. Personally, I think that for some 4 or 5 years there ought to be some supervision. If we are to require the tenants on these properties to comply with soil erosion and other plans of the Department of Agriculture, and if they are to comply with modern methods of terracing and things of that kind, it cannot be done with an isolated farm over here and another on the other side of the county. I rather favor the colonization proposal, at least at the beginning, in order that we may have somewhat of a demonstration project in particular localities.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the benefits of a plan of this kind, if carried out in a scientific manner and in the light of experiences of other countries, are so obvious that it does not require any argumentation. I offer this amendment for the reason that the initial appropriation of $10,000,000 in this bill for the first year will amount to practically nothing. We need not lay our hands to this plow unless we are determined for a long-range program and the expenditure of a large sum of money. By that I do not mean wasting a large sum of money, because every dollar that the Government spends ought to be represented by assets. We are supposed to acquire real estate and property in behalf of the money which is expended but $10,000,000 over the whole United States for an entire year will amount to so little that it will not even afford a demonstration in any of the counties of the United States. So I propose that the first authorization be $50,000,000 instead of $10,000,000, and I hope the Senate will adopt my proposal.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the bill as it came over from the House provides for a sort of skeleton organization. It does not mean to do anything except to keep up the front for another year; just to keep up the pretense that something is going to be done about the problem at some time. If we are going to start this sort of a project, why not start it at least with $50,000,000 for the first year? I am sure that those who have the project at heart favor such an expenditure; but the Bureau of the Budget or somebody else has caused the committees to reduce the initial appropriation to $10,000,000.

The growth of tenancy in the United States has been and continues to be alarming. Statistics available from the Census Bureau——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator was not in the Chamber when I asked the question a while ago, and I should like to have his view of it. What is the cause of the constant increase in farm tenancy in the United States?

Mr. CONNALLY. There are a number of causes. One of the causes is good roads and Ford automobiles. Another cause is that the towns and even the little villages have conveniences of life that are not available out in the country; and many of the farmers want to go to town and either get a job running a streetcar or working for the city or county or somebody else.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Or for the W. P. A.?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Michigan volunteers the W. P. A. Some of them are on the W. P. A. rolls, no doubt; and, of course, when they are driven off the farm for any reason they are going to go to town and get on the W. P. A. rolls or any other rolls they can get on whereby they can secure money with which to live. One reason, I will be frank to say to the Senator from Idaho, is the restriction of agricultural production. That has increased tenancy somewhat—that is, at least it has increased the migration from the country to the town—because when men are thrown out of employment in the country there is nowhere else to go, and no more inviting place than the town.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator think that the program permitting the importation of agricultural products from low-cost countries will increase farm tenancy in the United States? Does the Senator believe that the farmer of this country can prosper in competition with the agricultural producers of countries where farm labor is paid one-half, or in some instances one-fourth of what the farmer must pay in this country?

Mr. CONNALLY. I agree with the Senator and I do not have any sympathy with some of the so-called trade agreements the State Department has been making for the admission of agricultural products into the United States from foreign countries so that we can sell more automobiles to them. I am not in sympathy with that character of trade agreement. The Senator is correct that whenever we permit the importation of agricultural commodities which we can produce here at home we are contributing to the increase of farm tenancy.

(At this point Mr. CONNALLY yielded to Mr. GEORGE, who briefly addressed the Senate and requested that an editorial be printed in the RECORD. Mr. GEORGE's remarks and the editorial appear at the conclusion of Mr. CONNALLY's speech, p. 6681.)

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is correct in that there will always be some tenants, but there are many tenants today who if they could become home owners would undertake to pay for their farms and become owners. There are throughout the United States thousands of tenants who were once farm owners. Some of the reasons for their now being tenants are the heavy load of debt, the high interest rate, the high cost of industrial products, lack of markets which are easily accessible for their own products, and lack of the right kind of credit. Too much credit to some folk is just as bad as no credit, because they overbuy, they overload, and they cannot pay out. Easy credit in many cases has been the cause of making tenants of those who otherwise would be land owners.

But, Mr. President, the statistics reveal that in Alabama 64½ percent of the farms of the State are operated by tenants. In my own State of Texas the latest statistics show that 67½ percent of the farms were operated by tenants, and my State is a comparatively new State. Such a condition ought not to exist.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. That condition reaches back for many years. It is not a thing of recent growth in the last 5 or 6 years, is it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. BORAH. Farm tenancy, according to my reading, has been increasing very rapidly since about 1870.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true.

Mr. BORAH. And, in my opinion, it will continue to increase under our present economic system. If the farmer must sell in a competitive market and buy in a market where there is no competition, where private interests fix prices, I venture to prophesy farm tenancy will increase regardless of anything we may do by legislation such as we are now considering.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Idaho is correct. The statistics show that over a long period of years there has been a gradual increase in the percentage of farms operated by tenants.

There are those who do not want to become landowners. I have heard tenants say that it was cheaper for them to rent than it was to buy a home. Of course, it is not so in the long run. A tenant who holds such a view overlooks the value of having a home; he overlooks the value of having a fixed place of residence and gathering about him his household gods and establishing a home from which his children may draw inspiration and which gives substance to the civic fiber of the whole community. He is looking simply at the pocketbook, and that is not a sound philosophy. One of the purposes of the pending bill is to cause the Government, the Nation, for all the people of the United States have an interest in the solution of the problem, to take steps to get men back to the land, so that each one may have a place which he can own and hold, not under feudalistic title from anybody but from the sovereignty of the Government itself, and from which he can look the world in the face and not be disturbed by waves of industrial and economic unrest. It can be done, Mr. President. With a farm of 10 to 40 acres in any State of this Union that is at all productive, a man with a family can earn a livelihood, whether he makes any cash money or not.

I had an experience which I should like to relate to the Senate. Some years ago I saved a few dollars and had a friend of mine loan the money on security that I never saw and never knew anything about, but I had faith in my friend. So he loaned it on some little farms. Finally the owner of one of the farms moved off and left it. Then the depression came along and pretty nearly extinguished the farm. So last year I happened to be in the county where the land was supposed to be located and thought I had better go down and find my farm. I found a little road running through a rocky pasture, and as I drove on down this rocky road through the pasture I saw several cattle. My grasses were the sustenance of the farmer's cattle.

All the rent I was to get was to be derived from the production of cotton. I saw the fat cattle, and milk cans on the side of the road, awaiting the man who comes from town every day to collect the milk. I drove on down, and as I approached the barn a flock of fat turkeys flew out and almost made the sun go into eclipse. There were also many chickens scattering around the barn and half a dozen big, fat hogs, grunting all about the lot. The farmer's wife came out from the little shack on the place, and I asked, "Where is your husband?" She replied, "He is over to town at the football game." I asked, "How much cotton did you make?" The cotton was all I was interested in from an income standpoint. She replied, "We made one bale." I got $15, and the man on that land got a living off that little, old, rocky, sorry farm, but he was getting it because he had turkeys and cows and pigs and cattle and stuff to feed them, and grass and milo maize, and all that sort of thing. He was making a good, comfortable living off that sorry old farm. That, Mr. President, is what can be done all over this country. Men farming in that way will not make any money; they will not be able to buy stocks and bonds; but they will make a livelihood; and a man on a piece of land such as that cannot be starved to death unless he wants to starve to death.

We hear much about strikes. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] made a very instructive and entertaining speech in regard to industrial unrest.

If we can get some of those folks back on the farm who were there at one time, or if we can get some new ones there, we will not have industrial unrest at least in those sections. The people would be more happy and more contented.

I do not regard this as necessarily a wasteful subsidy. It is a subsidy in a way, because if we give these purchasers a rate of interest below what the Government pays to get the money, to that extent it is a subsidy, but it is a subsidy because the national interests justify the subsidy.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. My attention was diverted. What did the Senator do with reference to his renter?

Mr. CONNALLY. I took the money and paid part of the taxes, and took some more and paid the rest of the taxes. [Laughter.] I sold the place, or rather, I practically gave it away shortly after that because I did not see how the landlord was going to make anything out of a situation like that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator made a mistake in not requiring that he should be given a portion of the turkeys, hogs, and cattle as a part of his rental.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I had done that I would have violated all ethics of landlord and tenant relationship. [Laughter.] The Senator from Texas is too wise to do anything like that. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, this is a problem which has been largely solved in some other countries. We all remember the tragic story of land in Ireland. The problem has been largely solved in Ireland. There are thousands and thousands of Irish today on their own farms. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and I were in Ireland in 1930. We rode out over the countryside in that land.

Some of the most prosperous farmers in the world live in south Ireland. England had a long and bitter struggle, but the Irish Government came along and worked out a plan whereby they made it possible for the Irish tenant to become an Irish landlord or landowner.

I am told that in Denmark, which was once a land of tenants, with practically all the farmers tenants, they have worked out a system such as is contemplated in the pending bill, with low-interest rates and Government supervision, until today Denmark is a land of home owners, a prosperous land.

We will not solve this problem in a moment, we will not solve it next year nor perhaps in 10 years, but if we go about it and learn something by experience we will ultimately solve it. We will waste some money in doing it. Let us not fool ourselves about that. We waste money every time we experiment and every time we make a mistake.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. What the Senator said about Ireland and Denmark is largely true of many parts of Europe. I happened last year to be traveling through Austria and Hungary. I was interested in the agricultural problem there. I was interested in the proportion of ownership of the land in cultivation by those who lived on it and cultivated it. I was amazed when I was told by one of the ablest men I have ever met in Europe, the Minister of Justice of Hungary, that more than 60 percent of the land cultivated in Hungary—and about the same proportion prevails in Austria—is owned by those who cultivate it and live upon it.

I was interested also to know the average size of farms cultivated by those farmers, or as they call them over there, peasants. I was told that, outside of the large landed estates some of which are still left, the average number of acres owned by each farmer was only a little more than three and that on those three acres of land, by the most intensive form of cultivation, those farmers were able to make a fairly good living for themselves, produce a surplus which they might sell and out of which they might enjoy some of the things which they themselves do not produce.

Of course, as the Senator from Texas will realize, in any country where population has increased to such an extent that every acre of land must support infinitely more people than in this country, they have learned that lesson after long and bitter experience, but we are coming to the time in the United States when we must learn the lesson also. While it may be that the large land owner 20, or 30, or 40 acres looks like a mere pittance in the way of a farm, I agree with the Senator from Texas that by industry, hard work, and frugality, a man can make an adequate living upon a farm of that size if it is reasonably fertile and if it is cared for and worked as we are going to have to work and care for our land.

I am in sympathy with the Senator and with the objects of the bill.

Mr, CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for his very illuminating illustration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question in the time of the Senator from Texas?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. To what extent have the cooperative systems advanced in the countries of which the Senator has been speaking, where the farmers buy through a cooperative system which is not limited to the number of products which they have to sell, but covers the entire field of what they have to buy as well as what they have to sell?

Mr. BARKLEY. The cooperative system in many of the countries of Europe has gone far beyond what we have ever contemplated in this country, not only with reference to control of production and marketing and prices of farm products, but including what they purchase from others, so that it works both ways. They are able to dovetail the sale and purchase of things grown upon and those necessary to the operation of the farm to a much greater extent and in a much more effective way than the farmers of this country have ever been able to do.

Mr. BORAH. They can protect themselves in their selling and in their buying both?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is correct.

Mr. BORAH. But under our system at the present time there is no way by which the farmer can protect himself as to that which he buys and there is a very limited way by which he can protect himself in what he sells.

Mr. BARKLEY. One of the difficulties is the magnitude of our country. In smaller countries it is much easier to bring about a close cooperative system than it is in a country 3,000 miles one way and half that distance the other way, with all sorts of varied conditions. It is more difficult here to bring about a nation-wide system of cooperation among farmers, either in selling or in the purchase of commodities, than it is in smaller countries in the older sections of the world.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me suggest to the Senator from Idaho and to the Senator from Kentucky also that it is not so much the size of the country after all as it is the fact that in countries where the population is dense and the communities are closely knit it is much more simple to have cooperative associations. For instance, in Europe they have the village system. The farmers do not live on isolated farms, but all live in the village and farm out from the village. Their social and communal life is more highly developed than it is among the agricultural people of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Is it not also true that the living which they make upon the farm is very much lower than the standard of living in this country?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is. They do not live as well as our farmers. On many of the farms in Europe they consume the food that in a sense is not marketable. They cull over their vegetables and fruits and use the culls themselves at home and sell that which is more salable.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition, it is also true that the methods of farming, even in the most prosperous sections of Europe, are extremely primitive. One can go along on an electrified railroad, traveling at the rate of 60 or 65 or even 70 miles an hour, through a beautiful farming country, and alongside the track he will see men and women cutting their wheat with a scythe or with an old-fashioned wheat cradle. Of course, the smallness of their farms makes it impossible for any individual farmer to invest enough money to buy modern machinery, and as a result, except where they have the great cooperative organizations, they cannot afford to invest in farm machinery. Instead of tractors one will see ox teams pulling plows and can even see wheat being threshed in the old-fashioned way which our grandfathers used.

Of course, we hope our agricultural tenancy will never become so low as to make it impossible for our farmers to invest in modern machinery, but the mere fact that the countries have become densely populated, that every acre of land must support more people, that every clod of dirt must be made to work as is done in the older countries of Europe, instead of allowing it to wash down the streams into the sea as we are doing in large sections of our country, brings about automatically the necessity for every man to devote himself almost without restriction to the cultivation of his little share of the earth's surface, and, of course, that itself robs him of many pleasures which we think fundamentally necessary in the enjoyment of life in the United States.

But the thing we ought to guard against in all our legislative program, it seems to me, is the coming of the day when our farmers will have so to restrict themselves, not only in acreage but in methods of cultivation, that they cannot continue to progress and move forward as we have always been proud to feel that our agriculturists could do.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank Senators for these contributions.

France is a good illustration of a very successful agricultural country. Probably there is a larger percentage of home ownership in France than in any other great country of Europe. Most of the farms, at least in the section of France which I have visited, are very small. In Brittany, up in the northern part of France, the fences are usually mud fences, with grass and other vegetation growing over them, and a farm contains only a few acres; but there are a great many fat cattle there, and all that sort of thing, and the people there make a living on only a few acres because of the intensive cultivation; and they are economical. They do not live as well as our farmers in America live. Referring to what the Senator said about plowing with oxen, and the tractor, they can raise oxen but they cannot raise tractors. The result is that they do not have to pay for tractors; they do not have to pay for gasoline.

Mr. BARKLEY. They also have the patience to use the oxen after they raise them.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I can quite sympathize with the Senator in what he has said about the success of small farms in other countries. I have visited the Holy Land, and I have seen farmers there make a living off 2 acres of ground; but that cannot be done in the United States.

I am going to vote for this bill, but I have no delusions about it. I could give a farmer 20 acres of the best land I have in my farm, and build him a house, and give him a plow and a horse and a cow, and he might possibly get enough off those acres to keep his family from starvation; but he would have no cash to spend, and he would not have enough money to pay his taxes.

This bill is all right as an experiment, and I hope it may prove valuable; but I am not fooling myself a bit. I was born on a farm and brought up in the country. I know the conditions that surround American farmers. In my section of the country it is impossible to put a man on one of these small farms and have him succeed. It may be done elsewhere if he can specialize. If he can raise berries or eggs or vegetables, if he can specialize in something for which there is a local demand, he may make some money; but the ordinary, everyday farmer who is just hitting the line cannot make a living in my section of the world from 25 or 30 acres.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, of course, I am not familiar with farming in New York State. Farming is a hard life anywhere. There is no doubt of that. The returns compared to what is put into a farm are very small; but the fact that the conditions on the farm are already hard is no reason why we should not undertake to lessen their rigor if we can. I am sure the Senator from New York will agree that if a man is going to farm, he ought, if possible, to own the land that he is farming on, rather than be a liege tenant of some landlord.

Mr. COPELAND. I fully agree to that. I have already assured the Senator that I am going to vote for the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. But I am not deluding myself. I feel that this experiment is bound to end in heartaches and disappointments for most of those who take advantage of the provisions of the bill. There may be some who, by reason of favorable location, access to markets or to cooperatives, may make good; but I do not believe the millennium will dawn when this act takes effect.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have already suggested that no one need think that under this bill he is going to get rich, or be able to operate on the stock market. Of course not; but those who take advantage of its provisions are going to be better off than they are now. If by any hook or crook they can acquire an interest, if it is only in 10 acres of land, they are better off than if they do not have 1 acre of land. They have a place to shelter them from the storm; they have a place where they cannot be run out by the sheriff; they cannot be ousted by the tax collector or ousted by the landlord.

Mr. President, I do not wish to consume the time of the Senate, but I do desire to impress upon Senators the necessity for increasing this initial appropriation over the $10,000,000 figure set in the bill. I will say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in answer to a question he asked awhile ago, that tenancy in Texas has increased from 37.6 percent in 1880 to 57 percent in 1935. I think probably those figures are fairly reflective of the trend in other Southern States. Tenants now operate 57 percent of all farms in Texas, 54 percent of all harvested cropland, 30 percent of all farm land, and the farms operated by tenants include 40 percent of the value of all Texas farms. The land operated by tenants, excluding the big farms, represents 40 percent of the entire value of all the farms in my State.

Along with the increase of tenancy has also come an increase in the percentage of mortgage indebtedness of those who actually own farms. They go hand in hand. Statistics reveal that farmers who operate their own land for an equity amount to only 33 percent of the value of all Texas farm land. From 1900 to 1930 the percent of owner-operated farms that were mortgaged increased from 22 to 40 percent. The deflations in values which occurred during the depression show how shadowy and uncertain is an equity in high-priced land covered by a mortgage.

Mr. President, my view of a plan for dealing with farm tenantry involves five points:

First. As is provided for in the bill of the Senator from Alabama, provide for the Government to acquire and sell to experienced and industrious farm tenants farms of sufficient acreage to support a family, but not of such size as to place too great a burden of debt upon the purchaser. In other words, none of these farms ought to be sold to a tenant until he can convince a local committee that he is already a successful tenant farmer, that he has had experience, that he is honest, and that he is frugal, because it will not do any good to put a man on one of these farms who either does not know how to farm or who is too lazy to farm. So we should select the very cream of the class of tenants who seek this aid.

Second. Of course, the plan must provide cheap credit and amortization over a sufficient period of years whereby the tenant may become the owner, and be able to meet his payments, as well as the support of his family, out of the land itself. That is a justification for the 3-percent interest rate. It is somewhat in the form of a slight subsidy, but the subsidy is justified because of the national interest in getting these men back on the farm and in building up the civic fabric.

Third. The plan should tie into other farm plans for the conservation and scientific cultivation of the soil. Every tenant who acquires one of these farms should be made to comply with soil-conservation plans, and to submit to leadership and direction in farm economics and in the diversification of his crops, and not except to make a living out of one isolated crop, such as cotton.

Mr. President, the fourth point perhaps will not meet with the favor of some Senators; but I believe that for a period of years a certain degree of supervision over the tenants may be desirable toward stimulating diversification and the scientific utilization of land resources.

Fifth. A cardinal feature should be making the farm a home and not a mere wagon yard; not a place to stop for the night and then move on to another home.

Mr. President, such a program envisions over a long period of years, a stabilized agriculture and a stabilized citizenship. As I have already suggested, Great Britain and Denmark and Ireland have made great advances in this field; and the United States can make advances if we give the matter attention and scientific study and experimentation.

The appropriation for the first year is inadequate. The amendment I have offered provides for an appropriation of $50,000,000 for the first and succeeding years. The Government ought to lay out a plan for the expenditure over a period of years of a billion dollars. Now, do not gasp. That money will represent assets. It will not be wasted. The problem is too big, too gigantic, to be solved by piecemeal methods. It is an investment. The Government will own the assets which represent the money expended. Ultimately, we hope, it will be returned. Ultimately, the purchasers will become home owners. This is the great objective. That is the justification for this program. It is one of the most fundamental problems of America.

At the moment the United States is staggered by industrial and labor clashes. Here lies the pathway to economic and social security for those who till the soil of America. Here lies the pathway to a stabilized agriculture, and to a stiffening and toughening of the civic fiber of this Republic.

I hope very much that the Senate will adopt the amendment, which will give assurance to those who are interested in this program that we are serious about it, that we are not simply playing to their imagination in appropriating only $10,000,000 for a program for a whole year all over the United States, but that we mean to go through and pledge $50,000,000 each year, I hope for a period of at least 20 years, so that the people of this country may know that we are making a serious endeavor and an earnest effort to solve this very important and compelling problem.

During the delivery of Mr. CONNALLY's speech,

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the body of the RECORD itself an editorial or article appearing in the Lavonia Times, a weekly newspaper published at Lavonia, Ga., entitled "Love Your Land—It's the Source of All Wealth." It is a worth-while editorial expression and not without some pertinency to the general question involved in the debate now proceeding.
